The answer of John: If you have transgressed a commandment received by you form the saints, you won't allow yourself to be troubled, neither will you despair so that you to no longer take heed at that commandment. This is for you should remember him who rightly said that "fall for seven times a day, and he rises up" (Prov. 24: 16), and remember our Lord Who told to Peter: "For seventy times seven you must forgive your brother" (Mt. 18: 22). So, if the people have received the commandment o forgive thus, how much more will Him forgive, for He is rich in mercy and He is supra-victorious upon all things by mercies[701]? He who shouts out, daily, through the prophet: "Turn back to Me and I will turn back to you. For I Ame merciful" (Joel 2: 13; Zac. 1: 3), and: "And now Israel" (The Second Law 10: 12). But take heed, lest by hearing that the commandment won't be abolished, you to get idle and to reach into indifference. This is for this thing will be a burden to you. And you mustn't despise the commandment even in the unimportant things. Even if it has happened to you to disregard these ones, you will strive to correct yourself. This is because out of such indifference somebody can reach into big mistakes.

372. The question of the same one: My thought whispers to me that I should not ask the saints lets, by receiving an answer and by disregarding than answer because of my weakness, I to mistake.

The answer of John: This thought is scary. Do not allow it. Actually, if somebody commits sin knowingly, he will condemn on himself. And if one mistakes because of his [701] We are narrowed because of our pride; we are narrowed in our merci to forgive all the way to the end. God isn't limited by this narrowing. The man feels the need for self-affirmation by searching for a superiority. And the man does that often by reckoning another in inferiority, by cogitating at that one's weakness and mistakes. But God can give the man another superiority: it is that one towards the own superiority which the man is kept in by his conscience about his sin in front of God. God can make everyone, by forgiveness, to enjoy the broadness of His generosity and the freedom from the narrowing of their sins. God can make the people victorious over this narrowing, out of the power of the full freedom and out of the unlimited richness of His generosity.

nescience, he won't ever be condemned. But his passions will remain unhealed. That's why the devil instills this thought to somebody in order that one's passions to remain unhealed[702]. So, when your thought whispers to you that you cannot fulfill the answer because of your weakness, as the Father thus: "Tell me, Father, what is useful to me? This is because I know that if you tell me, I cannot keep that what you tell me. But I want to ask even only for despising myself that I overlooked what is beneficial to me". And by that you will at least gain your humbleness[703]. May the Lord guard your heart through the prayers of the saints. Amen.

373. The question of somebody else: Some other brother asked the same Oldman, saying: What is "the science with a liar name" (1 Tim. 6: 20)?

The answer of John: The "science with a liar name" consists of trusting your thought, regarding a certain thing. And if somebody wants to be delivered of that science with a liar name, let him not trust his thought but him to ask an Oldman. And if the Oldman answers him and the answer will be as the brother thought, neither then must the brother will trust his thought, but let him say: "The devils mocked me, in order I to trust my thought that I have the true knowledge, and by believing so, I to be carried by them into other fallings. And the Oldman told the truth for he speak from God and he is not the [702] Under the willing nescience there is hidden a big cunningness. I do not ask about what I owed to avoid and about what I must fulfill, because of knowing that if I commit sins while now knowing what must I avoid of do, I won't be punished. And by doing so, I am, on one hand, tormented by the conscience of my sins, but on the other hand by that those will become difficult to be healed passions.

[703] It is better for you to know what you owe to do, even though you know that you won't be able to do that. But not keeping the commandment should be to you not because you disregard that commandment but because of your real helplessness. This is for, itself the torment for knowing what you should do but you cannot do that, it will be continuously humbling and it will maintain within you a continuous struggle for gradually ascending yourself above your helplessness. It is better the torment of the self-reproaching because of what you cannot do, than the insensitive indifference. In this too, there is a means for sensitization and humanization.

toy of the devils"[704]. I have told my brother as I has thought. But I do not know if it is so[705]. Pray for me.

374. The question of somebody else: Some other brother told to the same Oldman: When I am burdened by thoughts and I pray the Fathers to pray for me and I hear the things they tell to me, my soul gets immediately rested. How should I understand this?

The answer of John: When the ship reached to be the toy of the waves, if that ship has a helmsman, that one by the wisdom given him by God, he will escape that ship and the traveler will get gladdened by that escape. Likewise, reminding about his doctor will gladden not less the patient, especially the memory of the doctor's skillfulness. And he who is endangered in his travel, won't him be strengthened by hearing the voice of the guards and especially by seeing them? And if these things are so, how much more joy will produce the answer of the Fathers to anyone who hears it? And this will be especially when the answer is mixed with the perseverant prayer towards God Who said: "Pray one for another in order you to get healed" (Jas. 5: 16). And when they, by impropriating the illness of their limb, they shout out towards Jesus Who is their Master, saying with all sweet tears: "Master, have mercy on us because we are perishing" (Lk. 8: 24; Mt. 8: 25), how could this not bring joy him who hears that "much can the working prayer of the righteous" (Jas. 5: 16)? Let's therefore burden ourselves by calling them to pray for us. This is for even if we are worthless, [704] Even if the Oldman confirms what I have felt, I haven't been right when I have reckoned that that thought has been born within me by myself. If I did that I would fall under the mockery of the devils. This is because, if I saw in the Oldman's confirmation of my thought, a strengthening of my opinion that that thought belonged to me, I would remain into deceit. Neither in this case must I remain slave to my pride. The Oldman wade right by presenting himself as speaking on behalf of God.

[705] This is the right position: when you tell your opinion to a brother, do not give that as surely expressing a truth, especially if you give that opinion as belonging to you. This is for only God know the truth. The idea that we know the truth by ourselves and from ourselves, it will place us in God's place, as springs of the truth. But only God is the spring of the truth, for God is the foundation of the entire reality, or in God there is comprised the entire reality. Only by being shared from Him we can know the truth. Putting ourselves in the place of God in this regard, it means no longer recognizing Him.

He takes the face of their servants, as He has even done it[706]. And He will do the will of everyone who fear Him" (Ps. 144: 19)[707].

Often, brother, when the thieves hear the answers and the voices of the strong ones, they run away. Likewise, when the spiritual thieves hear the answers and the voice of the stronger ones, of those who hear from their Master and Chieftain Jesus: "dare, for I have overcome the world" (Jn. 16: 33), and: "Behold, I have given you the power to step over snakes and scorpions and over all the power of the enemy and nothing will harm you" (Lk. 10: 19), the enemies run away with tremble, because of getting ashamed. Let's therefore ask the saints to pray for us and they will become familiar to us. And we will benefit much from them. So, pray for me in order I to do that as well, if the work of the one from the left doesn't get me into its mastery. The Lord be with you. Aamen.

375. Of the same one: For you told me once that both in the question about thoughts and in the question about the things themselves, there is good freedom, tell me what consists of the freedom of the question?

The answer of John: The freedom into thoughts consists of the fact that him who asks to fully unveil his thought to him whom he asks without hiding anything of that thought, neither to cover that thought up because of feeling ashamed, nor to [706] Saint Cyril of Alexandria often said in Worshipping in Ghost and in Truth that the Father sees in the face of His Son our face, when we are united with the Son. Here is being said that, even being us worthless, the Son of God takes our faces. That's why He didn't unite Himself with a certain human person, but he took the human nature by and large, that one that is the nature of all of us, and which we are bearers to together with Him. He took our nature which He can feel in that what all of us feel, and each one of us feels. That's why He can pray for all of us, He could feel the sins of all of us, and He could suffer on the cross for each one of us. If we want, He will be able to wash all of us up, by taking Him our sins away from Us, and by communicating Him to all of us the human cleanness committed by Him especially through the Holy Impartation.

[707] We do the will of Christ when we attach ourselves to Him, and He does our true and sinless will, that one which we fight with against our alteration by sin, that one which we can restore our authentic nature. Saint Maximos the Confessor says that God wants that what is characteristic to our authentic nature, for He has created us having a will which we to resemble Him through (Opuscula theological et polemica; G.P. 91: 81). So, by doing us His will, we do that what He wants according to out true will. That's why, for that too, Christ has taken our will, of all of us.

present that thought as belonging to somebody else, btu to confess that thought as his and fully as it is. This is for the covering rather harms[708].

376. The question of the same one: Tell ma, Master, which is the freedom into things? And how must we use it?

The answer of John: The freedom in things is the truth said plainly and openly. Maybe somebody need food, or he needs a coat, or he needs generally some things, and he must say that to him who can given him that what ne heeds. But one must use this freedom only in front of a person who won't be offended by it. This is for not all the people are build up through it. He who has right-reckoning he will get built up and he will rejoice himself. But him who is not like so, he will get offended[709]. And he who uses this freedom, he must not use it in a passionate manner, namely in order to satisfy a passion that disturbs him, but only in order to satisfy a real need of his. So, when that person whom he asks freely don't get offended and neither there is a passion at the basis of his request, that freedom is good. One must also take heed at the fact that one should not use his freedom when there is present a person who could be easily offended by that. So, as much as possible, one needs to talk about what he asks rather in intimacy, only to him who can procure the needed thing and who can receive the ask of the brother without getting offended by it. This is because, sometimes, maybe being exhausted by tiredness, you need to eat earlier and by hearing that somebody can get offended, or you ask for a thing and you brother won't get built up[710]. So, as it was said, good is that freedom ghat is used in the fear of God. This is because, if you need something but you do not tell that, and if you wait for somebody to give that thing to you by himself, it can happen that sometimes that person doesn't know about your need or, even if he knew about your need, he could forget about that, or he does that in order to test your patience, and by that you get offended by him and so you will commit sin. But if you tell him openly about your need, that things won't happen, but you must prepare your thought previously, so that if you do not receive what you have asked for, you won't get troubled, or you won't get offended, or you won't speak against. But you must tell to your thought: "Either him cannot give me that what I am asking for, or I am not worthy of receiving that and that's why God hasn't allowed him to give me that thing". And take heed, lest by seeing that that one hasn't fulfilled your ask, you will cut off your freedom towards him and so you won't dare any longer to ask him for something else. Guard yourself undisturbed by that unsuccess. And if somebody asks you at his own initiative about something that you need, then too you must tell him the truth. And even if you were kidnapped by some thought and you told him: "I don't need that", you should come into your senses and tell him: "Forgive me, because I haven't wanted to tell this. For I need that thing".

[708] The true freedom means to be free from yourself. It is the freedom of unveiling yourself into the whole your limitation and uncleanness. This is for only thus you can show that you have unveiled yourself as a subject beyond these false states, or you have unveiled your true self, and you have liberated yourself from that what has been dominating you, namely you have liberated yourself from that what you actually aren't. This is the true courage.

[709] The freedom from things (as from thoughts too) it is one with the non-hypocrisy, with the sincerity, but not with a cynical sincerity that is not united with a knowledge about the own true self, but with a humble one which you recognize through that you have some elementary needs as any other human being. This is also a liberation from the pride that tries to procure what it needs on meandrous and impure ways. Such a freedom can offend him who doesn't encounter it with understanding. This is because, if he addresses himself to one who is lacking the cleanness at his turn, that one can meet his ask with all sorts of dishonoring suppositions. He will get offended, while him who succeeds to meet in his sincerity him who is sincere too, he will get bulti up and he will rejoice of the freedom which him who need something from him asks him for that, for his true needs.

377. What should I do because my thought insists that this freedom of mine will cause offense to somebody?

The answer of John: You can test him if he gets offended or not. If you, for instant. Heed some food, do not tell him: "give me", but: "I am hungry because of that something". And that one, by hearing what you have said, he will unveil himself. And out of this you can find out what his tendency is: to get offended or not to.

[710] It is good to unveil a need only to him who can satisfy it and who can understand it, and not in front of a brother who is present but he in unable to hear that unveiled need without getting suspicious.

378. Question: The Great Oldman asked by brother John if he could pick up some fruits and eat, he allowed him to share what he was given, but without asking for that. Doesn't that seemingly stop the freedom?

The answer of John: His thought was whispering to brother John not to eat anything. But the Great Oldman, when asked, he told him that that though came him from the devils. And wanting him to shame up the devils, he said: "Do not have the initiative to ask and you will understand the enemy's evilness. This is for him who tell you not to eat anything, he will make you speak against if he gives you few foods or nothing at all". That's why he answered him by giving him this commandment: there where is not commandment, there will be your freedom beneficial to you[711].

379. Question towards the Great Oldman: A brother asked the Great Oldman, saying: I pray you, Master Abba, my soul is wounded and I have been always wanting to ask you about that, but I has been afraid to ask, thinking: "I won't ask for that in order I not to tempt the Ghost of the Lord". But Abba told me that is a big falling to the soul not to ask[712]. So, I pray you, for the Lord, pray for me and show me how can I be saved. And forgive me.

The answer of Barsanuphius: Brother, you have got waken up a little too late, after your wounds have got stinky and rotten. If you want to be saved, you will cut off these deadly [711] The decision to not eat anything it was unveiled as coming from the devil by the fact that him who decided not to eat anything he didn't ask from him who usually was giving him food, and so he spoke-against when that one gave him only a little food or he didn't give him anything. That's why Barsanuphius let him the freedom to eat when given something, but not to ask for food. That is a pride and a lack of sincerity saying one that he doesn't want to eat anything, but him to speak-against when given less food. It is better to him to renounce at that pride and lack of sincerity, by asking and by accepting that what is given to him, but without speaking-against that he is given too little, but being thankful for what he has been given. Through this is manifested the sincerity and the lack of pride, by striving himself to unite with those the thankfulness and not the speaking-against. But that he could manifest his freedom of his sincerity. Barsanuphius wants to liberate the soul of the addressee form the meandering paths, and to make that soul righteous and honest.

wounds and you will tell together with David: "I am starting now" (Ps. 76: 10[713]). Son, starting from now, you must cut off all your wills and all your desires to justify yourself, and your disregard and your indifference, and in their place, you will keep the humbleness, the obedience, and the submission[714]. Reckon yourself as nothing in everything and you will be saved[715]. If you keep these, you will be guarded against all evil. And if not, you will see. This is for you will have to answer on the judgment day. This is because you are not only now condemned and held accountable, now when you are asking about them, but will be he so in the future too[716]. Therefore, you smut take heed at yourself so that you won't lose your reward, better said your time, by not taking care of your salvation[717], which is loved by God.

[714] The own wills, the desire for justification, the despising of the duties, the indifference, they are forms of the self-locking, while the humbleness, the obedience, and the submission are the signs of the awareness that you are in a dialogue with God as partner Whom you totally depend on, but God as partner doesn't despise you, but God wants you to be aware of Him, and you to be awake in front of Him, and by that you will receive power out of God's power.

[715] You must reckon yourself as nothing, but not as a nothing outside any relationship. But you must reckon yourself into a relationship with Him Who is everything; you must reckon yourself as nothing by comparison to Him Whom you have your existence form, and Whom you can receive your eternal life from. You must reckon on yourself as nothing by being you aware of the relationship you have with the One Who is endless and eternal, from Whou you have received and you are receiving everything. The more you feel your being descended into nothingness, the more you wonder about the feeling of your nothingness, the more you will wonder about the fact that you still exist, and the more you will realize the infiniteness and the generosity of the power of Him Who can keep you and Who is keeping you into existence, though by yourself you are nothing. The intensity of living of God it is proportional with the intensity of feeling your nothingness. The infiniteness of the glory of God you will live it on the measure of your total nothingness, on the measure of your awareness of the fact that you can advance to the edge of the existence in living your nothingness, but still without you ceasing to exist, but not by yourself. He who deceitfully feels full of himself, he won't be aware of God. The term "wounded" from the question can be translated also as "full of himself": πεπεισμένη.

[716] I spoke in a previous footnote about the quality of the man as responsible being. The sensitiveness is one with the sentiment of the responsibility. He who is responsible in the present life, he will be held less accountable on that great day of the "answer". He who has answered here, he will be able to give "a good answer" to the "fearsome judgment". And he who hasn't been responsible here, he will be unwillingly answer then, for his deeds, and he won't be acquitted.

[717] "καιρός" it is not that time flowing without a purpose, but it is that time given for a unique purpose. The time of our earthly life it is the unique time appointed to our salvation.

380. The question of the same one towards the other Oldman: What does the cutting off of your own will mean?

The answer of John: This is a progress according to God. And cutting off your will means cutting off your will in the good things and you to do the will of the saints; and in the evil things it means throwing away from yourself the inappropriate things.

381. The question of the same one towards the same Oldman: When I ask about subtle thoughts my thought gets proud, as one who is able to notice all their subtleties.

Answer: If you want to ask some of the Fathers about subtle things and in the same time you want not to get haughty, you will remember that the man is required, in the first place, to correct yourself in his gross thoughts which have been forbidden by the Apostle, as, for instance; fornication, debauchery, envy, and similar thoughts. Then he is required not to despise his subtle thoughts. This is because him who occupies himself with the subtle thoughts, but he doesn't take care of his gross thoughts, he will be like that man who has a house dirty and full of all ugly things, and in the middle of that house he has some thin straws, and he wants to clean his house up and he starts firstly by getting those thin straws out, while he lets the boulders and the other things in, and he keeps stumbling on those[718]. If he removes only the straws his house wont' regain its beauty. But if he gets out the boulders and the other gross things, he won't be able to let inside either those straws, because they corrupt the house's beauty. That's why our Savior condemned the Pharisees and the Sadducee, by saying them: "Woe to you, because you give tithe of mint and of dill and of cumin but you have left the harder things of the law. You must to these and you must not leave those aside" (Mt. 23: 23).

[718] These are words which the spiritual father is asked about how him who asks about all kind of things he can clean himself up of his vain-glory, of his suspicions on others etc. but he is not asked about how can one get rid of his debauchery, or cheating on others, oof his greediness etc.

328. The question of the same one towards the same one: If somebody asks the same Oldman about something and the Oldman tells him that that thing will happen in a certain manner, but later on, because there will have occurred a certain difficulty and resistance concerning that thing, he who has asked about it will doubt the answer he will have received, will him be condemned as faithless?

Answer: If him who asked is a man who fight, he will correct his faithlessness by believing that the Holy Ghost doesn't lie when speaking thought the mouths of His saints, as He wishes. This is for it is said: "God spoke within His saint" (Ps. 59: 6[719]; 107: 8[720]). So, if he doesn't believe that God is the One Who speaks through the mouth of the asked one, he is unbeliever and he will be condemned from the beginning. But if he believed in the beginning and then after he started doubting, he can correct himself by hearing the Ecclesiastes who says: "For seven times a day the righteous falls and rises" (Prov. 24: 16). But again, we must take in account that for many times God said something in the godlike Scriptures about His servants, but something different than that happened to those. For instance, God said: "I will glorify them who glorify Me" (1 Kings[721] 2: 30). But we found some of the saints as living all the way to their death in reproached and in much rebuke. So, could we say that God didn't glorify them? But God glorified them abundantly, but they who do not see with the eyes of their heart they won't see the saints' glory. So, due to his patience, Job was more glorified, despite that in the human eyes of his friends he seemed to suffer all the things rightly coming upon him, but then he heard out of God's mouth: "Do you reckon that I behave to you such for something else than to show you as righteous?" (Job 40: 3). But also, the poor Lazarus, who was lingering at the gate of the rich man and who was much despised, he much glorified God by his patience[722]. And for I said that God glorified them who glorify Him, it seemed that to Lazarus was happening the opposite, because of remaining him in troubles all the way to his death. But later on, it was shows how God glorified Lazarus by placing him in Abraham's bosom (Lk. 46: 20-22).

[719] In KJB we have: Ps. 60: 6: "God hath spoken in his holiness; I will rejoice, I will divide Shechem, and mete out the valley of Succoth."; in ROB we have: Ps. 59: 6: "God spoke in His holy place: "I will rejoice Myself and I will divide Shechem and the Valley of Succoth I will measure." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[720] In KJB we have: Ps. 108: 7: "God hath spoken in his holiness; I will rejoice, I will divide Shechem, and mete out the valley of Succoth."; in ROB we have: Ps. 107: 6: "Save me with Your right hand and hear me. God spoke in His holy place." (E. l. t.'s n.)

And what can we tell about Saint Paul, he who was found worthy of seeing the Son of God Himself, and he was also found worthy of hearing the voice of God (1 Cor. 15: 8); and about Saint Paul God Himself testified that he is "vessel of the filling up" (Acts 9: 15) who was kidnapped to heavens and who heard the godlike voice and untold words which nobody heard (2 Cor. 12: 4)? And still, he was lowered for two times in a basket (Acts 9: 25; 2 Cor. 11: 33). Wasn't that to them who were unbelievers and lacking the right-reckoning and the discernment, a thing that could offend them? But still, the same Paul has been found worthy of the godlike grace. And that was done in order to prove many, in order to be seem if they remained in their faith into the Apostle. It happens so to the other saints towards the benefit of them who come as ask them questions.

But why should we speak about people while the Savior Himself prayed, saying: "Father, if it is possible, let this cup pass away from Me" (Mt. 26: 39)? By hearing that, the Apostles themselves got offended, because of not knowing that that was done according to oikonomia, towards the benefit of all people.

So, also the things happening now in another manner, they do not happen because of the weakness of the one who is asked, or of him who prays, but they take place for the proving and strengthening of the faith of them who come and ask them questions, in order to be seen if they remain strong in their faith. This is for they who remain in faith all the way to the very end of the things, they will see the glory of God coming to them.

[722] About Job it is said that "he was glorified by God through patience". And about Lazarus it is said that "he was glorifying God through patience". Actually, him whom God gives sufferings to, he is being glorified by God, for God shows him able to glorify God by enduring the sufferings allowed by God upon than man. Being glorified by God and glorifying God coincide in this sense: "I glorify them who glorify Me". Not to mention here the glorification they will be granted in the future life for patiently suffering here. Right in the present patience of the believers there is a heroism of their ghost, which attracts upon them the glory from them who understand, a heroism which in the same time they extoll God through. Actually, in their patience there is present God too Who diminishes their sufferings. And within them it is felt this power from God Who is extolled through this power of enduring the sufferings, being them extolled at their turn, for the fact that can do that.

But some people who ask them hoping for the success of some bodily thing, and not for the benefit of their soul, they will quickly reach the success. But why not to rather look at Azaria and Anania, who trusted God that God could escape them from oven, they said to the emperor: "We have God in heavens Who can escape us from your hands and from the oven. And even if He doesn't do that, we won't worship your deities" (Dan. 3: 16-17). And God didn't glorify them immediately, but he let them until they were thrown into the oven. But when their consummate trust in God was shown to everybody, God delivered them, and so God left an example to them who are more hesitant in believing in God Who says: "And he who will endure to the very end, that one will be saved" (Mt. 10: 22).

Letting therefore everything to God Who know more than we do what is beneficial to us spiritually and bodily, let's not show ourselves without faith in the things said by Fathers, but let's patiently wait from God the good end and useful to the soul, reminding about the prophet who says: "His judgments are deep of sea" (Ps. 35: 7[723]). The fact that His judgments are impenetrable can bee seen also out of the things which happened to the Israelis. This is for, by hearing them that they followed to enter a land which milk and honey were following in, they tempted God much by their faithlessness, because of not reaching to such a land. They didn't understand that God called milk and honey the future spiritual goods, whom the law was only a shadow of, as the Apostle interpreted those to us (Col. 2: 17).

Therefore, over all of these, let's believe in our loving-of-people God and our Good Master Who always takes care of our life, more than we think and understand. For Him is due the glory, to the Father and to the Son and to the Holy Ghost, now and forever and ever. Amen.

383. The question of the same tone towards the same Oldman: Father, please clarify me the question: Hould I ask the Fathers about the fruits of my garden, whether those fruits are good; or if I have an enemy and I ask about Him, will him harm me; and they tell me about the fruits that they will be good and about my enemy that he won't harm me, but the fruits won't be there and my enemy is searching for me to harm me, what should I believe? And if I find my thought weakening in faith because of the things that occurred contrary to their sayings, how must I strengthen and support my thought? Have mercy on me Father, this time too, and enlighten me the right path. And pray for my helplessness.

The answer of John: We must not reckon the words of the saints as lacking of power. Their words are working and uttered according to God. But because we are nailed into the bodily and material things, we cannot understand the sayings of the saints. This is for, as God takes care of the souls' salvation, so do the saints too. So, when the saints talk to us, let's understand that they speak about the inward man, and we will find out that the trouble coming to us from people, or the material loss, are towards our benefit. Thus[724], the foretelling about the good fructification has been fulfilled because not achieving the external fruits brought a benefit to the soul. So that that was good to us. And the prediction about the getting harmed by the enemy was fulfilled as well, for the enmity become a cause for souly benefit, if we endure it with thankfulness, by remembering him who said: "Give thanks in everything" (1 Thes. 5: 10) and: "Pray for your enemies and for them who trouble you" (Lk. 6: 28) and: "Blessed will you be when they rebuke you and persecute you" (Mt. 5: 11). This is for, if we are righteous, the trial from the enemy will become a cause for progress to us, and fi we are sinners that will bring us the forgiveness of our sins and the correction, in order us to get accustomed and to learn the patience[725].

[724] All the things of the man or of the human collectivities have a history. Some of them start well but then they cross through more difficult stages, or vice versa. The difficult stages must not determine the people whom they are happening with, to get discouraged, but they must believe that God will get out of those difficulties on them who believe in Him, to a good final. By doing so, they will see appearing to them the glory of God. The history of the persona and collective life has among other purposes also the purpose of strengthening the people into faith, in order they not to allow themselves to be discouraged by the difficulties and unsuccess occurring on the way.

[725] The things which are unpleasant to us on the plan of the bodily life, they are useful to our soul. That's why the Oldman who was asked about the unshown fruits of the trials of some people, he was right to tell that those fruits will show up, even if those fruits didn't show up, for even though they didn't show up on a seen plan, they were produced on an unseen plan. And about getting harmed by the enemy, the Oldman was right to tell that it won't take place,

And if it happens to us to rejoice even in the bodily things, either of earnings, or of peace, let's understand that these ones are beneficial to our inward man. This is for the benefit of our inward man has been working the prayer of the righteous.

Being those things so, the hater of the faith cannot break our faith. This is for out of both of them can be born the things useful to our inward man. This is for also in the peace gained by somebody there is the fulfillment of the saints' prediction, for it was foretold towards benefit. May the Lord make you wise and enlighten your heart.

384. The question of the same one towards the same one: If I ask the saints to pray for an illness of my soul and of my body and I believe that the healing will immediately come to me, will it that be so? Even though it wouldn't be beneficial to me if I was immediately healed up?

The answer of John: It is not good for you to pray starting from yourself, in order you to be healed of an illness, because you do not know what is useful to you. But you must let that to Him Who said: "Your Heavenly Father knows the things you need before you asking Him for those" (Mt. 6: 8). Therefore, you smut pray to God saying so: "Master, I am in Your hands, have mercy on me according to Your will and, if it will be beneficial to me, please heal me up quickly". You must pray the saints for they to ask from God for the same thing, and you must believe without you doubting, that God will do that what is beneficial to you. And you must thank God in everything, by remembering the word: "give thanks in everything' (1 Thes. 5: 18). And you will benefit with your soul and with your body.

385. The question of the same one towards the same one: What do the Fathers ask for when they are asked to pray for some temptation? Do they ask for deliverance of than illness, or for that what is beneficial? And why Abba Sisoes asked from God for the deliverance of passion for his disciple, like other even if a temptation came from the enemy. This is for that temptation was beneficial to the soul.

Fathers did too (Paterikon, Sisoes: 12)? And how must we understand the word: "Him who believes all the things are possible to" (Mt. 9: 23)? And again, how must we understand the saying that nobody is tempted more than he can endure? And it is the trial towards benefit? And are the prayers of the saints useful?

The answer of John: Brother, because both I and you are impatient, we let aside our passions and we ask about other things instead. Still, about the things you asked me, I reckon the followings: The consummate Fathers pray to God for God to do that what is beneficial to the man. So, it the illness is beneficial to the man, God will allow that illness upon the man in order the man to acquire patience. And if it is useful to the man to be delivered from that illness, God will deliver that man. And we attribute this to the prescience of God. So, Abba Sisoes prayed for his disciple being announced that he must pray. Likewise, the other Oldman, of better said all the other Fathers, they pray on the ground of being them announced to pray. And it is obvious that we must reckon the things happening to the man as happening for man's benefit. This is for the Apostle says: "gives thanks in everything" (1 Thes. 5: 18). Likewise, to him who believes all the things are possible, either to endure the trouble of the illnesses with trust, or to endure, or to have long-patience, or to bear everything manly, as Job did. And the man doesn't text the man above the man's power. If the prayers of the saints do not come to his help, the man will become impatient because of his weakness. May God forgive your much-speaking, brother.

386. The question of the same one towards the same one: I happen to me when the saints are near to me, I to walk a road full of thieves, either because a need of mine or for some other thing of the faith or in order to go and visit some Fathers. Tell me, Abba, how should I walk that road? Will I walk that road without worrying and by believing in the power of the saints? Or in what manner? And if I suddenly arrived among thieves, what would I thing? Namely, only about me, or about the people with me too, or even about the things I carry? And if it happened that Abba was not told about those thieves, would I turn back to him and tell him?

The answer of John: If we have reached to have the saints near to us, we must fully trust that we will have the help of God in all the things. This is for, if in the things of the world, if one surrenders his house to one of the powerful men, that powerful man will take a good care of that house due to the honor of receiving that house in his care, all the more will be consummated by God the help provided by the saints to him who has surrendered himself to them[726]. This is for it is said about God that "He will do the will of them who fear Him; He will listen to their prayer and He will save them" (Ps. 144: 19[727]). So, we must try in all ways to have the consummate closeness of the saints to us, towards the help and the salvation of our soul. And if while we have the saints near to us, there occur troubles and difficulties in our businesses, of if we fall on our way, let's not lose our courage and let's not reckon them who are close to us as helpless and to we to get offended by them, by the fact that after they have joined us there occurred also a material loss to us, or some blow onto our body. But let's remember that also the godlike Apostle despite he was powerful and consummate and Saint, he fell in all of these and he praised on himself, saying: "I endured many dangers, but the Lord delivered me from all of them" (2 Tim. 3: 11). This is for it was said that "many are the troubled or the righteous and the Lord delivers them from all their troubles" (Ps. 33: 18[728]); and [726] According to Barsanuphius and John, the saints have a great role in our lives. The saints stay beside us, helping us, and praying for us. Being the saints full of the power of God, that power irradiates out of them within us too. The saints determine sus to open ourselves to God. The saints "surrender" us to God. And that's why the care of the saints for helping us it is strengthened also by the power of God, that power that is within the saints. A saint doesn't stay alone in front of God. His love for others doesn't allow him not to take care of those whom he loves. And by keeping him tied to those whom he loves, together with them there is God as well, due to the saints' love for us, and that makes even stronger the help provided us from the saints. The Orthodox Church hasn't fallen into the Protestant individualism, that is a fruit of the Renaissance, of the pride of the individual promoted by that, and individualism that has weakened the Church and it has removed the connection from among the people on earth together with the saints.

[727] In KJB we have: Ps. 145: 19: "He will fulfil the desire of them that fear him: he also will hear their cry, and will save them."; in ROB we have: Ps. 144: 19: "The will of them who fear Him He will do it, and their prayer He will hear it and All the sinners He will destroy." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[728] In ROB we have: Ps. 34: 19: "Many are the afflictions of the righteous: but the Lord delivereth him out of them all."; in ROB we have: Ps. 33: 18: "Many are the troubles of the righteous and out of all of those will they be delivered by God." (E. l. t.'s n.)

that “through many troubles we must enter the Kingdom of Heavens” (Acts 14: 22); and again: “A non-tempted man is unproven and inexperienced” (Resch, Agrapha, no. 90, p. 130, pp. 130-132). Let’s bear in mind that no good thing can be made without trouble. This is because it stirs up the devil’s envy[729]. And if it happened to us to advance into good without experiencing troubles, we must not get haughty by thinking that we have been delivered from trouble due to our worthiness, but we must think that God Who knows our weakness, of the fact that we haven’t the power for enduring the trouble, He has covered up through the closeness (assistance) of the saints. This is for it was written about them who endure in troubled and in trials: “Blessed is him who endures the temptation , for by becoming proven he will take the crown of the life” (Jas. 1: 12)[730]. Take heed lest by trusting the fact that you have the saints close to you (fighting for you), to walk your road carelessly. And if you hear something while walking your road, either about thieves of about something else (dangerous), you must strengthen yourself and you smut do whatever you can not to fall into those things, but in the same time you must pray God, and you must thing at the closeness of the saints, but you still must take heed at doing your travel either together with [729] It is a current experience that each time one does something good, that will stir up an envy, a gossip, or even an impediment. All the more, the deeds that are especially good, or the people who have dedicated themselves to the good in a special manner. But all of these bring praises as well. And the envy is stirred up by those praises. But the cause may consist also of the fact that the people do not like to stay in the shadow while others shine. That’s’ why, maybe the praised ones are also guilty of not granting enough attention to them who are less endowed. That’s why they who are praised need to be humble. Theya re required some sort of covering of their good deeds, united with the avoidance of the vain-glory, and that will be beneficial to them too. But they are also required to pay more attention to other too. That would prove an even greater quality of theirs. In the end, all the people have value. All the people are brothers. The envy is at its turn put in the serving of a balance, when they who do great deeds do not shun from vain-glory. But this doesn’t mean that there aren’t also cases of envy that cannot he healed despite the sincere humbleness of them who did the good deeds, or that there aren’t unseen evil subject whom the envy stuck on forever, and whom the envy has not the mentioned motivation. There are also being s who stir up the envy within people.

[730] The crown, the glory, the reward, they won’t be added externally to the man who has been striving, but they will be spread out of the spiritual strength gained by that man, though in that strength there is also present the power of God. This is an “experienced” man, a “proven” man, through the trial isn’t only something that exists within that man and that has come out by him enduring the trials, but it has been also produced by that man’s patience. The crowned ones are soldiers who have become powerful during the spiritual wars, they becoming resemblant to their strong emperor through their steadfast will into good.

other people, or by asking how could you travel safely, while alone, on a road or another[731].

Even though you want to travel a road for having a motif a rightly-believing duty or to visit some Fathers, if you heard about thieves or other dangers related to that road, you wouldn't daringly start walking that road without any assurance, in order you to get rid, though that too, of pride and of danger. This is because one mustn't throw himself willingly into trial, but one must only endure the trial with thankfulness as coming from the lenience of God[732]. This is for find out about some of the saints as well, by wanting to go and visit some other saints who lived further away in the desert, and because they heard about thieves and other possible troubles, they postponed their travel. This is an example of humbleness for us. So, if you heard about the road which you are walking on, that that is intertwined with troubles, strive yourself to ask Abba, saying: "What do you reckon that I should do?". And you must to whatever he told you to do. And if because of your forgetfulness you haven't told Abba and you have accepted a task to fulfill, and on the road, you remember that you should have asked Abba, you won't need to turn back, but you will pray to God, saying: "Master, forgive me and forgive my carelessness. And by the help of the saints and by the kindness of Your mercy, please guide me according to Your will. And please save me and guard [731] We must put into the committing of the good, into the rejection of the sin, the whole our power, as the success would depend on our power; btu we must also ask for the help from God and from the saints, as our success would depend on that help. Actually, we need both kinds of help. We cannot do anything good without our effort and neither without the help from God. This is our co-working with God. Neither we can se our power in work without the power from God. But neither the power from God brings forth fruits without rooting into the soil of our being. Even in our effort there is active the power of God too.

[732] Someone's throwing into trials while trusting that God will uphold him due to his faith, it is at its turn a sort of pride that it not pleasant to God, and such a deed can destroy that somebody. It is like he would force God to help him, by reckoning his power as stronger that God's will. Only when there is an absolute need for receiving a trial, that trial must be received with humbleness and by asking for the help from God; or, only when the trials come onto you without having you previously searched for it, and without being you able to avoid it in a manner unpleasant to God and inappropriate to your spiritual growth, only than one must receive the trial. The humbleness and the dignity, or the devotion for a value necessary to a true life, they must go hand in hand. Then you will receive your trials by thanking God for the strut He shows you, by Him allowing that trial coming upon you because He knows that you will be able to overcome that trial. Here too, God must be transparent to you, His light penetrating through the wall of some aspect of your egotism.

me against any evil and cunning thing. For Your name has been glorified forever. Amen".

387. The question of the same one towards the same Oldman: Can the faith of somebody be beneficial to another who doesn't bring his faith too, as it was beneficial to the man with palsy the fait of them who bore him (Mk. 2: 3-5)?

Answer: If the man with palsy was had not been a believer himself, he wouldn't have allowed them to carry him and to lower him through the roof. So, his faith united with the faith of the others it saved him. Consequently, if the man doesn't add also his faith in God, he won't find benefit. So, you must not give as motif the fact that you have placed the whole your burden upon somebody else. Jeremiah, by believing that God will save the people, he also prayed for the people. But because of the people didn't believe, he wasn't listened to (Jer. 11: 14). Hadn't Jeremiah had faith? Yes, he had had faith. His faith was like the faith of those who carried the man with palsy. Therefore, the guilt belonged to the people. It is likewise in the similar cases too. This is fore it wasn't said for nothing: "Much can the working prayer of the righteous" (Mt. 5: 16).

388. The question of the same one towards the same one: I pray you, Father, tell me what consisted of the together-working of the daughter of the Canaanite woman (Mt. 15: 21-28), or of the servant of the centurion (Lk. 7: 2), so that they were healed? And the similar question regarding the man with palsy who asked for the healing of his body and he firstly received the forgiveness of his sins? What consisted here the together-working of? ON the other hand, our Lord says to Apostles: "Anything you will untie on earth, it will be untied on heavens too" (Mt. 18: 18), and: "Whom you will forgive his sing to, his sins forgiven will be" (Jn. 20: 23). He didn't say: "If they will collaborate". Please clarify me this.

Answer: Brother, they who do not understand how the things are, they will be bewildered. The daughter of the Canaanite woman and the servant of the centurion they lost the self-awareness, the first one because of the devilish insanity, and the second one because of his helplessness. Therefore, they were unable to add their together-working to that of those who prayed for them. And the man with palsy by adding his faith into the healing of his body, he has been found worthy for more, by the love for people of our Master.

This is for our Savior, in order the people to believe that He came, He did miracles in the beginning, without a together-working of theirs, and he healed the people as a gift (for free), in order the prophetic word to be fulfilled: "This One our weaknesses He took and our illnesses He bore" (Isa. 53: 4). Being accountable for their sins, the people were being healed by His grace, while not being a co-working required from them[733], but they were required only to guard themselves after having been cleaned, as He says: "Behold, you have been healed; from now on do not commit sin, lest something worse to happen to you" (Jn. 5: 14). But also, John says about Him: "Behold, the Lamb of God, He Who removed the sins of the world" (Jn. 1: 29). Take heed at what he says: "of the whole world". Still, they who didn't accept him they didn't receive healing, but with them was fulfilled the word: "And if the unbeliever separates himself, let him separate" (1 Cor. 7: 15). And if He gave the Apostles power to heal and to forgive the sins of them who collaborate with their prayer[734], may you be convinced by James himself who has received this power. This is for he says: "Much can the prayer of the righteous made [733] By inheriting the sinfulness of their proto-parents, the people in a certain sense non-accountable (ανεύθυνος) for their sins before they had received the grace of Christ through baptism. That's why too, they weren't required their collaboration for their sins to be forgiven, because they were unable to. Of course, reckoning them as non-accountable did not equaled a receiving of them into the Kingdom of Heavens. That was to come only through Christ.

[734] Jesus didn't heal people by praying, for He was God when healing too, so that he worked like God. But when he prayed, He did that like a man, and therefore while doing that He didn't heal people. But the Apostles were healing also while praying, for they worked in that healing as men. And therefore, they who were healed by Apostles they must collaborate too, by praying themselves to be healed. The strong and the weak people must show themselves to God as intertwined, in order the power of God who is overpoured within those who are more open to that power, to cross also within them whom they want to united themselves with, out of their love and by the kinship of the nature. Through the lit charcoal the godlike fire passes also to the non-lit charcoal that is in contact with the lit charcoal. Him who has his soul with palsy, he cannot go to Christ by himself, but he wants to be helped to reach in front of Christ; the strengthening word of him who is stronger in his faith, it is of great help to him; by that, he will be helped to feel the power of Christ, or he will be elevated to that state that allows him to feel Christ's power.

working" (Jas. 5: 16). This is for the prayer of the Apostles and of the saints it is a prayer that has been made working[735]. But it didn't happen likewise in the case of our Savior. But as many as accepted Him, they were saved and healed. And they who didn't accept Him, they were lost. Let's therefore strengthen ourselves into faith, and we will be saved in the name of God Whom it is due the glory forever. Amen.

389. The question of the same one: I pray you, Master, teach me what was the guilt of the disciple of Saint Elisha, so that he was unable to resurrect that death? And why the prophet still had sent him in advance if he knew about that, and why the prophet hadn't corrected his disciple before sending him?

Answer: Did Elisha send his disciple despising him? Or course not. But he sent his disciple in order to teach him that it is not good to despise somebody when bringing him to repentance, in order him to believe and to resurrect others too. But the disciple remained as he was. And because of his faithlessness, he wasn't able to resurrect the dead, but he still sent him in order to lack any defense for he was drawn hi attention but he didn't understand. Likewise, our Lord knew that Judah was a traitor but He didn't' despise Judah to His last breath, but He draw Judah's attention and He didn't removed Judah from Himself, until that one had been totally lost[736]. This is for the people are free. And in order to be shown [735] According to the French translator, this sentence has the meaning that the Old John, by always accentuating, as Barsanuphius did too, the communion between persons, he reckoned that the prayer of the righteous is made working, or it is upheld through him who that prayer is done for. Therefore, the las one too, he must be active. But one must also reckon that in this communion the prayer is made working by God as well.

[736] If Jesus had shown any harshness to Judah, Judah could have been moved to commit his ugly deed also by some word or deed of Jesus, which Judah could have been seen some evilness. Then, one could have said that God is evil too, or God is a cause of the evil. But Judah wasn't pushed to anything evil from Jesus's part. By and large, the man isn't forced to evil by God's power. But the man decides himself for evil totally freely. Or, the people are moved to evil by one another, without being forced to that by a force which to annul their freedom. That's why they won't be able to blame God for the evil done by themselves, at the final judgment. Only the people will be accountable. But the people will accuse on one another, because of having pushed one another to evil, or because they were role-model for evil to one another. But that won't unburden any of them of the evil accepted from others, though some people will be shown as having been eviler than others. The better one is, the stronger he proved to be against that what can enslave him, and therefore he will be closer to that not God is the cause of the evils, neither are the saints, but the people are the causes of their own evils, so that they have been granted their freedom in order to be defenseless on the day of the judgment, when they will accuse one another[737].

390. Question towards the Great Oldman: Some inhabitants of the monastery, being delivered from many temptations by the prayers of the Holy Fathers, when hearing about the coming of some thieves, they wanted to leave that monastery and they asked the Great Oldman about that.

The answer of Barsanuphius: We have been imparted with the feeling of the work of the Master and of-people-loving God Who has delivered us from all troubles. Therefore, let's not doubt either now that He will deliver us form and He will defend us against any evil. Therefore, let's throw upon Him the whole our worry (1 Pt. 5: 7), and all our hope. And wherever you are, do not be afraid of any evil, by the prayers of the saints. Stand strong in the faith into Christ, singing together with Prophet David: "The Lord is my help and I won't fear that what the man can do to me" (Ps. 17: 6[738]); and: "May the Lord guard you against all evil, may the Lord guard you soul: May the Lord guard you entrance and your exit from now and forever" (Ps. 120: 7-8[739]). Take heed at not seeing the people that you have God but you fear the people. "Even if I walked in the middle of the shadow of the death, I wouldn't fear of evils, for You are God or fuller of God's power. God's transcendence is one with His full kindness and freedom. And as the kindness always belongs to somebody, God is the Person-like Subject Whose freedom cannot fall prey to evil or to that what isn't truly good.

[737] If not the freedom of the people had been the cause of their sins, it wouldn't have been just the people to be judged. Even in the fact that the people accuse on one another, they show themselves as being aware of the freedom had by each one of them who accuse on one another.

[738] In KJB we have: Ps. 18: 5: "The sorrows of hell compassed me about: the snares of death prevented me."; in ROB we have: Ps. 17: 6: "The pains of the hell surrounded me; the snares of the death met me." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[739] In KJB we have: Ps. 121: 7-8: "The Lord shall preserve thee from all evil: he shall preserve thy soul. // The Lord shall preserve thy going out and thy coming in from this time forth, and even for evermore."; in ROB we have: Ps. 120: 7-8: "The Lord will guard you against all evil; He will guard your soul. // The Lord will guard your entrance and you exit from now on and forever." (E. l. t.'s n.)

with me" (Ps. 22: 4[740]). Tell to that soul who doubts, to have courage. The Lordc of the power is with us, our help if the God of Jacob. We are embracing all of you into the Lord Who says: "It's Me, do not fear" (Mt. 14: 27).

391. Question towards the same one: A certain brother who heard this answer, he told to the same Gret Oldman: I pray you, if somebody had this trust, should him live fearlessly even in a place haunted by thieves?

The answer of Barsanuphius: We must always trust Jesus that he doesn't allow us to be tried above our power (1 Cor. 10: 13). But for He taught us, saying: "Pray, not to fall into temptation" (Mt. 26: 41), we must not throw ourselves into temptation. This is because that would be a transgression of the commandment of God, because of surrendering ourselves to death. But we must guard ourselves. But if we live in a peaceful place and we hear about a coming closer of the thieves, we must not get disturbed, for we know that we have God as our cover. This is for God sees that we haven't thrown ourselves into trial, neither we have transgressed His commandment, but we rather guard His commandment, shouting us out day and night: "And don't bring us into temptation, but deliver us from the cunning one" (Mt. 6: 13). So, if we pray like that but a trial comes upon us, or an invasion of the thieves, let's not lose our courage, for that is allowed by God to happen, in order to prove us and towards our benefit. And if that is allowed by God to happen, let's trust the Apostle's word that says: "faithful is God Who won't let us to be tried above that what we can, but in the same time with the temptation god will bring us the escape too, so that we will be able to endure it" (1 Cor. 10: 13). Actually, if by simply hearing we run away to some other place, the devil will be able not to allow us settle down anywhere. So, when we know surely about a place that is intertwined with dangers, we must guard ourselves in advance, but when a place is peaceful, but unexpectedly a trial comes there, God sees that the cause of that is not from us and he will protect us according to His will.

[740] In KJB we have: Ps. 23: 4: "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil: for thou art with me;"; in ROB we have: Ps. 22: 4: "For even if I walked in the middle of the death, I won't fear the evils; for You are with me." (E. l. t.'s n.)

This is for that is a temptation from us and God allows it. About that said Apostle James: "Anybody, being tempted, not to say: I am tempted from God. This is for God cannot be tempted by evils" (Jas. 1: 13). But him who is tempted with God's permission, he is tempted for his soul to benefit[741]. This is for the temptations happen to the man in order the man to be proven and "the being proven leads the man to trust. And the trust doesn't shame", as it was written (Rom. 5: 4)[742]. And he who is not shamed up, he will be saved by Christ Jesus our Lord Whom it is due the glory forever. Amen.

392. The question of the same one towards the same one: "Test me, Lord, and tempt me" (Ps. 25: 2[743]); and again: "Rejoice when you reach in diverse temptations" (Jas. 1: 2). But some other time it was said: "And lead us not into temptations" (Mt. 6: 13); and again; "Pray, for you not to enter the temptations" (Mt. 26: 41). But these ones are contrary to one another. Please show me the discernment of the temptations.

[741] In order somebody to temp another to an evil thing, he must himself be tempted by evil, because he pleads for that evil, or he shows himself as in love with that evil. But God is above any evil. This is one aspect of God's transcendence: God cannot feel in Himself the temptation of any evil, namely God cannot feel that He could fall under the inferior power of the evil, or that God could slide away from His absolute power and freedom. This is for the evil represents the domination of somebody by something that is inferior to him, and it represent the taking under mastery of his freedom by that inferior something, and therefore it is a weakness. But God allow the created being to tempt on one another, or He allows the beings to be tempted by things, or the creatures to allow their freedom to be take into mastery by the inferior force of the evil. And God can allow this due to the freedom which God endowed these creatures with, because the creatures can renounce, more or less, to their freedom too. God has given the man the freedom tied to man's being, and the man's freedom itself is allowed to grow up, and the man's being as well, towards consummation or towards the union with God. God allowed to the man too his dignity to keep himself into liberty, to strengthen himself into liberty. The man can say; "I am free when I want to be free". But the man can be free by his will of being free and as a gift tied to man's being (ontologically). The freedom is both a gift and the result of man's work. That's why, at any moment during his earthly life, the man can lose or he can gain his freedom, but, because the absolute freedom belongs only to God, the created beings do not have the absolute freedom, neither they can have it or keep it or regain it except in union with God.

[742] He who is not strengthened into freedom through the trials which he is submitted to, he cannot hope that he will be member of the Kingdom of the free sons of God. But he who has reached this trust by being tested, this trust won't shame him up.

[743] In KJB we have: Ps. 26: 2: "Examine me, O Lord, and prove me; try my reins and my heart."; in ROB we have: Ps. 25: 2: "Examine me, Lord, and try me; ignite my entrails and my heart." (E. l. t.'s n.)

The answer of Barsanuphius: The word: "Test me, Lord, and tempt me" it belongs to that man who fights and who asks for being tempted through the temptation coming upon him with the permission of God. But he says that word thinking to endure the trouble of the trial. This is for the patience, as it was said, it leads the man to be proven and to the other goods (Rom. 5: 4). From here spring out, in a certain manner, the joy and the progress. This is for the will of him who fight, it doesn't collaborate with the temptations but it rather fights the temptations, and the man surrenders himself to tiredness in order him not to be defeated by temptation.

And the word: "Do not lead us into temptation" means: Not to let us be tempted by our will and by our lust. This is because out of such a temptation it will be born the death. That's why the Savior tells us: "Pray, for you not to fall into temptation" (Mt. 26: 13).

That's why the righteous one asks for both: on one hand he asks for being tempted with the permission of God in order him to be proven for salvation; on the other hand, he asks not to be tempted by his will and by his lust towards losing his soul.

393. The question of the same one: How can I have the fear of God steadfast within my callous heart? Then, when I do something, even before finishing that thing, I move my mind to something else, motivating that I do that, seemingly, for the fear of God. Is it that good, or it isn't?

Answer: If one wants to always have his fear of God steadfastly within his heart, he can learn out of this example: When somebody wants to travel, he put footwear in his feet. This is for the Scripture says: "the footwear is the sign of the preparation" (Eph. 6: 14). In addition to that it was written: "I was ready and I didn't get disturbed? (Ps. 118: 60[744]). Therefore, when somebody knows that he has to do something, he must understand through the bodily preparation the spiritual preparation, and he must put on his spiritual footwear, namely the preparation through the fear of God, and he must cogitate that he ought to do everything in the fear of God, and that he must prepare his heart to call upon God so that God to bestow him His fear. This is for, by putting himself this fear in front of his eyes, in everything he does, this fear will become steadfast to him[745].

But we must take heed at not to move our mind from the present thing to another thing, by invoking as reason the fear of God. This is for this is not God's straight path, but this is a scattering and a deceit from the enemy. And we must force ourselves to have the fear of God within us, in all important things.

But we also must get attached also to the saints, and out of their opinions, out of their speaking, out of their sight, and out of their beautiful life, we to get filled up with that repentance according to God. This is similar to the sheep of Jacob, which by guarding the twigs from the water, they conceived and gave birth to lambs according to the mottled twigs (Gen. 30: 37-40). Thus, if we imprint their examples within us, in order us to benefit of the same things, we won't be late in walking the same path together with them.

394. The question of the same one towards the same one: I often remember the fear of God and immediately, by thinking at judgment, I feel myself engulfed by repentance. What should I receive like, this memory?

Answer: Anytime when it comes to you the memory or the pricking of your heart for your knowing and unknowing mistakes, take heed not to come that to you out of the work of the devil, towards an even bigger damnation. And if you ask me: what could I discern like, between the true one and the one coming out of devilish work, listen to this: when such a memory comes to you, and you strive to correct yourself through your deeds, that is the true one and through it your sing will be forgiven; but when you see that, by being you pricked by memory, you still fall into the same sins, or into even bigger temptations, you know that that is a memory brought you by the enemy which he throws it to you towards the damnation of your soul[746]. Behold, both ways are not clear. If you fear your damnation, you will run away from its deeds.

[745] The fear of God is like a footwear helping the man to always stepping on the path wanted by God. Only if the man is ceaselessly helped by the fear of God, the man will step on this path without deviating or stopping. He who has steadfast within himself this fear, he won't pass from a thing to another, he won't leave the right path of God, he won't fall prey to the thoughts' scattering. The fear of God has been imprinted within himself like a luminous source of light that won't ever be quenched, and that is being upheld not only by the man, but the man will be in a continuous collaboration with God. Better said, the fear of God is like a nail ceaselessly piecing our being, and without causing an illness to us, but rather providing us with a steadfastness into health, by uniting our being with God and by making God felt by being the man ceaseless pricked by God's fear. It might be that the reason why the fear of God is said as being as its effect "the pricking of the heart" (Acts 2: 37).

395. The question of the same one: When is it the time right for you to remember God and His fear, in order those memories to prick your heart for your sins?

Answer: The fire has a hot nature and he who wants to use it he doesn't always ignite it. But he wants to keep the fire hidden, in order him to ignite the fire and him to use the fire whenever he wants to get warm. We ought to do likewise here too. But the urges form the devil enter and are sown at inappropriate time, by taking the image of the fear of God, but with the desire to throw somebody into sadness or to disturb his mind, so that he won't occupy himself with examining his thought, invoking as reason the work staying in front of him. This is because if the enemy doesn't find them occupied with other things, he won't be able to take them into his mastery. So, you must remember the Ecclesiastes who says: "There is a time for everything" (Eccl. 3: 1). And say to yourself: I am going to do, for now, that what stays in front of me, with the fear of God, and then I will occupy myself with the thought that has come to me now, but not with my wisdom, but with the power from God Who examines our hearts and the entrails.

Let the appropriate time for that to be for you: the morning and the evening for examining your thoughts, by looking at what the night and the day have past like. And if you see some mistake, you will strive to correct that by the help of Christ[747].

[746] When the memory of the in leads you to repentance, it is from God. When it leads you to repeating your sin, it is from the devil.

396. The question of the same one: Often the forgetfulness that come to me, it weakens the memory of many of my mistakes. And sometimes their memory totally vanishes. What should I do?

The answer of Barsanuphius: There are some illiterate people who, based on some agreements, they borrowed some things belonging to some honest people. But the honest people by being animated by their faith into that agreement, if the owners forget about something they lent, the illiterate people tell them: We will give back everything you know that we owe you. Can you find out a creditor more honest than God Who know even the things which you haven't given Him yet? So, you must entrust Him with your forgiven mistakes, and you must tell Him: "Master, because of being a mistake too, the fact that I have forgiven my mistakes, and for only to You, for You are the knower of the people, I have mistaken everything, please forgive me all my mistakes, according to Your love for people[748]. And You are glorified forever. Amen.

[747] Only now it is answered the question if it is good for somebody, under the pretext of fearing God, to pass from a thing to another and so not being able to fulfill anything as it should. Actually, him who is occupied with doing something good, he could suddenly remember a past sin accompanied with fear and sadness so that can stop him from fulfilling that god thing. That's why, Barsanuphius, it establishes some certain moments in time for remembering his sins with sadness. The man must be master upon his thoughts, even if they are good thoughts, and he must not allow himself to be mastered by his thoughts. The man must regulate the time when he allows his thoughts to enter his mind, so that he won't allow his thoughts to enter his mind whenever they want.

[748] To say so, we entrust all our sins to God. If we confess our sins and if we ask for forgiveness, God will not longer keep them into His memory. But it happens that we do not remember many of our mistakes and we do not ask God to remove them from His memory. But Barsanuphius says that God will remove even those mistakes of ours from His memory if we ask God for a general forgiveness because of not being us able to ask for their individual and specific forgiveness, because of having us forgotten them. But God remember those forgotten by us mistakes of ours, and not because God wants to keep those unforgotten by Him, but in order Him to forgive us for those forgotten by us mistakes of ours. This is because, that what is not individually forgive by God it won't bring out of God a healing of the trace left within man by that mistake of his. The forgiveness from God is not a juridical exoneration, but it is a healing. God has those within Himself only for he looks with mercy at the traces left within us by our sins, meaning those sins which we cannot remember about in order us to confess them, and which remain within us as some wounds oozing puss. That's why God will heal us of those even if we shout out at Him to totally heal us from the traces

397. The question of the same one: On occasions I am offended by something and it immediately is shown to me that I have been offended unjustly, and that shames me up. Is it shit from God, in order to correct me or is it from the evil one towards my damnation?

The answer of Barsanuphius: If we pay attention at the previous answer, we will see that this question too it finds its answer therein. As it was said, if we do not prove through our deeds that we remember the fear of God and the pricking caused by that fear, we will be condemned, while, if we correct ourselves by deeds, that rebuking will be from God and towards our salvation and not by the work of the devil towards our damnation.

398. The question of the same one towards the same one: If a lose something and, because of fearing my damnation, I do not accuse somebody of having that thing lost by me, but I suspect him, would that be inappropriate if I inquired him to see if he really had that thing? This is for I cannot stand losing that thing.

The answer of Barsanuphius: It isn't appropriate to inquire him to see whether he has that thing. But if you proved that he had that thing, you shouldn't try to shame him up. But be satisfied with regaining that thing back.

left within us by our sins. But the healing is being done by the mercy of God, that is overpoured within us like a honey, for us too by our shouting out at Him, us to show that we no longer suffer of that state of egotistic petrifaction of ours, but we appeal Him with our humanity longing to be healed by Him.

We must also mention here that this healing takes place especially through a priest, for through his always actual responsibility for the people he shepherds, upheld by the conscience of sending them to God, a conscience upheld by grace, the priest can communicate to the man through his understanding forgiveness given to the man united with the healing, for also the believer who is woken up through the responsibility of the priest to his responsibility in front of God, the believer wakes up by confessing his humanity longing for getting freed from his callousness and form his indifference of his sinful state.

399. Question and a solicitation: A layman loving of Christ confessed to the same Great Oldman his mistakes and he prayed for being his mistakes forgiven. And the Great Oldman answered him and told him:

He who unveils his sins, he will receive the forgiveness for his sins[749], according to the Scripture that says: "You first tell your sins, so that you to get corrected" (Isa. 43: 26); and again: "I said: I will confess against myself my lawlessness to the Lord and You will have forgiven the faithlessness of my heart" (Isa. 31: 5). So, brother, let's guard on ourselves from now on. This is for the mistakes from until now have been forgiven to us by God.

400. The question of the same one towards the same Great Oldman: Tell me, Father, how comes that my soul doesn't cry, despite having many wounds?

The answer of Barsanuphius: He who feels that what he has lost, he will want to cry for that what he has lost. And he who wants something, he will take upon him many travels and troubles, in his perseverance for achieving the desired thing.

401. The question of the same one towards the same Great Oldman: If somebody wants to do something good for his own benefit out of another desire of his, will that be reckoned him towards righteousness?

The answer of Barsanuphius: We know that if somebody fasts and mixes in his fasting that what he wanted, of by searching for the human glory or for gaining something out of fasting, that fasting will be disgusting to God. This is because the Israelites fasted too, but because they were of committing [749] "He will be corrected of them". It is not only a forgiveness of the sin, but it is also a straightening of the man so that will no longer able to commit those sins. The confessions of the sins it is the fundamental condition for the man to be corrected of them. By confessing his sins, the man's heart gets sensitized and it gets out of its callousness and superficiality which previously made the heart to be complacent into evil. The healing of the man starts due to a work of God, a work taking place through the word told by some believer, but especially through the priest who is continuously living his responsibility for people in front of God.

lawlessness on the fasting days and they were fulfilling their wills, God condemned them through Prophet Isaiah, saying them: "This is not the fasting I has chosen: (Isa. 58: 5). It is likewise here. Every good thing that is not committed solely due to the love for God, but that thing has mixed in it the man's will, it is a defiled thing and it is rejected by God[750]. This thing can be known also out of the godlike law. This is for it says: "Do not sow your field with mixed seeds. Neither make your coat out of flax and wool" (The Secon Law 22: 9-11). And if we want to see that that was told about deeds, the Ecclesiastes interprets this, by saying: "Your cloths be always white" (Eccl. 9: 8). By this he shows that the deed must always be clean. So, if the committed thing has something out of the will of his who commits it, that dee has been defiled and it won't be pleasant to God. And too the Lord told to His disciples about the deeds: "Guard yourself against the liar prophets who come to you clothed in sheepskins, but they are ravening wolves within. Out of their fruits you will know them" (Mt. 7: 15-16). Let's therefore strive to not do the thing of God for nothing else except for God[751]. If a thing isn't committed thus, God won't need us in order that thing to be committed through us[752]. This is for God [750] The good deed done out of some personal interest, or towards the vain-glory, it is defiled by egotism and it rather aims at deceiving the people. That's why such a dee is only apparently good. At a given time, that deed will be unmasked and it will be exposed the hideous real image of him who wears make up. God wants us to totally renounce to ourselves for our love for Him and for people. Only through that we really united ourselves with Him and with our fellow humans. Only by doing so we will no longer remain ourselves hidden to our fellow humans and we will no longer pose a danger to them, a danger that the more it is masked the more dangerous will be. But only him who bestows thus, only him will truly accomplish himself as true man. Only the open man who works for his fellow humans, and who works for God Whom all the people can be united within as in Him Who loves all the people, only such an open man is the fully and rightly developed man, a man who is non-crooked and non-locked up in his helplessness. The all-good God cannot enter the proud man because that would have meant that man to become good and open at his turn, but that man doesn't accept such a thing. And one cannot be forcedly made kind.

[751] When we do something for God, then we truly do that thing for others. This is for God directs all the things towards people. Then we serve God's work for the salvation and for the eternal happiness of the people. If we do something for people but we exclude God from that thing, we won't help the people to reach the eternal happiness, because we close up their path to God.

[752] If God uses us for a good deed, that is not because God needs us for that deed to be done, but that is because God wants us to become kind by working the good deeds. This is for the deed isn't separated from him who commits it. The deed will be imprinted, in the first place, within him who commits it. Of course, by that, also them whom we do good deeds for, they will become kind too. Nobody is saved in isolation. One finds God and his fellow humans doesn't need somebody else whom His work to be dome through, in an undefiled manner. So, while committing the good, let's take vigil lest to make useless our efforts because we want to do our will.

402. The question of the same one towards the same Great Oldman: Though I started learning later, I am learning the psalms faster. Does this come to me from the devils?

The answer of Barsanuphius: Everything that God allows you to learn, you will learn those with humbleness, for the learning of the word of God easily, it doesn't come from the devils but it is a seed from God. But if somebody is not focused on God, the enemy will sow his tares (Mt. 13: 25). And if you want to humble your thought, tell to your thought the parable: "If somebody received a number of silver coins as those servants received (Mt. 25: 14) and he doesn't gain more with those and he doesn't multiply those, what will it happen to him?". And your thought will answer you: "Like that servant who buried the silver of his master". Consequently, tell you thought: "So, do not get haughty for filling the sky up with unfruitful words. This is because those are towards my damnation"[753].

403. The question of the same of towards the same one: If the good is from God, but it has been given to the sinners too, why it has been the good given to them too?

whom him to commit his good deeds through. By doing the good we open ourselves to our fellow humans and to God Who is the spring of the good and of the love for all people. In the good we transcend ourselves together with our fellow humans into God and we meet God. In doing the good we will be liberated from the forces pulling us downwards and which divide and enslave us.

[753] Regardless what the man succeeds doing, let him not forget about the fact that he does everything on the ground of a gift he received from God. Let him therefore keep his humbleness. On the other hand, the man must not bury the received gift, but he must multiply it towards his and others' growth towards the Kingdom of God. Let the man not bury his gift into ground if it's about material things, or not to waste that gift in fruitless words scattered in the thin air, word which have no use either for himself or for others. Let him take heed even more not to spread such words in order to harm others. This is for any gifts implies also a responsibility for being used well and for being developed. The bigger the gift is, the bigger the responsibility will be. This is because that gift can do better or more harm as it is bigger. In the last case, that gift becomes to you a ground for your damnation.

The answer of Barsanuphius: All the giving of good it is proven to be from God (Jas. 1: 17). This is for God being good, all the good things come from Him: to the righteous ones as ones who are worthy of that, and to the sinners for, by being the good done to them, they to come to repentance. This is for the godlike Paul says: "I am the first among the sinners, but I have found mercy, for Christ to show in my the first, His long-patience" (1 Tim. 1: 15-16).

404. The question of the same one towards the same one: How can one thank worthily to God?

When the people, who are nothing, give somebody regardless how unimportant thing, of they escape one from some big troubles, that one confesses his gratitude and he let everybody else know the good done to him. How much more and with what mouth we ought to thank God Who always fills us up with His kindness. This is for He created us in the first place, and then He gives us His help against our enemies, and He gives us: the wisdom of our mind, the health of our body, the light of our eyes, the breath of our life and, that what is more than everything, He gives us time for repentance and the possibility of receiving His Body and Blood towards the forgiveness of our sins and towards straightening our heart. This is for "The bread strengthens the man's heart" (Ps. 103: 17[754]). And if somebody reckoned that that was said about the material bread, why the Ghost said again that "not only with bread will the man live, but also with all the word coming out of God's mouth" (The Second Law 8: 3).

If the people reward and thank on one another for material and corruptible things, what could we give, in exchange, to Him Who has been crucified for us, if we want to give Him something in exchange? We must endure to death for Him. So, it is not difficult you to understand the gratitude owed by people to God, especially by the sinners, once He died for us. If you want to thank to a man who has been imprisoned for you, and that is above your powers, won't you all the more ought to thank Him Who died for you? You must know that we never reach to thank Him according to worthiness. But we still must thank Him according to our power, both with our mouth and with your hands. And though His love for people He will take heed at us and he will count us together with that widow for her two pennies (Mk. 12: 42)[755].

Let these things be said regarding the sinners. This is for, even if the righteous ones are cut in pieces and killed, they will bring plentiful thanks, according to the Saint Apostle who says: "give thanks in everything" (1 Thes. 5: 18), or course, give thanks to God. For Who it is due the glory forever. Amen.

405. The question of the same one towards the same Oldman: "Is it possible that the devils to do good to somebody? And how can one see that that good is devilish? And what consists of the difference between the devilish goo and the godlike good?

The answer of Barsanuphius: It happen that one believes that something good can come to somebody from the evil, in order him to be deluded. But all the good coming from the devil towards the man's deceit, if examined in detail, it will be proven as a pretending thing. This is for it is a liar good and there is not truth in it, as it will be proven by the last one whom that pretended good reaches to. This is because the end of the light [755] Above all the signs of love from God towards us, Barsanuphius sees the fact that He made Himself man in order Him to die for us. If we do not know hos to thank a man who accepted his death for us a few years earlier in order him to prolong our earthly life for a few more years, how much more should we thank Him Who accepted to die when He was unable to die by any means, and by doing that he provided us with the eternal life? And even more than that, by our thankfulness, though so unimportant one, we make Him love us and, even more than that, He rejoices of our unimportant love as for a means which we open ourselves through, to the happiness He wans to give it to us?

If the urge for giving thanks is sown within us as a means of union among ourselves, and for rejoicing of one another, why would it be difficult to use this urge sown within us by Him, towards Himself, in order us to warm up our own life and to make Him glad too? In this too, it is shown the existential trait that is warm, living, and of-life-making, of the relationship between us and God Who fills up both the public cult of the Church and our private prayers.

it is the darkness[756], according to the Apostle who talks about the angels of the devil which pretend to be servants of the righteousness, but "whose end will be according to their deeds" (2 Cor. 11: 14-15); or, according to our Savior: "Out of their fruits you will know them" (Mt. 7: 16). If you examine into knowledge and with right-reckoning (with discernment), you will find out, doubtlessly, that in the good reckoned from the devil there won't be any trace of good, but there will be either vain-glory, or disturbance, or something similar[757]. The good from God always increases the light and the humbleness of the heart, and it bring the man to peace. So, if we fall under some deceit from the devil, because of our nescience, but then we discover the temptation, let's turn ourselves back and run to Him Who can banish that temptation away from us. But we must know that some people know immediately, from the very beginning, the difference, while the sinners will know that only at the end where they reach through temptation, similar to an experienced goldsmith who received a jewelry and he can tell, before melting it down, whether that jewelry is made of gold or not; but the inexperienced man cannot tell that except after testing it into fire.

406. Question: When the devil reckoned to come from the devils it is exposed, tell me how can one escape its danger?

[756] The evil one puts on the mask of the good in order him to deceive that one whom he wants to do evil to, or to attract him to evil by deluding him that he attracts him at good. But the devils' purpose remains the evil and, after the devil succeeds in doing evil to somebody or in attracted somebody to do evil, the devil will get off the mask of the good, so that hiem who has been deluded by the mask of the pretended good he will see the evil dome to him or the evil he has been attracted to. And either he renounces to the evil which he has been urged to, or he remains in that evil if he has got sweetened by that evil, he will realize that that pretended good it actually is evil. There are some faithless people who claim to do good, but they do that out of their pride and in order to attract others too to faithlessness. This is another evil masked as good. But the evil will get his mask off, after a while, because it cannot pretend anymore. And to them who have power of discernment, the evil cannot totally mask itself.

[757] In the true good that spring out of God, everything is clear and clean and sincere. And that good make the man whom that good it fulfilled by, and whom that good is imprinted within, to be at his turn: clear, clean and sincere. The apparent good, on the contrary, it will make the man meandrous, disturbed, pretending, searching for crooked ways and for dark sides. Through that good won't be accomplished the true and righteous and transparent and luminous man.

Question: We must always reckon the good things as good. But if it is proven that that that (😁) seemed to be good it is actually evil, one will have to reject it. Behold and example: If somebody sees a food and he reckoned that food as good, but after tasting it he ascertains that that is bitter and he immediately spits that off and he gets disgusted of it because of its bitterness, either because it is a nut, or an almond, or something else, he won't be guilty at all because of tasting that. But if after he has discovered that bitterness, he insists to eat that, and he fill his stomach up with that, he will be guilty because of his deed. Here too it is likewise. If the devil has mocked the man and the man finds that out and he tells: "Master, the evil one mocked me, please forgive me!", the Lord will forgive him. This is for the lord is merciful. You must know, my beloved one, that God doesn't allow somebody to be tempted above his power (1 Cor. 10: 13). Let's present to our Lord, in everything, our ask, and He will help us to discern between the true good and that that only seemingly is good. Him it is due the glory forever. Amen.

407. Question: If a thing seems to me according to God but a contrary thought opposes that and impedes me and tells me not to do that thing because of not being good, how can I know which one is the real good?

Answer: If a thing seems to you as being according to God, but a contrary thought opposes that, you could know out of that that that (😁) truly is according to God if, by praying, our heart strongly adheres to that thing and it trust increases instead of diminishing, and then the contrary thought either keeps bothering us or not, we will know that that thing is according to God. This is for the opposition to that good it bothers us because of the envy of the devil. But the good can be better proven by praying. And if that good is only an apparent good, and if it has been sneaked in to us by the devil that resists that good, then even that that seems to be good it will decrease in showing that as good, but it will also decrease the opposition of the enemy to it. This is because the enemy causes the appearance that right than thought sneaked in by him it opposes, so that by that he to deceive us to reckon that as good[758].

408. The question of the same one: So, what it will follow? When the good is done without trouble, it won't be from God; or, if it happened to me to do some small good without, I being bothered by some thought, will I have done that at an inappropriate time and God won't like that what will have been done? Please, Father, enlighten my heart!

Answer: If somebody did something good and there was no thought bothering him, he mustn't believe that he wouldn't fall into trouble. This is for every good is chained on the way to God and He is not a liar Who said: "Crooked and full of troubles is that way leading us to life" (Mt. 7: 14)[759]. This is because, even though there doesn't occur any trouble when that good is being done, it is needed the man to be troubled after that. And when somebody does the good zealously, he won't feel the trouble, but neither can we tall that he won't live that trouble, for the trouble come in many ways. This is for, if we want to look at this in more details, we will see the trouble either hidden into the vain-glory – this is because this too belongs to the troubles – or within a person who impeded us from seeing it (or us to do that good), or in the fact that after that we will need the thing we will have given by committing that benefaction[760]. This is because, by not having those at hand, we will turn ourselves towards the sorrow for giving them away. And, lo, that thought that bothers us won't be absent. So, we should not be sure [758] In the last place, the prayer done seriously, it will give us the possibility to decide whether a thing which we want to do is from God and so we should do that or not. The prayer gets us out of the doubt if a thought truly is from God or that thought is only apparently from God.

[759] The man who does the good is strengthened on two ways: by the fact that he does that good and by the fact that he courageously endures the trouble that will be caused him by the good he has done. This is because both from the devil and form the weakness imprinted within us and within others, there will occur an opposition to that good which we want to do or which we have done it (in order to pull us backwards).

[760] The trouble intertwines within the good done by us it can be as well hidden into our vain-glory, or in telling about it, braggingly, to somebody else etc. Those are forms which do not bother us, but neither they allow us to advance by doing that good. Only is train ourselves also in the struggle for removing these sinful shadows from the good, we will truly get strengthened, or we will truly advance int our true freedom from the evil, into the fully authentic man.

before time. This is because the unwise ones are waited for the trouble even after that. This is for he says: "I have prepared myself and I hasn't been troubled" (Ps. 118: 60[761]). And blessed is him who always has in front of his eyes the thought that "of God if the earth and its fullness" (Ps. 23: 1[762]) and who cogitates that powerful is God for providing as He wishes the things of His servants. One who does that won't feel sorry because of the things he has bestowed. And if the trouble comes upon us, we will know that God will have allowed us. This is for God never overlooks them who fear Him, especially on those who work on His behalf.

409. Question: Does the man think at certain good out of his will?

Answer: It often happens that somebody thinks at something good out of the movement of his natural thought. But that also must be attributed to God. This is for the nature is the creation of God. And we must know that we won't be able to bring such a good thing to its end except through the commandment of God. This is for by placing God's commandment in front of our eyes, our heart will be strengthened in order to fulfill that good[763].

410. Question: When I do something good, must I humble my thought? And how will I uphold within me my self-appreciation once I will have done that good?

[761] In KJB we have: Ps. 119: 60: "I made haste, and delayed not to keep thy commandments."; in ROB we have: Ps. 118: 60: "I was ready and I didn't get trouble to keep Your commandments." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[762] In KJB we have: Ps. 24: 1: "THE earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof; the world, and they that dwell therein."; in ROB we have: "Of the Lord is the earth and its fullness; and the world and all of those who inhabit it." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[763] The awareness about God and the knowledge about some commandments issued by God, it will strengthen us to fulfill an aspiration towards good as sown within our nature. This is for such a fulfillment requires effort which our weakened nature doesn't easily make it. The good intentions are still far from their accomplishment. Between wanting to master yourself and you reaching to do that, there is a long distance.

Answer: In order to humble your thought, after you have done all the good and after you have kept the commandments, you will remember Him Who said: "After you will have done all of these, you will say that worthless servants we are, for we have done that what we owed to" (Lk. 17: 10). How much more must we humble our thought because of not having us reached to fulfill even one commandment. And we always must take care of what we haven't fulfilled yet, and we must despise us for any good deed of ours, by saying: "We do not know if it is pleasant to God (Paterikon, Agathon: 29). Actually, going the will of God in a deed, it is a big deal. This is for that it consists of fulfilling all the commandments[764]. Doing the will of God in a deed it still is only a part – and even a very small part of that – of fulfilling it. That's why the Apostle said: "By forgetting about the things from behind and by stretching myself towards the things from ahead" (Phi. 3: 13). So, as long as one tends forwards, he won't stop, but he will always see himself as not having yet reached his target and as advancing towards his target. This is for the Apostle himself said: "As many as we are consummate, let's think at this" (Phil. 3: 18) so we will advance[765]. But he also said this: "And if you think at other things too, God will unveil to you these things too" (Phil. 3: 15)[766].

411. The question of the same one: When I keep a commandment, how can I escape my pride, in order I to realize if I truly have committed a good, or I am foreign to that good?

[764] The Volos Edition commenting the word from above that "we haven't reached to fulfill even one commandment", it says: "We might have not reached to fulfill it according to all the circumstances depending on the person, on the place, on the time, and on the cause, and consummately and the most zealously". Each commandment of God expresses His whole will referring to the whole creation. Only Him can wholly fulfill that. If we had fulfilled God's will totally, that would; have meant a total identification of us to Him. But we continuously advance in evermore-fully fulfilling His will.

[765] Being consummate means, according to Saint Apostle Paul, to continuously tending higher. This is the consummation of the man: the continuous tension, the non-stopping, the non-sliding downwards. It is a going on consummation, by constantly aiming at the final target. In this we experience God Who is always transcendent, and towards Whom we ceaselessly transcend, according to Gregory of Nyssa.

[766] Even Saint Paul admitted that one could think at something else as well, and that's why he didn't dare to clarify that things too, but he hoped that God will enlighten that person.

Answer; Brother, we must reckon the good deeds as goo and we must run towards them for they are good. We mustn't consider the good as evil except in case that one doesn't do the good as it is pleasant to God. And this one is done evil because of the lack of discernment (of right-reckoning) of him who does that. The must must strive himself to always do the good and then him who lack the power will be given by the grace of God to do that good in the fear of God. And if the good is done through you, you will thank to the Giver of the good things as to Him Whom the good belongs to. Ad you will despise yourself, by saying: "If I too helped to being this thing fulfilled, I too would be partaker to the good". And then you will see yourself praying to God into the pricking of your heart, so that God to found you worthy of the good committed through you[767].

412. Question of the same one towards the same one: If it happens to me to prove long-patience to something, I will be engulfed by the thought of my pride. What should I cogitate at in such a case?

Answer: I told you before that if it happens to you to do any good, you must know that that good is a gift from God bestowed to you due to God's kindness. This is for God has mercy on all people. But take heed at yourself, lest because of your weakness you to lose His mercy had by Him on all sinners. So, if you gave in a good manner, you should not lose that what you have been given in an evil manner[768]. And the way of losing [767] Here are give four moment in fulfilling the good: a) strive yourself to do the good; b) ask God for the power you to do the good; c) if the good has been done, you will thank to God for being that good done and you won't reckon yourself as having done that good; d) if you have done it so, the prayer full of humbleness and of repentance for the thought of glory that has come to you, it will make you partaker too to the good done through you. By striving and by asking God for help, we will reach to be the good fulfilled through us, but the good wont' be fulfilled only by us. By giving thanks through prayer with humbleness and with repentance because of the thought that has come to us, we will be too made partaker to the good done through us. We can give only our striving and our ask for help. Our thankful prayer with humbleness and with repentance stops us from getting haughty as we would have been the ones who had done the good. And we will become partaker to the done good only by that, and ourselves will become good.

[768] It is being repeated here that what was said in the previous letter: God could do a good through you, as He can do through all the sinners. This is for any good comes from God. But if you attribute to yourself the good done through you (as through a physical agent), you won't be made partaker to that good, but you will remain exterior to that good. Your pride this thing is the following: to praise on yourself that you have had long-patience and to forget about God Who has done the good. By doing that, you won't only lose your good, but you will also bring damnation upon yourself, because of you daring to attribute to yourself that what you should rather give thanks for, to the loving-of-people God. This is for the Apostle says: "What do you have and you haven't been given that?" (1 Cor. 4: 7). And to your thought that praises you for any kind of things, you will answer that thought of yours by telling it that they who sail on the sea, even though could happen to them to enjoy some peace, they still must expect storm to come, and danger, and shipwreck. This is for the short time of peace won't assure then against those. They will be safe only after entering the harbor. And many saw their ships getting wrecked at the harbor's entrance. It is alike in the case of the sinner, as long as he still is withing world, he always must tremble because of fearing his sinking. Do not ever allow yourself to be deceived by believing your thought which praises you for a good deed of yours. This is for the good belongs to God and we must not be sure that the good willer main within us, given our carelessness. And how dare we gat haughty in our thought?

314. Question: If I tell to my thought, in order to humble it, that neither the long-patience has come to me from God, but it has come to me from the evil one in order to push me into pride, won't I anger God because of I doing that, given the fact that all the good things come from God?

Answer: It is not evil to say that your long-patience hasn't come from God. This is for God doesn't get angry on that, for you tell that in order to destroy your evil thought. Actually, a certain one among the saints talked about the donkey dead on the road to those people who came to visit him (Paterikon, Anthony: 12). And those visitors wondered about where he will estrange you from any good done through you. Only by being you aware of encountering God and only by keeping you this connection with God, you too will be united with God as a subject, for God is the supreme Subject of the good. Getting separated from God will make you non-partaker to God's kindness, and it will make the good unassimilated to your person. The individualistic affirmation has nothing good in it, because of begin the fruit of the egotism. This is for the good commits the communion with all the people, or the kindness is one with the communion with all the people into God.

knew that from, and he answered them: "The devils told me that", though the knowledge about what happened it came to him from God. But he told that in order his visitors to benefit of it[769]. And he didn't anger God.

414. Question: If it happened to the sinner to have visions, mut him by any means not to believe those as coming from God?

Answer: If that happens to a sinner it will be obvious that it has come to him from the cunning devils, in order they to deceive that miserable soul towards perdition. So, the sinner must never believe those visions, but he must confess his sins and his weakness and he smut always live in fear and tremble.

415. Question: Must we do the same when the image of our Lord Christ appears to us, or should I turn our face away from it?

Answer: all the more we must turn our eyes away from that cunningness and deceit, and we must give that vision to anathema. Do not ever allow yourself, brother, to be you deluded by this devilish work. The saints are partakers to godlike visions, but those visions always are preceded by quietude, by peace, and by a joy within their hearts. And despite knowing the truth, they will reckon themselves as unworthy of that. All the more must the sinners not believe such views, by knowing that they are unworthy of them.

416. Question: Tell me, Father, how dares the devil show us our Master Christ or the Holy Impartation, either in vision or in a hallucination of our dreams?

Answer: The devil cannot show us on our Master Christ Himself, neither can the devil show us the Holy Impartation, but he only lies and he only tale the countenance of some man [769] He told that in order himself not to be tempted by pride for being in such a tight connection with God so that God teel him things happening at distance. He said "from the devils" in order him to show that those ones can add their temptation to that foretelling.

or of the simple bread. But the devils surely cannot show us the holy cross, because of not finding another image which the devil could imitate the cross with. This is for in the holy cross the whole devil's power have been abolished, and through the holy cross the devil has received the deadly blow[770]. Ww do not know our Master Christ according to the body and that's why the devil attempts to convince us by lying to us that he is Him, in order us to believe that deceit as true, so that we to be destroyed. So, if you see in your dreams the sign of the cross, you will know that that dream is true and it is from God. But you will hurry up to receive the assurance from the saints that that vision has been true, and you won't trust your thought[771].

[770] The devil doesn't promise you the happiness by enduring the cross. It is true that there are also people who accept to die for an ideal. But that is an earthly ideal. No one accept to suffer for the true consummation of a spiritual order, and no one renounce forever to the earthly life for the happy life from after death. Through Christ's cross has been showed that no temptation from the devil leads to the true life. The whole temptation power of the devil has been destroyed through cross. Accepting the cross means the man renouncing even to his pride as attractive means which one could gain happiness through. That's why the member of some form of Christendom who reject the cross, they cannot reject their pride of being saved by themselves, or by themselves too. Through cross itself the death as upheld by the devil as "dead life" has been killed.

On the other hand, the cross is one in its sense and shape, so that it cannot be replaced for something imitating the cross. But the persons are many and each human face reflects a different souly content, especially regarding the good and the evil, but each of them having the possibility of imitating somebody else in that regard, up to a certain point. In this it is given also the possibility that the people can be deceived by their fellow humans who can take the countenance of the good when they actually are evil. And in this too, it is given the possibility that the devil can put on an image of an apparently good human being, or even imitating the image of Christ. But this doesn't mean that we mustn't pain the icon of Christ, for the icon doesn't claim being the Person of Christ Himself, as any hallucination about Christ claims it. The icon doesn't ask us to take it as Christ's reality and so us to worship the icon as we do to the original, as the hallucination urges us to do. This is for the icon invites us to transcend it, in order the icon to place us in unseen connection with the original.

[771] In the Volos Edition: "The saint reassures the reader. This is for, by telling him than if the sign of the cross appears in his dream, that dream will be true, but he still asks the reader, in continuation, not to trust his own thought but to ask the saints and him to get reassured about that thought by the saints. This is for many times, by thinking that some people have seen the sign of the cross in their sleep, but they have seen it confusedly and indistinctly, and not distinctly and limpidly; or they have seen together with the sign of the cross other strange and inappropriate images. Out of that one can see that that dream too has bene out of the enemy's deceit. It turns out then, that the best and surest thing to do it one not to believe to any of his dreams. This is "because many were lost because of their dreams" says Sirach. (It is about the book called The Wisdom of Joshua the Son of Sirach (The Ecclesiastes), a book that is not given in the KJB, but it is given in the ROB. The interested reader can download it from free, from www.academia.edu, together with other thirteen books, under the title Bible Missing Texts (E. l. t.'s n.))

May our Lord enlighten the thoughts of your understanding, brother, in order you to escape the while deceit form the enemy.

417. Question: My thought tells me: "If the holy cross will appear to you, because of being you worthless, do not get pride". And this cause me fear.

Answer: Do not worry about that. This is for, it the holy cross appears to you, the holy cross will banish away from you the breath of your pride[772]. This is for there where God is, there won't be any evil[773].

418: Question: I have heard that if a one dreams the same dream for three times, that will be a sign that that dream has been true. Is it so, Father?

Question: It isn't so. One must not believe either to such a dream. This is because of that he who has shown himself once to somebody, through lie, he can do that for three times or even for many times. So, do not let yourself to be mocked, but you smut take heed at yourself, brother.

419. Question: Sometimes I see within my heart cunning thoughts stalking around my cogitation, as some beasts, but without causing me any harm. What is this?

[772] The sign of the cross produces us humbleness when we look at it with faith. This is for we see that our salvation has come to us by the fact that Christ humbled Himself to the death. Only through that it comes to us too. This is for we have done nothing in order us to be saved. And if we believe that we save ourselves on our own, namely if we get haughty, we won't be saved, because of not believing us into the holy cross. So, the one looking at the cross with pride and with despise, he shows that he doesn't believe in the cross and by not humbling on himself he won't be saved. This is because of remaining him trusting his own powers which will be in the end proven as helpless.

[773] There where the cross is, there God is. Where there the cross is, there is the announcement that we cannot be saved by ourselves, and that neither God Himself saves us through a commanding act of pride, but God does that by descending to us, and in that descent, there is His true love for us. So, the cross shows us the true God Who cannot be proud or an avenger or a dominator, but God is gentle and humble and loving of people. There where the cross is, there can be seen the true God Whom nothing evil can be within.

Answer: This is a deceit from the enemy having hidden in it the pride, aiming to convince you that the evil thoughts cannot make you do any evil and so your heart to get haughty. But do not let yourself to be deceived. And remember your weakness and your sins. And call upon the name of God to help you against the enemy[774].

420. Question: Can somebody say that the Holy Ghost dwell within a sinner? And if he says, Father, that the Holy Ghost doesn't dwell within the sinners, what are the sinners protected like?

The saints are found worthy of having the Holy Ghost and they become His dwelling place (temple). This is for he says: "I will dwell and I will walk within them" (Lev. 26: 12; 2 Cor. 6: 16). And the sinners are strangers to Him[775], according to the saying: "within the cunning soul there won't enter wisdom" (Wisdom[776] 6: 4). But they are protected by the Ghost's kindness. Let's raise thanks to His untold kindness and to His love for people. For Him it is due the glory forever. Amen.

[774] You may on occasions think at woman, at money, at drink, as the possibility of boasting yourself, but you do not feel yourself tempted to do the sinful deeds related to those thoughts. But itself your trust of standing strong by yourself, it is a sin. So, your must call upon the name of God in such situations as well, in order you to wake up your conscience that you owe your peace to God. This is because, from pride, you can very easily slide to some sin which the mentioned thoughts tell you about. Only your dialogue with God will protect you against your pride, by showing to you how small you are and how Great God is. You must never have the conscience that you are alone, either in good or in bad. The sentiment that you are alone in the good things it will associate itself with your pride; in evil things, with the desperation. Only out of your communion with God you can have your humbleness, your peace, your hope, and your trust. And when you call upon the name of God, God Himself will come and be present. We cannot place ourselves in connection with somebody who is at a distance from us, except by calling upon his name, or by thinking at his name.

[775] The Volos Edition: "He maybe says that the sinners are stranger to His work, but not also to His power. This is for they who have been baptized, and who have received the grace of the Ghost, even if they commit sins afterwards, they will still have within their heart the grace of the Ghost, but through power and like a spark chocked by passions, and not as work, as the Ghost is within the saints.

[776] Unidentified. It could be either: The Book of the Wisdom of Solomon or The Book of the Wisdom of Joshua the Son of Sirach (The Ecclesiastes), but the content doesn't match. These books are not given in the KJB but they are given in ROB. The interested reader can download, for free, all the fourteen missing books from www.academia.edu, under the title Bible Missing Texts. (E. l. t.'s n.)

421. Question: If an am in some trouble and I pray and the untold kindness of God helps me, my thought will get haughty for being heard. What should I do?

Answer: If by praying, you have achieved that what you have been asking for, and that's why you have got haughty, it will be obvious that you haven't prayed according to God, neither have you received the help from God, but you have been under the work of the devils in order your heart to get proud. This is for, if the help comes from God, the soul won't get haughty, but the soul rather gets humble and the soul wonders about the great mercy of God Who deigns to have mercy on sinners, despite they are unworthy and they always get upset. The soul wonders about the fact that God doesn't give us according to our sins, but God, in His abundant patience, He overlooks our sins and He suffers us for a long time, and He has mercy on us. That's why the soul won't get proud, but the soul will tremble and glorify God.

422. The question of the same one: I asked you, Father, about the long-patience, and you answered me that both the long-patience and any good deed are gifts from God. And after that, you also told me about prayer and about the help consequent to prayer, that they are not from God. Explain me, I beg you, the meaning of these ones.

Answer: If the good deed or the prayer have been accompanied since the beginning by vain-glory, they have been, doubtlessly, devilish. But if they haven't had in the beginning the vain-glory within them, but they have received it later on, you will have destroyed that what was being done well, like somebody who erects a wall and then after he will tear that wall down. But if your vain-glory has attacked you, but you haven't received it, you will have not been harmed in anything.

423. Question: Often, when I utter the psalms, I feel myself getting proud. What should I tell to this thought?

Answer: When your heart got haughty (proud) during the utterance of the psalms, you should remember that it was written: "Let them who rebel not to get haughty within themselves" (Ps. 65: 6). And rebelling means not reading wisely, with the fear of God. So, you should examine if your thought goes around scattered while you are uttering the psalms. And you will find out, without any doubt, that your thought gets scattered and you anger God.

424. Question: When I get burdened by my thoughts, either when uttering the psalms, or without that, and I call upon the name of God to my help, the enemy whispers me that that is a pride I to reckon that I do good by ceaselessly remembering God. What should I do when this happens to me?

Answer: We know that the ill ones always need the physician and the medicines from him; and they who have been caught by a storm they run towards the harbor lets their ship gets wrecked. That's why the prophet too, he shouts out: "Lord, You have made Yourself our escape from generation to generation" (Ps. 89: 1[777]); and again: "God is our escape and our power, and He is help in the troubles which surround us very" (Ps. 45: 1[778]). And if He is our escape, let's remember that He says: "Call upon Me on the day of your trouble and I will deliver you and you will extoll Me" (Ps. 49: 16[779]). Let's therefore know that if the trouble has arrived, we will have to ceaselessly call upon the merciful God. But by calling upon Him, let's not get us haughty in our thought. This is for, if somebody isn't crazy, he won't boast himself when menaced by his enemy. And if we are not mindless, let's not get haughty in our thought. This is for we have call upon Him when we need that and we run to Him

[777] In KJB we have: Ps. 90: 1: "LORD, thou hast been our dwelling place in all generations."; in ROB we have: Ps. 89: 1: "Lord, You have made Yourself our escape, from generation to generation." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[778] In KJB we have: Ps. 46: 1: "GOD is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble."; in ROB we have: Ps. 45: 1: "God is our escape and our power, and He is our help into the troubles which surround us." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[779] In KJB we have: Ps. 50: 15: "And call upon me in the day of trouble: I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify me."; in ROB we have: Ps. 49: 16: "And call Me on the day of your trouble and I will deliver you and you will extoll Me." (E. l. t.'s n.)

surrounded by trouble. In addition to all of these, we know that ceaselessly calling upon God's name it is a medicine destroying not only the passions but their work itself. This is for, as the physician imposes the medicine, or as he places a bandage on a wound, and by that the physician works without the sick one known how he does it, likewise the name of God called by us it removes, without us knowing how, all our passions.

425. Question: When my thought[780] seems to be peaceful and undisturbed, is it good then too to persevere in calling upon the name of Master Christ? I aske this because it sneaks in the thought that, once we are in peace, we no longer need to do that.

Answer: We must not trust such a peace, if we know about ourselves that we are sinners[781]. This is for the Lord says: "There is no peace to the sinners" Isa. 48: 22). So, if the sinners have no peace, what peace will this be? Let's fear it. This is because it was written: "When I say peace and quietude, then unnoticedly the perdition comes upon them, as the pain of her who has conceived, and they won't escape" (1 Thes. 5: 3). Sometimes it happens that the enemies too, because of their cunningness, they bring some peace to the heart, in order the heart to call the name of God. But we know that the ceaseless calling upon the name of God it annoys him and it weakens him. By knowing this, let's not cease to call upon the name of God to our help. This is for this is a prayer[782]. And we are told:

[780] Almost always it is used in these "Letters" the term "thought" for a state of conscience, for a certain existential state of the conscience. The conscience is, on one hand, the awareness about the self, while on the other hand the conscience is this knowing about the self gets sharpened, it is determined, and it takes the shape of a certain existential disposition. The conscience doesn't remain cold, neutral, though, theoretically, we can discern between the general awareness about the self and this existential quality of it, as between the sea and its always changing wave.

[781] There is too a short period of peace of the beast that has got satiated, or of the man who has momentarily satisfied his pleasure. It is the peace of the body tired by the spasms from during the pleasure. But the passion will again wake up soon.

[782] By calling upon the name of God with love, with praise, with thankfulness for the received help, the soul tells to himself everything that God is to him. And at each time, according to the state and to the need of that moment. It is like a mother uttering the name of her child, she brings within her soul the whole being of her child with everything that characterizes her child, but as she sees her child on that moment. The name isn't only a copy of the whole, but the name is his real whole, one that without ceasing to exist outside too, it is also within the one uttering that name.

"Pray ceaselessly" (1 Thes. 5: 17). And "ceaselessly" is that that has no limit or measure.

426. Question: When the people or the thought from within my heart[783] praise me and I see myself burdened by that thought, what should I do with that thought?

Answer: If your thought praises you and you cannot overlook it, you will strive yourself to call upon the name of God, and you will tell to your thought: it is written: "My people, they who bless you, they deceive you, and they crook up the path of your feet" (Isa. 3: 11). This is because, brother, this praise is nothing else but a deceit, it is told by the prophet: "Any man is grass and the whole man's glory is like the grass's flower" (Isa. 40: 6). And about the fact that him who receives the praise from the people doesn't have any benefit from it, it is told by the Master Himself: "How can you believe in me and receive the praise from the people?" (Jn. 5: 44). And if something is done according to God, we must think that "he who praises himself, let him praise himself into the Lord" (1 Cor. 1: 31). Thus, the Apostle who reached great measures, he didn't praise into himself, but he said: "By the grace of God I am what I am" (1 Cor. 15: 10)[784]. Him it is truly due the glory and the greatness forever. Amen.

427. Question: If, therefore, I sing psalms, or I read, and an inappropriate thought occurs to me, will I take heed at that thought and will I stop singing psalms or praying or reading, so that I to resist that thought by using other thoughts?

[783] The conscience out of feeling, the conscience united with the feeling.

[784] The temptation of praising ourselves it breaks us apart from the connection with the great reality that is not from us. Alone, and without the means we have at hand through people and from the nature that is not from people, a nature that includes also a part of our being, but which God is also worker into, we wouldn't be able to do anything. But everything that is put at our disposition by God and by others, it won't abolish the border between them and us. They remain persons and we cannot assimilate them. Likewise, either the nature put at our disposition by a supreme Person, it cannot unplug us, neither can we assimilate that nature wholly. All the more the supreme Person is defended by His border, regardless how much we communicate with Him through what He gives us; but He neither abolished us.

Answer: Despise that thought at take heed with all the care at singing the psalms, at praying, and at reading, in order you to be able to take power from those. This is because, if we accept to occupy ourselves with the thoughts from the enemy, we won't ever be able to do anything. And this is what the enemy aims at. And when you see the thoughts' perseverance to impede you from singing psalms, or from praying, or from reading, neither then will you fight them. This is because it doesn't depend on your power. But you msut call upon the name of God to your help and He will come to your help and He will banish away the enemy's plots[785]. This is for His is the power and the glory forever. Amen.

428. Question: How can one earn the repentance (the pricking of the heart) by prayer, by reading, and by singing psalms?

Answer: The repentance (the pricking of the heart) comes to the man form the ceaseless recalling (of his sins). So, when somebody prays, while praying he must recall his past deeds and so he must think at what will be judged like those who have committed such deeds. Let him think at the fearsome word: "Go away from Me, you the cursed ones, into the eternal fire" (Mt. 25: 4). And by recalling one's sins I mean not each sin individually, lest by remembering something the enemy to cause him another slavery. But let's recall only that we are sunk into the debt of the sins[786]. And after that, if the callousness continues, let it not stop (the recalling). This is for, often, God allows that in order to test a man, whether he perseveres (into the prayer accompanied by recalling his sins"[787].

[785] Only the conscience of the presence of God, waken up by the calling of His name, it can attract the soul form an inappropriate thought. Only that conscience of the presence of God will get me beyond the limit of my powers. Other thoughts invoked by me against a certain thought won't be able to help me defeating that thought, because of being those thoughts upheld by my weak power.

[786] There are also sins which must be recalled in a specified manner, but other sins must not be called like that, in order they not to tempt to be repeated. The first sins are mostly characteristic to the laymen: abortions, not helping someone, not visiting an ill person, not taking care of parents etc. That's' why at the monks it has been born the habit to say in prayer only: "Lord Jesus Christ, have mercy on me the sinner".

[787] From here was born the concentrated prayer mentioned above. He have in this answer and in the following answer, a subtle analysis of this theme.

Regarding the reading and the singing of psalms, you need your mind to pay attention to the said things, and you need your soul to try and understand the things comprised in what the mind says, and if there are goods let your mind aspire to them; and if there is about punishing the evil deeds, let your mind aspire to escape the menace waiting for those who commit such evil deeds, let your mind persevere in remembering God and in recalling your sins, even if the callousness continues. This is for merciful and long-patient is God and He receives our striving. You must always remember him who said: "Waiting, I have been waiting for the Lord and He took heed at me" (Ps. 39: 1[788]). By persevering into these, you must trust that the mercies of God will soon lean towards you.

429. Question: When I force myself to take heed at the meanings of the psalmody, it often happens to me they to occasion me ugly thoughts.

Answer: If you see that the enemy plots to stir up war to you right from the words of the psalmody, you won't try to find out the exact meaning of the things you utter, but you must only utter those with watchfulness and without scattering. This is for, if you utter those words and only the enemies know their meanigns, the enemies won't be able to resist you. And your psalmody will also keep the place of asking God for destroying your enemies.

430. Question: If during the psalmody or when I am among people, I am troubled by thoughts and I call upon the name of God within my heart, because of not being able to utter God's name with my mouth, and if I think only at God, will that suffice to help me?

Answer: If at the time of psalmody, or among people, you feel the need for calling upon God, you won't think that if you do not utter His name with your mouth, you won't call Him. But you must think at the fact that God heart-knower, and you must take heed at your heart and you must call Him within your heart. This if rot that is what the Scripture says: "lock up your door and pray to your Father hiddenly" (Mt. 6: 6). The Scripture asks us to shut up our mouth and us to pray to the Father within our heart. So, he who shuts his mouth up, or he who prays to God within his heart, he will accomplish the mentioned commandment. And if you do not call upon God's name within your heart, but you only think at God, you will reach your target even quicker than calling upon His name[789]. And this will suffice in order you to receive His help.

[788] In KJB we have: Ps. 40: 1: "I WAITED patiently for the Lord; and he inclined unto me,"; in ROB we have: Ps. 39: 1: "Waiting I have been waiting for the Lord and He has leaned towards me." (E. l. t.'s n.)

431. Question: Is it then good to somebody to always think at God in his heart, or him to always pray, without him having the together-working of his tongue? When this happens to me, my thought sinks and I feel myself burdened and it seems to me that I see some sorts of things and of hallucinations and I am like in a dream.

Answer: Only the consummate ones can reach that stage, for they are able to guide their mind and to keep it in the fear of God, in order their mind not to start wandering on all sides and so the mind to get sunk in the deepest scattering and in all sorts of imaginings[790]. But him who cannot always keep his [789] Thinking at God, it places you even more quickly, or more directly, in connection with God, than remembering His name within your heart; at its turn, remembering God's name within your heart it will place you more quickly than by uttering His name with your mouth. Nothing is quicker than the thought. The thought comprises, directly, the indefinite of the person. The name of the person determines that indefinite to some extent, or it make you enter the Person's indeterminate by a determinate word. But you must have been progressed much in often remembering God's name in order you to be able to think at God often and without using the word. The word is more in your power than the thought. He who reaches to think often or permanently at God, he will have imprinted the whole content of his thinking or of his souly feeling with the thought at God.

[790] There is also a sinking, better said a clogging up, into an endless scattering and imagination. From an idea you pass to another idea which seems to you deeper than the first idea, or you pass from an imagining to another imagining because of seeming that to you as more interesting; and so on. You are sinking yourself like in a labyrinth. To him who is no longer able to keep his thought attached to God, tying his thought to a word, or to the name of God, it will be helpful. He who keeps his thought attached to God without the help of the word, he keeps his thought attached to the same Person-like God Whom he keeps his thought attached to, by name as well, or by the words of the prayer as well. God is a Person-like-God waken thought at God, he will catch this thought of his and he will tie it to his tongue. Let's give an example: Look at them who swim in the se. They who are more skillful at swimming, they daringly throw themselves into the sea for they know they won't drown. But him who is a beginner to swimming, when he feels himself sinking into the deep of the waters, because he fears of drowning, he will pluck himself out of the sea towards the shore. And after a short period of catching his breath, he will throw himself again into the sea in order him to learn by that how to swim, until he will reach the measure of the ones who are consummate swimmers.

432. Question: What is that that says somebody among Fathers that the entrance of the thoughts is not condemnable, but using them in an evil manner it is condemnable? And Abba Joseph told to one of the brothers: "Cutt off your thoughts quickly", and to another he told: "Let your thoughts enter and talk to them and you will reach to be an experience man" (Paterikon, Joseph of Panephysis: 3).

Answer: The entrance of the thoughts equals their sowing. And that is not a condemnable thing. But using the thoughts in an evil manner, it means agreeing them. This is a condemnable thing. And the difference between letting the thought enter or cutting them off immediately, it is this: he who can resist them and he who can fight them without being defeated, let him allow them enter; and he who is weak and who cannot resist the thoughts, but he knows that he will agree them, let him cut them off and let him run to God.

433. Question: When I am somewhere and there are the relics of the holy martyrs, my thought pushed me to go for many times and to bow down before those. And each time I pass by them my thought urges me to bow my head down. Should I do that?

Who has a personal will, and Who wants to save us in His quality as Person. He who thinks like this, he won't sink himself into a chaotic pantheism that can justify your most nonsensical contradictory thoughts, claiming that all the realities are implied into an essence reckoned as God.

Answer: You should not do that. If you bow down once, that will suffice. So, do not listen to that thought. When you are not pushed by that thought, you bow down by your own decision, for three times. This is because I have heard that the things done with disturbance and with sadness and all the superfluous things come from the devils (Paterikon, Pimen: 129). Likewise, it will suffice if you bow down your head once or at most trice. And do that without being forced by a certain thought.

434. Question: On occasions, I am engulfed by a fear that asks me go inside and pray.

Answer: Do not enter because you fear, but enter at the due time driven by your will to pray to God and to the saints for your salvation.

435. Question: You told me that I should not enter because of fear. But when I want to enter and pray for my salvation, the fear that engulfs me it urges me to stop my prayer for the commandment give to me by you regarding that fear.

Answer: Let not your fear stop you[791]. But you must enter and pray. Do not give any importance to your fear. Do not let your fear either to move you to prayer or to stop you from praying. And you must do all the things at their time and with the fear of God[792].

[791] Let not the fear make you enter the church to pray. But neither let your fear stop you.

[792] Here is expressed the difference between fear (δειλια) and the fear of God (φόβος θεόν). The first one may be the fear of something that can happen to the man within world; the second one is the fear of the judgment of God, the fear of losing the eternal life. This may be one with the discernment done by Heidegger between Furcht and Angst. The "fear" keeps the man tied to this world and it urges the man to pray for some success in the world or for defending himself against some unsuccess in the world. The "fear of God" ties the man to the life form above world and it urges the man to pray for his salvation, in order him not to be lost in the world.

436. I am pushed with restlessness to mark (to seal) myself for many times, either at night, or during the day. What should I do?

Answer: If we do that with watchfulness, it will suffice us to do it even for once, wither at night or during the day. This is for, if we believe that the first sela remains indelible, we won't need a second one. This is because wanting us a second one, it will mean that we do not reckon the first one as persisting[793]. One can see this also out of what is done within world. If sone seals a treasury and the first seal lasts, there won't be needed another sealing. But this is caused by the demons to lead one to carelessness and inattention, in order him not to do that with more watchfulness and cleanly, even though we do that only once. That's why it is good to do this less, but with the fear of God. This will be more beneficial to us than doing it for many times and with disturbance form the enemies. This is for he says: "Better is the little of the righteous" (Ps. 36: 16[794]). I am saying this for the case when the disturbance gets mixed into watchfulness, and so it pushes us to do something at inappropriate time. This is for, when we see our thought rejoicing that we seal on ourselves neither out of fear nor with disturbance, we use that as of something done with the fear of God. This is for that what is done out of own will it is more pleasant to God.

437. Question: When I seal myself with my left hand, because of not being I able to seal myself with my right hand, do I do something inappropriate?

Answer: So far, when I want to seal my right hand, I use my felt hand.

[793] It seems to be here about a custom practiced by the monks living back then into monasteries and who used to "seal" themselves more often with the sign of the cross, with sanctified oil. The question asks whether is good one to do that in the morning and in the evening, or for several times during day and night (σφραγίζω).

[794] In KJB we have: Ps. 37: 16: "A little that a righteous man hath is better than the riches of many wicked."; in ROB we have: Ps. 36: 16: "Better is the little of the righteous, than the much richness of the sinners." (E. l. t.'s n.)

438. When I pray for many things, should I mention each one of the things in my prayers?

Answer: If you want to pray for many things, once God knows the things you need, you should pray, saying: "Master, Lord Jesus Christ, guide me according to your will"[795]. And if you want to pray against your passions, you will say: "Heal me according to Your will"[796]. And if you pray against temptations, you will say: "You know what is beneficial to me, please help my weakness, and put an end to my temptations according to Your will".

439. Question: If I tarried a little longer to prayer, should I persevere in uttering the same words?

Answer: Not necessarily. But you should persevere in understanding those words. You should take heed only at this: you ask to be done according to the will of God Who can give everything; you must take heed at the purpose of the prayer to [795] In this Christ feels, as He is a Person non-confounded to me, that I take heed at His will. In living the will of the another, I feel him as a person having a border which I cannot cross it over, as a person whom I cannot confound myself to. When I want to cross over another because of my pride, I will actually no longer know about another person whom I should remain in communion with, and I will lose the experiencing of my own person too. The pride and the pantheism are tightly united. By accepting the will of Christ to be done with my will, I won't either abolish myself as person, but I will get united with Him in the communion of love. I know that He will do with me that what makes me happy, that what gives me a keen conscience of my own person, in communion with Him. Properly-said, that what makes me happy is the communion with another person and, consummately, with the Person of Christ. The another had a border. But himself opens that border to me, without abolishing it. And I will feel both as having a border and opening that border to me, out of love. I myself do not cross over him, without his will. He has a nature like mine, to some extend common, which he increases with the nature from within me. But he has put on his nature his seal and he will communicate his nature to me with his will. This produces me a double-joy: that I am receiving something related to me and that increases me, but also that I am receiving that b y his will, out of his love. This is that what actually rejoices me, and it give me life. This mystery has its culminant degree in the Holy Trinity and it is upheld among us by the Holy trinity. One can speak within the Holy Trinity about a sole will and still about three Persons Who will.

[796] Even by asking Christ for His will to be done within you, regarding your passions, you will be healed of your passions, for you renounce to the pride of your egotism.

be fulfilled, and that purpose is to fulfill that what we ask according to the will of God[797].

440. Question: If somebody wants to manage some things in rightly-believer manner, or if he wants to send those things to somebody for the good pleasure of God, but he doesn't know how to do that and he neither finds guidance from the Fathers, what will he have to say in prayer?

Answer: Let him pray like this: "Lord, I am in Your hands. You know what is beneficial to me. Please guide me according to Your will and do not let me wander by an ill-usage of these things. This is for the things are Yours and You master over them. Rule You, as a Master, so that I will use them into Your fear[798]. For Yours is the glory forever. Amen".

441. Question: When I sit or when I read, or when I do some manual labor, and I want to pray, my thought tells me to orient myself towards East. What should I do, Father?

Answer: Either you sit or you walk, either you eat or you do something else, either you satisfy a need of your body, you [797] This is that what we mainly must aim at by praying: that our will to be united with the will of God, so that we to open ourselves to God's love for us, and that our border to be open towards Him and His border to be open to us; so that God to communicate top us, for His love, as much as possible from Himself, but without Him to abolish us, but by Him strengthening us in order us too to open ourselves to this love of His. We tell God in prayer that what we feel that we need, but we let Him to fulfill our ask according to how He knows and according to what He wants, and in this too we show our union with Him, without ours of His abolishment as persons; in our prayer we actually ask for Him to come within us, for thought Him comes to us everything.

[798] We are not the ultimate masters of the things or of the nature. We are only their administrators according to the will of God Who knows what they should be used like, for the benefit of all of us. That's why the individuals must not make themselves the master of the things and of the nature, righting and doing injustice to one another, because of the material things, neither must do that the general institutions favoring certain collectivities. Only for it has been given to us in order us to administrate it for our benefit, it is told in Genesis: "Master the earth" (Gen. 1: 28). But we must not forgive about the fact that we must use the things with love for one another and with gratitude for Him Who has given then to us, and we must take in account the fundamental conditions which the things can be beneficial to us both bodily and spiritual; and we must also take in account the will of God Who on each occasion watches for they to be used according to that benefit. That's why we start doing any deed, or we start using each thing, after marking upon it the sign of the cross.

will pray without being preoccupied with the fact that you are oriented towards East of West. This is for we have been commanded to pray ceaselessly (1 Thes. 5: 17) and everywhere (1 Tim. 2: 8). And again, it was written: "Find the way of him who ascends towards sunset: the Lord is His name" (Ps. 67: 4[799]). This shows that our Lord is everywhere. And even when you have your head covered, do not deprive yourself of prayer. Take heed only not to pray with indifference[800].

442. Question: My thought tells me: "you commit sin in everything and you must say in every word and deed and thought: I have sinned. This is because, if you do not confess your sin, you will reckon on yourself as having committed no sin". And I am very tormented by both of these: that I cannot tell that on each one of the mentioned ones, and if I do not say it, I will reckon myself as committing sin.

Answer: We must always be convinced that we have sinned in everything: in word and in deed and in thought. But we cannot tell in each of those that we have sinned. That's why getting sad because of not being able to constantly say that, it is a work from the devils who want to throw us into discouragement. But it is also a sine the thought of reckoning that if we are unable to tell in each of the mentioned things: "I have sinned", we won't actually sin, it is inappropriate. Let's therefore remember the Ecclesiastes who says: "There is a time for speaking, and there is a time for not speaking" (Eccl. 3: 7). Let's say in the morning for the night and for the evening, in prayer: with the pricking of our heart, to our Master God: "Master, forgive all my sins for your holy Name, and heal my soul because I have mistaken against You". And that will suffice to you. This is for, as somebody ahs another whom he has lent a sum of money and he is receiving that sum back in installments, and he won't ever be able to close the whole deal with that one, by paying, it is likewise here too[801].

[799] In KJB we have: Ps. 68: 4: "Sing unto God, sing praises to his name: extol him that rideth upon the heavens by his name JAH,"; in ROB we have: Ps. 67: 4: "Sing to God, sing to His name, prepare the way to Him Who crosses the wilderness, the Lord is His name." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[800] The note from Volos Edition: Out of this one can see that in the actual the state of prayer, when we do not do anything else, the man must pray while having their head uncovered, as the Apostle Paul says too (1 Cor. 11: 4).

443. Question: It happens to me while uttering the psalms that I get scattered with my mind and I wander around. What should I do?

Answer: If you have got scattered, start again reading that psalm from the words which you can remember. And if by trying once, and twice, and trice, you cannot remember those words, or after remembering them you won't be able to advance to the following words, you will start reading that psalm from its beginning. This is because the purpose of the enemy is that or impeding you from extolling God, because of your forgetfulness. And uttering that psalm in continuation means extolling God. But the non-scattering is characteristic to them who have clean senses[802]. And we are weak. So, when we realize that we have got scattered, let's wake up to understand the things we utter, so that our scattering not to become a cause for us to be condemned[803].

444. Question: When I got scattered with my thought during prayer, why should I do?

Answer: If you pray to God and you get scattered, you will fight until you will succeed in praying without scattering. And [801] We pay God out debt on instalments. And this should always keep our conscience awake, for we are debtors to God, so that we should tall God always: "I have sinned". But we are unable to always to that. Even more than that, if we always said: "I have sinned", we would get accustomed to it and we would say it without paying attention to it. That's why it is a temptation from the devils you to be discontent by the fact that you cannot always tell: I have sinned". Both out of this answer and out of that answer regarding the "sealing", one can deduce that the authors of the "Letters" would have told the same thing about and often impartation with the body and with the blood of the Lord. This is because this too can lead one to weaken his focusing when receiving them.

[802] He who has clean senses he won't be attracted through them by material things, by persons, or by their memories. That one, when he utters the psalms, he thinks at God. And due to that we won't get scattered away from the meanings of the verses. The clean senses help us to interiorize and by that we will be able to persevere in the encounter with God.

[803] By despising the things told us by God through psalms, we attract upon us the punishment from God, or we will close ourselves against the clean and high life coming from Him, and we will remain into the state of the souly death.

you will watch your mind not to get scattered again. And if the scattering persists, because of our weakness, until the end of the prayer, you will try to reach the pricking of your heart and full of repentance you will say: "Lord, have mercy on me, and forgive me all my mistakes". And you will get forgiveness of all your mistakes and of that scattering happening to you when praying[804].

445. Question: When a brother utters verses during the psalmody, my thought sometimes gets filled with peace, but on some other times it gets scattered. Why should I do?

Answer: When you thought gets filled up with peace and you feel pricked in the heart by the verses uttered by that brother, you will use that thing. And if you see your mind getting enslaved by some other thoughts, you will bring it to pricking in order it to take heed at the doxology uttered by that brother.

446. Question: But it happens to my that while wanting to understand the things uttered by the brother there is a temptation born within me towards him[805]. What should I do?

[804] Asking God for mercy with the heart's pain, until tearing apart, it will rid us of scattering. And if that happened even for a short while and even from time to time, and if that unveils us our human actualized by encountering the living God producer of human feeling, that will be of great help for our spiritual growth. Without a Person-like God there wouldn't have existed the possibility for a continuous sensitization of the man, because we wouldn't have asked for God mercy with the sentiment that He can give it to us; or with the sentiment that Himself is full of mercy on us, of that He is the source of the mercies. The people who have no mercy, they are not true people. And the soul organ which we feel the mercy through, and which we become merciful through, it is our heart. The heart is the feeling power between person and person, through our heart we have mercy on somebody, but we also feel the mercy from God through our heart. The man having a petrified heart, it is a heartless man, a man whom this organ is no longer functioning within. When the man gets animated, he will feel pricked by his own callousness, but he won't be able to feel himself fully pricked except by encountering the merciful God. God soften our heart by His mercy. Being us pricked by this mercy, our heart regains the feeling of God and it feels the urge to extoll God for the heart to thank God at its turn. And this feeling escapes the man from any scattering if his thought in limited and impersonal things, things which lower the man on a locked-up plan, a monotonous plan of the egotistic pleasures, or of some unimportant discontents.

[805] It happens that while hearing another brother uttering psalms of clean and high content, thought of critique raise up regarding that brother, because of recalling some of his deeds which he didn't like.

Answer: This too is an enslavement[806]. This is because the enemy moves out mind from a thing to another[807]. But you must bring your heart again to pricking when you see the war coming[808]. And rebuke yourself by saying: "Where are you going, you the miserable one? Think at the torments waiting for you. This is because these torments will be endured by them who do or who things such". Job didn't uselessly bring sacrifices for his sons, by saying: "lest they have thought something evil about God in their hearts" (Job 1: 5). And by saying those, attach your mind to the verses. And if you see your mind wandering again, you will rebuke yourself again, and you will do the same up to three times. If that persists, you will separate your mind form what it thinks at, and you won't let your mind without working, but you will think at the judgment from God, saying: "Lord Jesus Christ, have mercy on me".

447. Question: If somebody sits together with the brother while uttering psalms, but he doesn't know the psalms by heart so that he would be able to tell the psalms together with his brothers, what is more beneficial to him: listening to them, or telling for himself those psalms which he knows by heart?

Answer: If he doesn't know by heart those psalms uttered by the brothers, instead of listening to those it will be more beneficial to him to say for himself the psalms which he knows. This is for the hearing is intertwined with the scattering.

448. Question: When a cunning thought comes to me, my heart moves and gets scared and jumps immediately when I

[806] The word "slavery", namely being I unwillingly taken into mastery, it is used only for that what my evil impulses do with me, because of them subjugating my freedom without my full will. God doesn't enslave me for the good doesn't enslave me without my will. I must willingly make myself a "slave" to God. I am a free "slave", I am a "powerful" slave, in everything that is good and that it strengthens me into good. This is not a properly-said slavery.

[807] I am carries away form a "thought place" to another "thought place", from a theme to another, unwillingly, as a bonded slave.

[808] The pricking is also a waking up to the feeling of the true self, it is a waking up form the bluntness of the sinful unconsciousness. The pricking wakes you up also when you are menaced by being enslaved by a sinful deed.

realize the presence of that thought. This is because my heart gets cared because of its weakness, not to be taken into mastery by it. But by doing so, I feel much burden and torment within my soul. Deign, Father, and tell my what should I do under the rushing in of this wicked thought? How should I banish it away?

Answer: This movement consists of not letting yourself convinced by the cunning thought and you not to agree that thought, but in rushing in to God without getting disturbed[809]. So, do not say: "I fear this thought could catch me". This can be understood out of the following example: If somebody takes someone to the justice court for something, and the accused one knows that he cannot answer, he will endure the consequences. But if he has a strong defender, he goes to the justice court daringly, for trusting his defender. And again, if it happens to somebody to fall on the hands of a thief during his travel, if he can resist that thief, he won't let that thief take anything from him and everything will end well. And if the thief takes something from him, it will suffice him to know the thief and the place where the steal took place and he will be able to go to the judge and the judge will serve him justice. This is for the judge won't only help him recover that what has been stolen from him, but the judge will also punish the thief.

So, if the thought enters, do not get disturbed, but find out what that thought wants to do to you and work against that thought without disturbance, by calling upon the Lord. This is for the evil doesn't consists of the fact that the thief enters your house, but the evil consists of getting the things from the house stolen. And if the thief gets out dishonored, the glory will belong to the house's master and the dishonor will be of his who got out without taking anything.

When the Lord comes in the land of Judea, namely in the man's heart, He casts the devils out from there. Therefore, you will shout out towards Him as the Macedonians shouted out towards Paul: "Cross through Macedonia, help us" (Acts: 16: 9); and like the Lord's disciples did: "Master, save us, for we are perishing" (Pk. 8: 24; Mt. 8: 25). And the Lord will wake up and he will rebuke the winds and the winds will get appeased. This is for to Him it is due the power and the glory forever. Amen.

[809] He who allows himself to be mastered by an evil thought and he reaches even to do the sinful deed, he doesn't actually move, thought the disturbance from within him let the impression that he moves. He is spiritually dead. And the dead doesn't move. The movement means struggle for freedom, or it means struggle for preserving the freedom and of increasing in freedom. One can feel here the opposition to the Origenistic theory that the movement is the product of the soul's falling off the divine pleroma and the movement bears within itself the seal of the evil. The movement is an ascending running towards God, and it is not a falling off God. The movement is in the service of the good. The movement is not the product of the evil or a progression into evil. This idea will be developed by Saint Maximos the Confessor in "Ambigua".

449. Question: For you have told that the heart's movement consists of not letting yourself be convinced by the cunning thought, and it consists of running to God without disturbance, please explain me more the meaning of this movement.

Answer: When somebody is taken by somebody else to a judge, and himself the one taken to the judge goes to that judge, there takes place the willing movement towards the judge of him who is summoned to the judge because an accusation. This is for it is said that because he was accused to the judge, he moved himself to go to the judge[810]. And continuing the strife between them, he who has moved himself won't be held accountable to his accuser as long as the judgment lasts. This is told by the word: "And you will protect his heel" (Gen. 3: 15). The heel means the end[811]. May your heart get stronger through the prayers of the saint. Amen.

450. Question: A brother asked the Great Oldman, saying: Have mercy on me, and tell me how should I save myself? This is for, I have ordered to my though to obey your letter. But my thought hasn't obeyed totally to your letter.

The answer of Barsanuphius: If you truly want to be saved, you should obey in your deed: elevate your feet from the ground and raise your mind to the sky and let there be your cogitation day and night. And despise yourself, with the whole power you have, day and night, while fighting to see yourself bellow everything. This is the true way. Besides this way, there is no other way for him who wants to be saved into Christ Who strengthen him up[812]. He who wants, let him to run! He who wants to run, let him run! He who want to run, let him run! Let him run to take (the crown) (1 Cor. 9: 24)[813]. I testify to you about this, in front the living God Who wants to bestow the eternal life to everybody who wants it[814]. If you want to, work brother!

[810] The devil urges the man to do evil, and then the devil will be the one who will accuse the man in front of God, in order God to let the man under the devil's mastery. But when the defendant moves himself against the devil, and when the man doesn't allow himself to remain "fallen" under the devil's mastery, the man himself runs to God in order to get rid of the devil's accusation.

[811] Here too it is again applied the place from the Genesis, as it has been applied also to the struggle between Christ and the devil. The devil wants to have the final gain (the heel) in the fight against any man. But each man can crush in the end (at the final judgment) the devil's head, if he has been fighting for the whole his life against the devil, and with the power of Christ.

451. The question of the same one towards the other Oldman: What the good Great Oldman wrote for three times the urge: "He who wants to run, let him run!"?

The answer of John: The Great Oldman wanted to show the benefit of this road; and that there is no other road needed. That's why he uttered that word for three times. This is for the lord Himself told in His Gospel according to Matthew, the word "Amen", for once; but in the Gospel according to John He said that word twice: "Amen, amen I am telling you". This was for in this one the Lord talked to them about very necessary things.

[812] One can reach his humbleness only through power. This is for the worldly extolling is characteristic to frivolousness. This is because of being deceiving. He who is humble, he gets elevate in that what is substantial and it lasts, into truth. He gets elevated in being recognized and it getting power to help and to gain others. Christ, by humbling Himself, He was able to sacrifice Himself for all and He has gained many, forever.

[813] Here is again affirmed that you gain the good by moving yourself. Only him who remains lazy into the evil things, he won't move himself, he won't run himself. And the movement is upheld by will. He who "allows himself to be prey to the evil", he won't move because of not using his will. He who wants to do the good, and to be himself good, he will want to constantly become better, and to do increasingly better. One slides increasingly lower in evil, almost unwillingly. The good has a target that won't ever be fully reached. That target is God. The evil has not target. The evil wants only to repeat a short-lived pleasure.

[814] The eternal happiness crows a will that gets continuously strengthened. The idleness doesn't accomplish the man and that's why it won't be crowned with the happiness of the imperishable fullness of the life.

452. Question: Please tell me why, during the Pentecost, it happens to me that for most of the time I suffer of Idleness and of the temptation of the sleep?

Answer: We suffer of that because we are a stale pond and not a water spring. And then we suffer of this also because the air is changing and the horizons get widened. But the consummate Fathers do not suffer of this.

453. Question: If I see somebody doing something inappropriate, should I judge that as inappropriate? And how should I avoid to condemn my neighbor because of that thing?

Answer: We cannot but judge the inappropriate deed itself but as inappropriate. This is because, otherwise, how could we escape from the harm brought by that inappropriate deed, according to the lord's word Who says: "Guard yourself against the liar prophets who come to you in sheep skins, but they are ravening wolves inside" (Mt. 7: 15-16).

But we must not condemn him who had committed that deed, for the word: "Do not judge so you not to be judged" (mt. 7: 7). But this is also because you must reckon yourselves as more sinner than anyone. Then, because you must reckon the sin of your brother as yours[815] and you must hate the devil who has deceived that brother. This is because, if somebody was pushed into a trap by somebody else, we rebuke him who pushed, likewise is here too. It also happens that somebody commits a deed seeming inappropriate to them who look at that, but him who has committed it he did it on a good purpose. It happened likewise to a holy Father who, passing by a riding contest, he entered to watch it. And by looking at each rider how they were striving to outride other riders and to defeat them, he told to hi thought: "Do you see the great zeal of them who belong to the devil? Shouldn't ourselves fight, all the more for we are the inheritors of the Kingdom of Heavens?". And he left that view and he traveled with much zeal on his road and he fought his spiritual fight with much zeal too. And again, we do not know if that brother who has committed sin, he didn't used the repentance later and he didn't become well-pleasant to God through humbleness and confession. And the Pharisees left condemned by his pride. So, us by knowing this, let's follow the example of the publican and let's condemn ourselves, and so we will be corrected. And let's avoid the pride of the Pharisee, in order us not to be condemned.

[815] At your turn, we have done something that determined somebody form our closeness to commit a sin. At least, we haven't done enough to make that man good. Even by judging our neighbor as incapable of good, it will irradiate out of us something urging our neighbor to commit sin. But the repentance for our contribution had to our neighbor's sin, it will take us to obtain forgiveness for this contribution of ours. And if that one repents at his turn, while being influenced in good by us, he too will be forgiven for his sin. That's why him too who contributed to his neighbor's sin, he will be reckoned through the repentance of his neighbor determined by him, as less burdened by his contribution to his neighbor's sin. We are intertwined, but we are also fee in sinning and in escaping from sinful state through the repentance which we influence each other in.

454. A loving-of-Christ layman asked the same Oldman: I happens often to me while being together with others, I to get so ashamed of them then I blush[816] and I look downwards and I no longer am capable of talking to them. Consequently, I feel my heart burdened, my word is clumsy, nonsensical, and full of vain-glory. And often is mixed in my word a nonsensical laughter, occurring unwillingly. And I get very disturbed because of that. And I do not know what to do. If I talk, I will fall into these ones; if I keep my silence, it will seem to me that I behave

[816] In the Greek text it is used the word αλλοιούδθαι and not μεταμοφφόυσθαι, as in the Transfiguration of the Lord on Tabor. Blushing comes from the feeling that my body has escaped from under the power of the person. The blushing doesn't transfigure the body, while the Transfiguration of the Lord on Tabor was lived the elevation of the whole person, with the body, on a totally different plan. Max Scheller explained the feeling of shame by the fact that the man is not only body but spirit too. Without conscience the man wouldn't have any feeling of shame. The animal has no shame. The same comes when the man tends to show himself only as body, but the spirit protests. Adam and Eva felt no shame before committing the ancestral sin, for they didn't get their bodies out of the transfiguring power of the spirit. It is the conscience about "alienation", as the Greek term says, of falling form human. Olivier Clement sees in this the fact that the man gest ashamed in front of his fellow human, the appurtenance of the body to the person, and in the same time the difference between body and person: "I recognize myself, but in the same time I do not recognize myself. I recognize myself in my body, otherwise I wouldn't blush when I am gazed upon by somebody else; you do not blush form something foreign to you" (Olivier Clement, "Le corps", in Bulletin du Centre Protestant d'Etudes, Avril, 1982, p. 7). The same one reckons the "shame as affirmation of the person" (p. 28). I am body too, but I am not only body. The proof is that "the more the another gives himself, the more I discover him: the secret is the giving itself" (p. 30). Right in the act of the wedding "I promise in front of God to live and to die in order you to exist and you to exist forever" (p. 31).

inappropriately, especially to them who talk to me. What is this state, Father? Please help me with your holy prayers!

Answer: This happens to you because of the envy from the devil. This is because he doesn't want us or they who talk to us get any benefit, the devil brings this tare to us. In addition to that, the devil also wants to offend, if possible, them whom we talk to. But the fear of God is outside any disturbance and disorder and confusion. That's' why, before any meeting, let's arm ourselves up with the fear of God, and let's take heed at ourselves with much watchfulness, so that why will us get disturbed and why will us laugh at? This is for in the fear of God there is no laughter. That's why they say about the insane people that "in laughter they raise their voice" (Sirach 21: 23[817]). And the word of the insane ones is incoherent and without grace[818]. And they say about the righteous that he barely smiles (Sirach 21: 23[819]). So, if we bear within us the remembrance of God and the thought that we must preserve when meeting our brothers the humbleness and the peaceful cogitation and that we like to persevere in those and to have in front of our eyes "the fearsome judgment" of God[820], this state will banish away form within our heart any cunning thought. This is for, there where is peace, and gentleness, and humbleness, there dwells God[821]. Let's keep this when encountering other people.

And if the enemy insists in waging us war into these things, because of reckoning to catch us into the trap of his shamelessness, and so to topple us over, let's not allow us to be kidnapped. But, after the first attack, let's take heed at the

[818] Without that wisdom that provides the listener with pleasure, without the decency that is so cherished by our people there will be disorder.

[820] The author makes here, out of the thought at the "fearsome judgment" of God mentioned at the Holy Liturgy, a means for maintaining the wisdom and the restraint during the meetings with others. The eschatological opening of the Liturgy doesn't mean a disinterest for the present life, but it is a means for purifying the present life. The same effect of general cleaning of our life is provided also by the often remembrance of God.

[821] The feeling of the presence of the almighty God it gives the man power to control his agitation, his fear that is usually manifested in violence, and his arrogance when not knowing his true measures.

second attack, and to on. This is for it was written: The righteous falls for seven times a day, but he stands again" (Ps. 12: 6[822]). But standing up means fighting. Ane he who fights and he stand up again, until the end, he will show who he is[823]. But let's take care of calling upon the name of God in all of these. This is for there where God is, there will be all the good things[824]. But then is true that there where the devil is, there will be all the evil things[825]. And it is proven that if we speak in order us to be pleasant to the people, or with a disturbance in an evil manner, all of those come from the devil. Let's remember about Saint Apostle Paul who says: "Let your word always be with grace, and seasoned with salt" (Col. 4: 6). And if we persevere in these things, the All-Keeper God will give us, by His mercy, a consummate state, through His fear. Amen.

455. The question of the same one: Somebody invited someone among the Fathers to taste something at his place. But the Father didn't accept the invitation, saying that he cannot. Another only asked him to utter a prayer for him in his monastic cell. And when he entered his monastic cell, the Father forced him stay and eat. And because of the insistence he remained and ate. And by finding out that, him who invited that Father first, he go sad. Was his sadness according to God?

Answer: When somebody, because of a motif that seemingly is blessed and useful to the soul, he gets disturbed and he gets sad and he gets upset with his neighbor, it is obvious that this is not according to God. This is for all the things of God are peaceful and useful and they bring the man to

[822] In KJB we have: Ps. 12: 6: "The words of the Lord are pure words: as silver tried in a furnace of earth, purified seven times."; in ROB we have: Ps. 11: 6: "The words of the Lord, clean words, silver cleaned in fire, cleans od dirt, cleaned for seven times." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[823] He who hasn't fallen, he won't stand. Neither will stand him who has totally fallen. One's fight won't be a serious fight if he doesn't feel himself almost defeated. Only through many fights of this sort one gets strengthens to such an extent so that the temptation will not longer have power upon him.

[824] Calling upon the name of God means calling upon God Himself. And God comes when He is called, so that God Himself will be present if He is called upon. By and large, he who calls upon somebody's name and he who is called by somebody, they are in a relationship.

[825] The good and the evil things do not stand by themselves, but they are hypostatized, the first tones in God, the last one sin satan. And the things are spread out of them. And out of them the things get hypostatized, often mixed up, within the human persons too.

humbleness and to self-condemnation. This is for it is said: "The righteous accuses himself right from his first word" (Prov. 18: 16). He who seemingly wants something according to God but he is impeded by somebody, and because of that he condemns and gossips him who has impeded him, he shows by that that his thought from the beginning was not according to God. This is for it is was said: "Out of their fruits you will know them" (Mt. 7: 16). This is for him who has put in his mind something according to God, but he has been impeded to commit that, he rather humbles himself and he reckon himself as unworthy, and he reckons him who impeded him as being rather a prophet. So, if you summon somebody out of love to come into your monastic cell or if you ask something from somebody with faith[826] to give you something and he doesn't allow himself to be persuaded to give that to you, and another asking him the same thing, that one deigns to give him what he asked for, you won't allow the devil of the anger to trouble your soul[827]. This is because anything that is mixed with disturbance it isn't from God. That's why, by humbling yourself, you will rather say: "I have been found unworthy and God has showed my sins and my unworthiness to the Fathers". This is for "He Who gives grace, He gives it to the humble ones" (Prov. 3: 34). This is for him who has the humbleness, he will never want things from above him, but he always runs towards humbleness[828]. Think at the centurion who came to Jesus for his servant and he heard: "Coming, I will heal him", but he run to humbleness and told Jesus: "Lord, I am not worthy for you to enter under my cover" (Mt. 8: 5-13). Who won't let himself be kidnapped by such an honor? But the humbleness didn't search either this honor, because of reckoning itself an unworthy of it. And the knower-of-people God, He Who rejoices of the good will of the people, He praised the centurion's faith, [826] Call Him with the faith that you will benefit of what you ask for.

[827] In the relationships between two men, they are not alone, but there is God too, or satan, according to the heart of one man or of both of them. Even when you ask somebody for something in good faith, and he has no evil thought against you, God could urge that one not to fulfill your request, who knows towards what benefit of yours. Anyway, it is the duty of each one not to allow the devil to trouble their relationship with the another.

[828] He who has humbleness he doesn't cherish at all the vanity of the worldly glory, for he has the richness and the depth of his life into God, as hidden into the humble vessel of his being, or in connection with himself.

saying: "In all Israel I haven't found such a faith"[829]. And thus, the centurion's humbleness brought him praise and the healing of his servant. This is for many are the gifts bestowed to the humbleness[830]. Let's run to humbleness, in order us to take the humbleness's grace and its praise from Jesus Christ Who humbled Himself to death (Phil. 2: 8), and so He gave Himself to us as an example of humbleness.

456. Question: Father, the centurion using his overwhelming humbleness, he reckoned himself unworthy of the coming of the Master in his house, and his faith was praised. But Abraham invited God into his tent and he bowed down before God, in the same time, down to the ground, despite he encountered Him as on a man, because of not knowing that He was the Master (Gen. 18: 1). Didn't have Abraham the humbleness, but the virtue of the centurion is bigger than that of Abraham? This is for the humbleness, as you always teach us, it is the most important virtue. Tell be, therefore, the meaning and the differences between the virtues of both of them. This is for one didn't accept the visit and he was praised, while the another asked for the visit powerfully and he was praised too.

Answer: Both of them were consummate in their faith in God, but they used their faith and their humbleness according to the moment. This is for Patriarch Abraham too, he said: "I am dust and ashes" (Gen. 18: 27). And by reckoning on himself thus, he showed that he didn't reckon himself worthy of receiving guests. But still, because he was consummate, he received any man, not making difference between sinners and saints. This is for, relatedly to him and to Lor it was said: "Do not disregard the receiving of guests. This is for, by doing that, some people accommodated, unknowingly, angels" (Hebr. 13: 2). So, if Abraham knew that that one was the Lord, Abraham would use the centurion's word. This is for there is not humbler deed than one to reckon himself as "dust and ashes". And the [829] The humbleness is united with the faith. The centurion didn't reckon himself worthy of receiving Christ in his house, for he believed in Christ's godhead. And in his faith, by knowing Jesus as God, he had Jesus closer than they who would have received Jesus in their houses, but they wouldn't've known and felt His godhead.

[830] The thirsty deep of the humbleness attracts in itself many gifts, reckoning them superior to those which seem to the man that he has them through himself.

centurions used, according to that moment, his humbleness, by knowing that That One was the Savior. But we say that the centurion could have used also the desire for receiving Him as guest (Lev. 7: 4-5). This is for his faith is not lacking the deeds. Neither Christ praised an unworking faith. So, the centurion's faith had deeds too. And at the right moment for receiving guests the centurion would have used, at his turn, the Patriarch's invitation towards everybody. So, we find both of them as consummate.

457. Because I, as a sinner that I am, I haven't either the true and sincere humbleness which the centurion was praised for, or the receiving-of-guests love which Abraham was found worthy through, of accommodating God, what should I do? Should I, by looking at my unworthiness, to renounce to inviting holy people to visit me and so I to lose the benefit coming out of it? Or, should I rather run to them, but not with the desire of inviting them to my place, but as a sick in his soul one, and as one who needs healing? This is for it is characteristic to the sick ones to desire their healing and this one is not reckoned to them as receiving of guests; and if they do not invite these ones, they do not show themselves as having a humble cogitation but rather as being mindless. Teach me, therefore, Father, if it is good I to call the saints for I need them, or should I avoid their coming, as being I unworthy?

Answer: You can call them as one who is sick and who needs the doctor. Think at this, that the recently born child doesn't suddenly reach consummate man, but he crosses through the soft meal and then to hard food. This is for the hard food belongs to the consummate ones. That's why the Apostle too, he said: "I fed you with milk, not with food" (1 Cor. 3: 2). So, by receiving guests, let's not say that we fulfill a commandment, but let's say that we do that as ones who are sick, and for we need a doctor. And use them until God with take you to the consummate things[831].

[831] Let's not praise ever with anything of what we do. By receiving guests, let's not praise ourselves that by doing that we do good to those ones, but let's reckon ourselves as needing those ones, in order they to help us in our struggle with our passions. And, actually, we need the advice of those ones as long as we are non-consummate. After that, there will come other toils which we uphold through, our advanced state: especially the deepening into prayer.

458. Question: Which is the daring and the indecent laughter?

Answer: There is daring and daring. There is a daring (in word) because of shamelessness, and this daring is birth-giver to all evil things (Paterikon, Agathon: 1). And there is a daring out of gladness, and neither this one if too beneficial to the man. And for it is characteristic to the strong ones to avoid both of those sorts of daring, if, because of our weakness we cannot avoid both those sorts of daring, and so we use only that daring out of gladness, let's take heed not to offend our brother. This is because, they who are among people, they cannot escape this second sort of daring. So, if we cannot get rid of it, let's use it towards building and not towards offending. And let's do that especially when we force ourselves to shorten the speaking too. This is because the much-speaking is useless, even when seemingly occupies itself with useful things.

Regarding the laughter, it has the same meaning. This is because the laughter is the fruit of the daring. This is for, if somebody has the daring of the shameless speaking, he will have his laughter shameless too. And if one has the daring of the gladness, by that will be born within him the glad laughter. And as it was said about daring, likewise, one must not tarry of to overflow himself into its laughter either. But let him tighten his cogitation and utter his word decently. This is because they who overflow them in it, let all of them know that they will fall into fornication too.

459. Question: Please, Father, tell me how far can go the appropriate gladness? And how can the sinner benefit of it, in order him not to cross over his measures?

Answer: The consummate ones take heed at themselves consummately, like the craftsman who know his craftsmanship consummately. This is for, if it happens to him to entertain some people while he is working, the dialogue with those ones won't impede him from accomplishing the due things required by his trade. And by continuously talking to the present ones, the whole his mind pays attention to the work of his trade.

Likewise, him who talk to some people, he must show his face and his word as being glad; but his inward cogitation must sigh[832]. This is for about this it was written: "The sigh of my heart is always before You" (Ps. 37: 9[833]). So, as the unskilled craftsman, if he talks while working, he will endanger the things of his craftsmanship, likewise is him who uses the gladness. He must make sure, carefully, by taking heed at his words and at the gladness of his gaze, lest he will totally deviate from the way of his (internal) crying. So, one like this, before starting to talk to somebody, he must ask his thought what he should do and he must prepare himself so. This is for it was written: "I prepared myself and I was not disturbed" (Ps. 118: 60[834]). And preparing oneself means: discerning among people in order to find out why they want to talk to us, and preparing our thinking in the fear of God, according to the purpose of him who comes to talk to us. If somebody comes out of friendship, let's use pleasant words; if we are to receive Fathers, lets' do that with gladness, as Abrahan did, for he washed up the feet of the Master and of the angels and he welcomed them with joyful words. In each of these cases the circumstance will tell us how should we show our gladness. When we may invite them who come sot us, to have something to eat or to drink, let's do that with gladness, but keeping that one under guard, so that our cogitation won't get disturbed.

460. Question (Codex Vatopedi 2, Sinai 430, and Cutlumuş 3). A brother asked the same Oldman: Who is mastered by vain-glory and who is mastered by pride? And how does one reach to pride?

[832] It is not about a duplicity here. This is for, he who smiles to another while working his trade, he makes shine on his face the attentive thought at his work. One can see that he is not surrendered with his exterior totally to entertain others. One can see in his entertainment his "spirituality".

[833] In KJB we have: Ps. 38: 10: "Lord, all my desire is before thee; and my groaning is not hid from thee."; in ROB we have: Ps. 37: 10: "Lord, before You is all my desire and my sigh hasn't been hidden from You." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[834] In KJB we have: Ps. 119: 60: "I made haste, and delayed not to keep thy commandments."; in Rob we have: Ps. 118: 60: "I was ready and I didn't get disturbed from keeping your commandments." (E. l. t.'s n.)

Answer: Out of the desire for being pleasant to people one can reach to vain-glory; and by growing up into vain-glory, one can reach to pride. Forgive me, brother, and pray for me[835].

461. A brother asked the Great Oldman (Vatopedi 2, Sinai 410, Cutlumuş 3): question: Tell me, Father, if the pricking (the repentance) I have it is true and if I must live alone? And pray for me, for I am harassed by the body's war.

Answer: Brother, the crying and the repentance which you have now, they are not true, but the go and come. This is because the true crying intertwined with the pricking of the heart it is a servant of the man, obeying the man and unseparated from the man. And him who has that crying he won't be defeated by any war. The true crying erases the mistakes from the beginning and he washed up all the stains. The true crying ceaselessly guards, with the name of God, on him who has achieved the true crying and it banishes away the laughter and the scattering and it upholds the ceaseless sadness. This is for the true crying is a shield deflecting all the devil's arrows. He who was the true crying won't be touched by any blow during any war, either against man or against debauched women. This is for the true crying is together with us and it fights on our side. So, I have shown to you the sign of the weakness and of the valiance. But you must not reckon that God couldn't ease your war. This is that that could happen, especially for the saints who are praying for you[836]. But by [835] Somebody's vain-glory still is depending on others. The pride can exist even without the praise coming from others. The pride feeds only on one's imagination about himself, thought the imagination about the self is present also in the joy of somebody for the glory granted him by others.

[836] We are never alone while fighting the temptations and while enduring the trials. The love from God and form the saints irradiates towards us and within us, and it strengthen us. Doesn't the mothers' love send its strengthening waves towards her son who is in troubles, even though her son won't feel that? The more consummate one is, the less egotistic he will be, and the more sensitive he will be at the another's difficulties, at the more merciful he will be. But God is consummate and the saints are partakers to His consummation. And God if even more impressed by our hardships when He sees the love of the saints for us. The love no longer keeps separate them who love one another, neither from one another, nor form the third one who they love. This has its foundation in the Holy Trinity. There is love within world due to the fact that there are superior personal centers of love where the love irradiates from, because the love cannot stand by itself. And if we are thirsty for reaching a consummate love, loving you, God wants to strengthen you through many wars and toils, in order you to reach the measure of the well-experienced virtue, but you won't reach those if you do not guard all the things commanded to you through letters, by me the loving-of-vain-glory teacher of yours. Regarding the living alone, that means power. When the time will be right, I will send you a word about it, at my initiative. For now, you must work, son, as I have told you. And I believe that you will advance into Christ. Do not fear. May the Lord be with you. Amen.

462. Of the same man towards the other Oldman: "Please, Abba Master, pray for me, in order the Lord to give me a little humbleness. And because the Fathers say that if one doesn't pluck of from within himself the root of his passions, he will fall again, due to whatever reason, in those passions, how can one pluck out from within himself the root of his belly's covetousness and the root of his love for money? And because the Great Oldman told me that my present crying isn't a true crying, because of going and coming, what is the state of my soul because of that this thing happens to me? And should I force myself towards the consummate crying, or should I wait for it until the true pricking (repentance) will come?

The answer of John: Brother, God gives us humbleness, but we reject it. And we say again: pray to God for Him to give us the humbleness. The humbleness consists of cutting off in all things our own will, and it consists of being worriless in all the things, regarding the cutting off of our passions, by cutting off our will and by striving to the extent we are able to, and by forcing our senses to guard they order, by not using our senses in an evil manner, so that we will pluck off not only the root of our passion mentioned by you, but also of all the other passions[837].

that means that there is a persona Center (or better said tri-personal), out of which there ceaselessly flows that love that attracts us.

[837] The will manifested in passions is a weak will, it is an enslaved will. You will must be cut off by the higher will, by the true will, which we can truly become masters upon ourselves through. That's why only through it we must liberate ourselves from the slavery of the passions.

And the coming and the going of the present crying, it has as its cause the successive warming up and the chilling down of your thought. When the warmth will persist, it will become big your steadfastness and your repentance (pricking of the heart) too, and to that it will follow the true crying. Therefore, you owe to take care of this ones as well, by forcing yourself to make that crying coming to you[838].

Brother, do not despise the guarding of the words and of the commandments give to you by the Great Oldman, and you will be saved. I much-spoken myself, brother, but not out of the work I am committing, neither from the Ghost, and I believe that all the things told you by the Great Oldman, he told you those for he previously fulfilled them himself, and those are from the Holy Ghost[839]. Still, my conscience bears witness to me that I do not want to delude you in any way. That's why I thing that neither my words or my advices will harm you. God too know this. And I want to be of help to you, for you ask and for you want to be saved, if the Lord strengthens me. "May God vine you help from Zion, so that you to see on all the days of your life the goods of Jerusalem" (Ps. 127: 5[840]). Pray for me, brother.

[838] One must notice that the crying comes to us after we have been liberated form passions. The passions make our soul callous. But our passions can also produce a crying when they cannot be satisfied. On one hand we must become strong, by liberating ourselves form the slavery of the passions. On the other hand, this strength will bring to us the softening of our heart and the crying. How can this be explained? This strength is born not only out of the victory of our true will, but also from the love from God and for our sorrow felt because of our sins. The strength and the affection for God go hand in hand. The strength of the mother in overcoming her egotism, and her affectionate love ready to do any sacrifice for her son, they constitute an example of such a union between those. The egotist cannot cry for another, but he cries only for himself. The egotist cannot cry for another because of being himself defeated by his passions. there is also a crying at the egotist, but that is a crying united with the rigid savageness.

[839] The Ghost doesn't come over him who hasn't cleaned himself, by personal effort, of his egotistic passions. The Ghost descended at Pentecost over the Apostles who have been prepared during three previous years by the Savior, so that they to believe in Him and they to love Him. To some extent, the Ghost also comes when someone starts a new life, in order the Ghost to help him to advance in that new life. On Pentecost, the Ghost produced the pricking of the heart of those who believed the Apostles' word. On this purpose it is given the Ghost at Baptism as well. But the Ghost Who gives power to the Apostles is given especially through the non-egotistic doing. The theatrical Pentecostalism isn't something serious.

[840] In KJB we have: Ps. 128: 5: "The Lord shall bless thee out of Zion: and thou shalt see the good of Jerusalem all the days of thy life."; in ROB we have: Ps. 127: 5: "You will be blessed by the Lord from Zion and you will see the goods of Jerusalem on all the days of your life." (E. l. t.'s n.)

463. Question: One who loves Christ asked the same Oldman if he should discuss much about the Holy Mysteries? And if the sinner came close to the Holy Mysteries, would him be condemned as an unworthy?

Answer: Coming close to the Holy Mysteries, take heed, while receiving the body and the blood of Christ, at reckoning them as real, without any doubt. You must believe Him Who said: "Take, eat, this is My body and My blood", and you must believe that those have been given to us towards the forgiveness of our sins. Him who believes such, we hope he won't be condemned. And him who doesn't believe, he has already been condemned (Jn. 3: 18). So, do not impede yourself from coming close to the Holy Mysteries, because of reckoning on yourself as a sinner, but you must believe that the sinner who comes close to the Savior, he will be found worthy of being his sins forgiven, as we can see in the Scripture that they who came close to Him with faith, they heard the voice of God who told them: "Be forgiven to you your many sins" (Lk. 7: 47-48). He who was worthy of coming close to Him, he wouldn't have sin. But because he was sinner and debtor, he received the forgiveness of his debts. But you must also listen to the Lord Who says: "I haven't come to save the righteous, but the sinners" (Mt. 9: 13); and again: "Not the healthy ones need the doctor, but the sick" (Lk. 5: 31). So, reckon yourself as sinner and sick and come close to Him Who can save the lost one (Lk. 19: 10[841]).

[841] One who said that he is sinless, right by saying so he would be a sinner. The man must always be aware of his sinfulness. But this doesn't mean that the man must not pray to all his acquaintances for forgiveness, but he must do that especially to God, through the priest ordained through ordination to forgive the confessed sins. And can one tell that he is consummately clean of any sin? And how could one dare to say that? I can tell, about being my sins forgiven by the priest, that I have been forgiven, but have I been able to make a complete confession so that I have removed from me any impulse towards other sins?

When you come close to Eucharist, the main thing is you to believe in the real presence of the body and of the blood of our Lord in that Eucharist, and you to believe that you are sinner, but you must have been also fighting on all ways against the sins and for getting yourself cleaned of your sins. Namely you won't come as one who accepts, with indifference, his state as sinner.

464. Of the same one towards the same one: Master, how did our Savior allow Judah to be imparted with the Last Supper? This is for Jaint John Chrysostom in his interpretation given to the Gospel according to Matthew, he says: "The unworthy must be stopped from the fearsome table of the Mystery" (G.P. 58: 743). And Saint Paul declares one like this as submitted to the judgment (1 Cor. 11: 27-28). By this, he doesn't allow him who is aware of is sins to dare to come close to the fearsome Mystery and to be imparted with that life that spring out of the Mystery. So, what should I do? This is because this thought disturbs much me the sinner?

Answer: In order Him to show His great love for people, and in order Him to show that He endures the man to the last man's breath, in order the man to repent and to be alive, God washed Judah's feet and He allowed Judah to be imparted with His Mysteries, in order Judah to take away any defense[842] form Judah and from those who always tall that if He didn't allowed Judah to enjoy those, Judah wouldn't have been lost. So, he condemned on himself and it has been the word of the Apostle: "And if the unbeliever wants to separate himself, let him separate himself" (1 Cor. 7: 15), and this word regards both the sinners and them who do not repent. And if Saint John stopes them, he does that for teaching and for rebuking, by drawing their attention on the judgment and on the eternal torment. This is for he didn't say that he forcedly rejects those, neither that he cut them off from the Church. This is for neither Jesus did that to Judah. And if they remain in their sins, and if they come close shamelessly, they condemn on themselves by separating themselves from the glory of God.

And on those sinners who come close to the Holy Mysteries as some wounded people and as ones asking for mercy, the Lord will make them worthy of His Mysteries. This is for our Lord said: "I haven't come to call the righteous, but the sinners to repentance" (Lk. 5: 32). And again: Not the healthy ones need the doctor, but the sick" (Lk. 5: 31). But I am telling you again that what Saint John said, that by impeding the sinners from the Holy Mysteries, he heralded them their damnation. This is for "him who eats and drink unworthily, he eats and drinks judgment to himself" (1 Cor. 11: 29). And one like this is throw outside the Church of God[843]. This is because he hasn't taken except the judgment. That's why Saint John didn't say to be those cut off (from the Holy Impartation), but he said to let them give the decision to themselves. On the other hand, no one must say that he is worthy of the Holy Impartation, but we must say: "I am unworthy and I believe that I will be sanctified if I am imparted". And this will be him according to his faith, through our Lord Jesus Christ. Who it is due the glory forever. Amen.

465. Question: When Judah said: "I have sinned, because I have sold innocent blood" and he threw away the silver coins (Mt. 27: 5), didn't he repent" (in Codex Vatopedi 2, Sinai 410, Cutlumuş 3, and Pantelimon 192 it is added here that this question belonged to Abba Elien, while actually this question belonged to one who loved Christ).

Answer: It had been repentance if he would have gone to our Lord to ask Him for forgiveness. This is for it was said: "Go, in the first place, and reconcile yourself with your brother" (Mt. 5: 24); you must reconcile with him whom you have mistaken to, and not with somebody else. But Judah did something even worse[844]. This was because, by going, he killed himself because of his despair and that's why he was not accepted back again.

[843] So, one received his salvation because he wills it, and he rejects his salvation because he wants to reject it. He who comes close to the holy body and blood while feeling sorrow for his sins, he will be saved, while him who comes close with indifference or despise, he will be condemned.

[844] Asking for forgiveness to him whom you have done something wrong it is more difficult than telling your sin to somebody else. But the forgiveness which you are asking from comes from him and it places you again in an affectionate communication with him. This is for, by humiliating yourself in front of him, he will see you exiting the enmity you have with him. But, as long as the asking for forgiveness is the sign of a repentance that melts down your heart and by it you prove to the another that and you believe that he can be softened too, the despair leads to suicide and to a definitive callousness, because of not thinking that the another and God Himself can get softened to their heart anymore. The despair is a faithlessness into God's love and into the capacity of love of the fellow humans.

466. Question: Master, please tell me: what the will of God and His lenience are about? And which is the consequence of one and of another?

Answer: When it comes to you a happening causing you trouble, you must examine your thought if it reproaches you something for the things happening to you. And if your thought doesn't reproach anything to you, you will know that that happening has come to you to test you. And this is the will of God. But if you find out that your thought reproaches something to you, related to that happening, your trouble has come to you by the lenience of God towards correcting you (through rebuking). But both of those are useful to the man.

467. It is good, as you have taught me, to surrender ourselves to the will of God. This guards the man undisturbed. But when somebody who is weak as I am, he sees a thing on the way of not succeeding, he will either get disturbed or, if he shows patience, he will repent by thinking that that thing hasn't come to success because of his patience. Which oen of these two os the best? And how can that one to correct himself? And how must one reckon that somebody can get rid of disturbance?

Answer: The Lord said: "rejoice when you fall in diverse of temptations" (Jas. 1: 2). Among the diverse temptations which the man must rejoice of, there is this one too: If he is weak and he has no patience, so that he cannot rejoice of the unsuccess of a thing and to surrender himself to the will of God, he firstly must fight the disturbance, saying to himself: "Take heed and do not get disturbed". And if it is the will of God that that thing to succeed, that thing will succeed. So, anything happened, you should accept that with thankfulness. This is because no good things get accomplished through our efforts, by by the power and by the will of God. Still, God asks for our endeavor according to God, and not for our endeavor that would be instilled by some cunningness or lie, because these ones belong to the evil one.

468. Question: When many defiled thoughts rise up within me, and I fear to surrender to certain one among those, what should I do?

Answer: You must tell God: "Master, forgive me everything that I think against Your will, either knowingly, or unknowingly. For Your it is the mercy forever. Amen".

469. Question: It is good or not, us to always tell the beautiful stories form the Scripture and form the lives of the Fathers?

Answer: Everyone know that the honey is sweet. And it is not unknow also the word from the Proverbs: "If you find honey, eat as much as you need, lest by getting satiated of it you will throw it up (vomit)" (Prov. 29: 16). There are sacks and sacks. There is a sack containing fifty kilos, while other sack can contain three times more. So, one cannot force the fifty kilos sack to contain three times more. Here too it is likewise. We cannot make all the people equal. This is for one can speak without getting hurt, while another cannot do so. Therefore, the silence if better and more beautiful than everything. And the silence was honored and embraced by the Fathers, and through it they gained their glory. This is for, by showing its beauty and the damnation coming out of speaking, Job said: "I will put my finger on my mouth" (Gen. 39: 34). And before him, Patriarch Abraham, after uttering those beautiful asks, he said: "I am dust and ashes" and: "I fear that something will happen to me, Lord, if a continue speaking" (Gen. 18: 27, 32), and he showed his silence after that.

But, because of our weakness we haven't reached yet to walk on the consummate way of those ones, let's speak out the things helping us to get built up, form the "Word of the Fathers" and let's not throw ourselves to telling the stories from the Scriptures. This is because such a thing is dangerous to the nescient. This is for those things were told in spiritual manner. And he who is bodily he cannot discern the spiritual aspects (1 Cor. 2: 15). And it was aid: "The letter kills, and the Ghost makes alive" (2 Cor. 3: 6). Let's therefore run to the word of the Fathers, and we will find the benefit in them. And let's these ones too, to be spoken briefly, because of remembering him who said: "Out of much-speaking the sin won't be absent" (Prov. 10: 19). And even though our thought tells us that those word and those stories are beautiful, let's remember that ourselves are not workers of the uttered things, and let's reckon that even thought we build up others by uttering those things, we will get condemned even more, by not doing that what we say[845]. But let not this impede us from discussing about the godlike things. This is for it is more beneficial to us to discuss about those than to discuss useless things. But, in order us not to fall into haughtiness, or into the thought of praising ourselves, we must reckon ourselves as we actually are, as non-fulfillers of the things uttered by us, and therefore as ones who utter those things towards our condemnation. But both for these mistakes and for other mistakes, let's pray God: "Do not judge me for I have uttered these things".

470. There are some neutral things, neither sinful nor useful, as for instance the agitation from the town, of the peace from the town, or the town's good prosperity, of the wars, or some other things similar to these ones. Is it useless to talk about such things?

Answer: If it is more useful to keep our silence even about the good things, all the more will we do that regarding the neutral things. But if we cannot keep our silence, but we are overcome by our desire for speaking, let's not tarry in discussing about those things, lets we fall, because of our much-speaking, into the trap of our enemy[846].

[845] We will be even more condemned if other become workers what we said, because that fact proves that those things can be fulfilled by people, and despite we know those things better we do not fulfill them with our deeds. We remain exterior to the things we utter, and by doing so we will be liars. Blessed are those, who do not allow themselves to be influenced by the example of the liars, but by defending the possibility of fulfilling the words even against those who utter them as liars, they fulfill those words.

[846] We have had experienced often the fact that our discussions have enslaved us only to the demons because of the sins we have been committing during those discussions, because of saying something unpleasant to the participant to those discussions, or to those who have been absent but other told them about our sayings.

Question: Because of many times the neutral things lead me to much-speaking, which I am not able to avoid sinning, what should I do?

Answer: Let's keep the measure thus: if we know that we have spoken once, because of being us defeated by some thought, if possible, let's stop ourselves for the second time, and let's be prepared for the third time. And thus, let's prepare ourselves for stopping ourselves form all the following discussion. This is for, if the number of the discussion reaches ten if somebody has been defeated in nine of those, but he has stopped from one discussion, he will have reached better than him who has fallen into all ten discussions.

472. Question: If I am in the presence of some people who talk about something bodily or spiritually, what should I do? Will I speak or not?

Answer: If you have reached at a meeting with some people speaking about something worldly or spiritual, give them the appearance that you too say something, but say something that won't bring any harm to the soul. But take care of avoiding their praises. And do this in order they not to reckon you as silent, and you to have some burdening out of that[847]. But by doing so, you must take heed at speaking only a few words, so that not to offend those by speaking many words. This is because you do not know if the sole word uttered by you, it won't burden you more than those will be because of their many words.

473. Question: Where does it come to me from, the fact that I speak to somebody about something, with disturbance, and that, though I repent, I fell again, willingly, in the same mistake? Then, I am also troubled by my idleness (acedia).

[847] If you gave them the impression that you willingly keep your silence, those ones could reckon you as proud and as offending them intentionally. Be so humble than to hide even your humbleness.

Answer: This comes out of the fact that we do not have our heart into work[848]. That's why we fall also in idleness and in many other evil things.

474. Question: The Great Oldman said that if somebody feels disturbance in his thought, even up to the third time, that one will come from the evil one. Please explain me that!

Answer: If you think at something and if you see a disturbance in your thought and, by calling upon the name of God even for three times, that disturbance persists, you will understand that that thing is from the evil one and you won't do that thing[849]. And if, only after you have decided to do that thing, there will be born a disturbance and your thought will be overcome by that disturbance, neither then will be indifferent that what you have decided to do[850]. This is for nothing will be pleasant to God if it has disturbance within. And if somebody resists the disturbance[851], he must not necessarily reckon that thing as harmful, but let him examine if that thing is good or bad. And if that thing is good, he must not renounce to it. And if he sees that that thing is good, let him do that thing, while despising his disturbance by the help from God.

475. Question: It happens to me to start a discussion with somebody and after I have started that dialogue, there it comes the disturbance. What should I do? This is because if I stop myself to examine the word, as you told me, in order I to see whether that word if good of bad, I will be despised by them who listen to me, for I keep my silence.

[848] The disturbance put into discussion come from not having the remembrance of God or of Christ within our heart, from not being focused into you while you are speaking, or focused on thinking at your sins and at your duty to humble yourself. From here comes the passion (the disturbance) manifested in discussion. We reckon too important the things said by us and we think about ourselves of being too important as it would depend on us for the truth to be known.

[849] You will understand if you do that thing with pleasure, with covetousness, and with passion.

[850] In the first case the disturbance appears even united with the thought; in the second case the disturbance appears after the thought.

[851] So, he is not totally taking into mastery by his disturbance.

Answer: If it is not obvious to you that that word is sinful, you will bring that word to its end. And after that you will examine whether you have spoken wrongly. And if you find out that yes, you will punish your thought of having spoken, as one who have spoken wrongly, in order you not longer to do that. This is for it was written: "My son, you have sinned, do not do that anymore" (Sirach[852] 21: 1). And take heed not at cogitating that the uttered things are uttered towards good; and only after that you will accept the dialogue. And if it is obvious to you that the word is sinful, then you will force yourself to cut that word off, even though there will occur some disturbance, either by pretending that you have forgotten, or by moving the word to other more useful content, in order you not to fall in the condemnation tied to that bad word[853].

476. Question: You said, Father, that before staring the discussion I must examine my thought. But what should I do when the need requires me to tell that word, or when I am in the middle of a discussion, so that I won't seem that I will have locked myself up in my silence, but that I want to tell myself something about the discussed things, especially when I do not notice any obvious sin in that word, but that word seems to me as good, or neither good nor bad? What do you command me to do, once I have no time to fully discern if there is some sin in that word?

Answer: If that word seems good to you, or it seems at leas neither good nor bad, and the need requires you to tell it, you will tell that word, except in case that you see that out of that word comes some vain-glory to you, or if you intuit that those who listen to you will praise you somehow. In this case you must convince your thought not to receive the vain-glory. But if you see that the vain-glory defeats you, it will be better to [853] The disturbance is caused by the vain-glory or by the sin associated to the word you tell, or to the deed you commit. That's why, there where is disturbance, there won't be God, or you feel that you are not in state of peace with God. This is for God is the source of the peace, for He wants to keep everyone in the union conditioned by the humbleness of everybody.

you rather to keep your silence, than you to be hurt by vain-glory.

477. Question: You showed me, Father, how the things dome with disturbance or out of vain-glory are from the devils. And I thank the Lord Who have enlightened me through your spiritual teaching and Who destined to us who are sinners, to meet saints on the way of our life. But I pray you to teach me this thing too: what is the self-justification?

Answer: The self-justification is the deed that is not worthy to be praised, because it denies the sin, as we can wee at Adam, at Eva, at Cain, and at them who resemble those. This is because, by sinning and by wanting to justify themselves, they denied their sin[854].

478. Question: It happens sometimes that a thought not only that brings me disturbance, but it even pushed me to do or to say something. But is happened also that, on the opposite, that thought impedes me to finish my word or the thing, or that thought opposed me when I want to interrupt what I say or what I do. What should I do in such cases?

Answer: I told you before that one must examine every word and thing if it is good or bad. Let this make us despise all the other things. This is for, if it is good, you will go it. And if it is not good, you won't do it. But in order not to do that what is good with disturbance, you must examine your thought that urges you, regarding the reason why your thought urging you to that. And if you examine that thought with the fear of God, God won't let you go astray. This is for how could God allow you to go astray when Himself swore off, saying: "I am alive, says the Lord, I do not want the death of the sinner but I want him to turn back and to be alive" (Ezek. 18: 23)? God won't let you, especially when seeing you examining your thought regarding the salvation of your soul and the tuning back towards Him. So, you must call God's name in everything.

[854] To the self-justification, Saint Apostle Paul opposed the justification through God, a justification coming out of the faith into God, and not out of oneself. But waiting for the justification form God and not from oneself, it implies the humbleness. And in the same time with the humbleness, it implies also the thought of not reckoning oneself as justified through his faith. In this sense, the justification is a hope, and not a full-of-pride sureness. Somebody is justified when he doesn't reckon himself justified yet, not even by God as in case of the Lutheranism. This is because he always feels himself as sinner.

479. Question: It happens to me, sometimes, that I call the name of God and it still remain in my thought a heaviness in this regard. Therefore, for how many times should I call Him?

Answer: It will suffice to you calling God's name once, and trice, but not more. And if that heaviness persists, you will overlook it. This is because that heaviness comes from the devils. And I say this for the case which nothing impeded you in, from speaking or from doing that thing, for that thing is good or neutral. Then it will suffice if you call the name of God once, or at most trice[855].

480. Question: When I want to tell or to do a good thing, and, because I fear not to be born within me some disturbance[856] because of that, I renounce to that, will I be right or wrong?

Answer: When you have to do or to tell something, but you fear lest out of that will be moved within you some disturbance, and that's why you renounce to it, you won't be right. This is because you entice the enemy (you don't confront the enemy) and so you won't get rid of your disturbance. This is because the enemy won't stop giving birth within you to disturbance regarding anything, and so your passion will become even worse. But if you do that thing with prayer and by the fear of God, the help from God will bring your disturbance to an end[857].

[855] One must ceaselessly call upon the name of God, but it will suffice doing that trice, in order to speak or to do something good or neutral.

[856] The disturbance which he says about, that it could be born on each time he in on the way to tell or to do something, it is the vain-glory.

[857] When you do not want to say or to do something because of fearing the temptation, you will tell or accomplish that thing with prayer and with the fear of God, rather than to avoid telling of doing that because of fearing your vain-glory.

481. Question: You told me, Father, that the silence is good. On the other hand, if I use the silence I will seem as running away, and therefore I will be hurt. How can I understand this?

Answer: When you keep your silence due to your ascesis, then the silence is good. But when you do not keep your silence due to that, but because you fear the disturbance, you silence is harmful[858].

482. Question: For God made the man free and for God doesn't force the man to do that what is right, tell me, Father, how does God help him whom an injustice is done to? And what it was said like: "The Lord scatters the thoughts of the peoples and He rejects the advices of the rulers" (Ps. 32: 10[859])? And pray for I to me delivered from the devilish faithlessness and for I to cherish your spiritual teaching.

God doesn't force the man to do that what is right, because of the man's freedom. But when the man is sometimes is wronged and the man is worthy fop being delivered form injustice, God impeded him who does the injustice sand God doesn't count this to him towards righteousness, because of the bad decision and because he decided to commit injustice[860].

[858] Each deed can be good of bad. It depends on the circumstances. The decision to do or not to do a deed. It must be made with right-reckoning. When you keep your silence in order you to make an effort for spiritual growth, that is a good silence. But when you keep your silence because of fearing your vain-glory, and that is not beneficial to somebody, that it is not good.

[859] In KJB we have: Ps. 33: 10: "The Lord bringeth the counsel of the heathen to nought: he maketh the devices of the people of none effect."; in ROB we have: Ps. 32: 10: "The Lord scatters the counsels of the gentiles, and He rejects the thoughts of the peoples and He defames the advices of the chieftains.

[860] God doesn't force the man to do the good, for God respects the freedom given by Him to the man; this is for God hasn't created the man as an object. But God punishes the man when the man used his freedom wrongly, or God makes the man suffer in order the man to correct himself in using his freedom rightly. That's why God allows the man to do injustices for a long period of time, but God helps in a certain way those whom one commits injustice to, by giving them satisfactions, or by delivering them from the injustice done to them, but only if they are worthy of that. And thus, they who make them suffer, they serve a punishment tools, and therefore, maybe, for their straightening. Thus, by wrongly using their freedom, the people harm each other, but they also are helped by that to correct themselves, if they want to. This is because not God Himself punishes them and corrects them through punishment, but God uses themselves to do that. Namely, God not only uses their rightly-used freedom, but he

Thus, the Chaldeans did injustice to them who were around Azariah, by throwing them into the oven of fire, but because those were worthy of being delivered, God spared them and God impeded the fire from doing the injustice, but we do not attribute to the Chaldeans the justice done to them, once the Chaldean will was evil, but we attribute the justice to God Who scattered the counsels of the peoples for them who fear Him. This is because, even if the evil is impeded to be done to the good ones, the unjust ones will take their payment for the evilness of the injustice they did. Take heed not to get astray from the truth which God of the glory leads you to, through the prayers of the saints. Amen.

483. Question: A brother who worked together with another brother, he was hit by that brother, through the work of the devil. And he was disturbed because of that, so that he wanted to no longer work in common with the brother who hit him, and he asked the Great Oldman about that.

The answer of Barsanuphius: Brother, regarding that what you have asked me about, I am telling you not to get disturbed so that you to do something with disturbance, especially regarding a man who is himself disturbed by his thoughts and by the envy form the devil, as you to were tempted and infuriated on those moments, by your thoughts. This is for, if you recall what you have suffered like, back then, you won't despise you brother because of the temptation he suffered. This is for many ill people, by the pilling up of their blood to their brain, by a fiery fever, they thing and they speak unknowingly; and they even curse the healthy persons who take care of them. This is for they are mastered by their illness, as it happened in your case too. And if somebody tells to that ill man, the ill man will refuse the medicine. This is because the ill man doesn't know what is useful to himself. The ill man reckons as insanity the things told him by somebody and he swears and he gets angry and he asks for harmful or good foods, but he doesn't know that what he does. It is likewise with the tempted one. Even if he loses his soul, he won't know. Even if he swears and also uses their wrongly used freedom. In a way, God limits the evil through the evil itself. But in hell there won't come any good in anyone, and the evil will be endless.

despises the saints who suffer together with him for his soul, he won't know. This is because he has become callous in the illness coming to him form the enemy that always turn his things upside down, until the enemy makes him deny God Himself. It is so in this case too. But by knowing this, God doesn't allow us, out of oikonomia, to show us to Him unproven, by bearing our neighbor at the time of his felt and spiritual helplessness. This is for he said: "Bear you burdens to one another and so you will fulfill the law of God" (Gal. 6: 2). So, if somebody wants to help an ill man, this doesn't consist of doing that ill man's will and of giving to the ill man the things harmful to him, but it consists of bearing the ill man's curses and in taking care of not giving something harmful to the ill man[861]. So, you should do alike this time too. Not in fulfilling the will of the ill one consists care for him of, but it consists of praying for him. And if you cannot do that, you will ask them who can do it, in order they to ask from God to deliver him from the temptation coming to him from the enemy. And by doing so, you will be like Martha and Mary, the sisters of Lazarus, who begged the Lord to resurrect their brother. And if somebody does this, let him not think anything big about himself. This is because he does for that one that what others do for himself[862]. "This is for with the measure you measure with, it will be measured to you" (Lk. 6: 38)[863]. And you must not reckon that if [861] You must the mockeries of the ill man who asks you for thing which can harm him, and you must not to answer alike. This is because the opposite will make him even more ill. You must be gentle to the sick, but you must not fulfill his inappropriate lusts by you doing his ill will.

[862] All of us need to be suffered by others. That's why is not the case for reckoning that we do something big when suffering another and when praying for him. Do not take pride when you have done good to others, for God has done good to you too, through others, and you have done good to others through God too. But do not get pride either when you have suffered something from others, for the Lord too suffered form others and by that He wanted to heal them up. So, the Lord is the One suffering within you. When you suffer from another and you don't answer him alike, the Lord will heal him up through you. The Lord uses us when we do good things, and He is the One suffering when we suffer without riposte from others, in order us to be healed up. The Lord of the skies and of the earth, by suffering the beatings from others, but without answering them alike, He showed that the true glory consists of enduring the hits from others, in order they to be healed through the example of the supreme love. We usually do differently: the more important we are, the less we endure the hits from others. This shows that what we reckon as glory, it is not a true glory, for it cannot heal.

[863] When you do something good to somebody else, you do not do else but paying for the good done to you by others. And Him Who does the good through people is God. God wants to catch us, by that, as active agents in the circuit of the good among us. This is for, only by engaging us too in the good which God want to do, He makes us too as kind.

you have been hit by somebody else, you have suffered such a big deal. This is because Himself the Lord of the sky and of the earth has bene hit. And all the following things. Do not allow yourself to be budged and so you to move away from your place and part with your brother. This is because such a thing won't be according to God, but it will be the fulfillment of the devil's will. And if you do this, you still won't find rest, but it will be even worse to you. This is because out of evil there comes not good. And this is disobedience and non-sapience. "This is because, there where is strive and quarrel, there is disorder and any bad thing" (Jas. 3: 16). No one ever get healed up through these. But only him who cuts off his will and who fight for not spying his neighbor, neither he ever says his neighbor: "What is this or that?". And he who says: "I want this too", he makes himself son of the devil and a stranger to God. This is because it is obvious that he wants to do his will and not the will of God[864]. Encourage yourself, brother, and God will shelter you. And pray for your brother with the whole your soul and love him into Christ Jesus our Lord Who it is due the glory forever. Amen.

484. Ask: A brother asked the same Great Oldman to pray for him, saying: forgive me for hindering you so much. But I believe in God that through your prayers I will be strengthened and I will no longer bother you so much.

The answer of Barsanuphius: All of them who are sons of God, they are, doubtlessly, also inheritors of the goodness, of the patience, or the mercy, of the love for people, and of the love for God. This is for, if they are sons of God, they will be goods too[865]. And God is light and they are lighteners. So, if God is [864] He who fulfills his will he fulfills the will of the devil and he becomes the devil's son. This is because an own will that is not one with the will of God, it is one with the devil's will. Properly-said, the man's true will coincides to God's will. By this the man tears down the wall between him and God. On the opposite, the mans own will separates the man from God and form other people. The true will of the man is the one uniting the man with God and with his fellow humans. This is for God created all the people for the union with Himself and into Himself. This is the strong will of the man: not allowing his will to be dragged away by his egotistic passions which separate him form God and which loke the man up into his egotism.

[865] They are masters over themselves, non-enslaved to the passions, they are free, and in this they meet God in a unique freedom of the love. Theya re then good too, because only the weak ones fear other people, because they are evil. The do not breath in the fearless width of bothered and burdened when prayed, that will happen to them too. And if God gets sad because of not being prayer, and when prayed God rejoices, those things will happen to them as well[866]. "Love you neighbor as on yourself", says the Old Testament (Lev. 19: 18). And the New Testament, by showing us the consummation, says "we put our soul for one another", as the consummate One and Son of God have His life for us (Jn. 3: 16).

So, when the saints a prayed, they rejoice, as ones who are consummate, as their Father consummate is[867]. So, you ask them and they will unhesitatingly give you. This is for they are not drowsy and idle as I am. And pray for me so I could be among them as well. And I will pray God to fulfill your asks, in the first place you to receive the power from above and the love for Him; and I will pray Him for Him to support you in his fear[868] and in the faith of your hearts. Therefore, remain doubtless and waiting for His mercy. And He "will make more than abundant the things asked by you and understood by us" (Eph. 3: 20). This is for His is the glory forever. Amen.

the love of God. Somewhere there must be such a height elevated above all the things submitted to the laws and above them who fall under the slavery of their passions. Only through that personal reality, free of all possible servitudes, the people can raise to freedom.

[866] The consummation of God was shown in the fact of giving His Son to death for us. And the consummation of the embodied Son was shown in the fact of giving His human life for us. In a way, if God continues to be consummate, He will continue to suffer for us, to be in state of sacrifice for us. And us, if we want to be consummate as God is, we must do the same. That's why we receive the state of sacrifice within us. Throughs sacrifice you exit your own prison and you open the gate to others. The sacrifice means the broadness in love, the true conquest of others. The consummation consists of the power to conquer everyone while letting them to be free, and by making them too the owners of your goods. Through prayer we show God that we too open ourselves to Him. And through the prayers addressed to the saints we who that to the saints as well. Through prayers we too contribute to the union among us which is wanted by God.

To God too is a joy you to pray to Him, for by doing that you show your trust and your love as son, and God accepts you with love. This is for God Himself is a Trinity of love. And God shows Himself thus also in the deed of the creation and in His care for the creation.

[867] The love doesn't become exhausted, but the love increases by being practiced. Only through love the spiritual man grows up truly.

[868] Th fear of God is not a weakness as the fear of people is, but the fear of God is a strength towards people, a capacity of giving your life for God. The fear of God supports you through the sureness of the imperishable life into God. he who is leaning on the fear of God, he won't tremble because of people or because of the world, because he doesn't lean on the reed of a life that is wobbly and that it advances towards withering.

485. Question: A brother asked Abba of the monastery where the Fathers were, to give him a monastic cell nearby, and Aba deigned to give his that. Meanwhile, that brother met a monk who asked him to come a dwell in a monastic cell near to him. The brother answered him that he cannot do that without the approval from the Fathers and from Abba who wanted to give him that monastic cell. And by coming, the brother asked the other Oldman what should he do?

The answer of John: Brother, our Lord commanded us to have other more important than we are (Phil. 2: 3)[869]. So, if for the love we have for you we have told you to dwell near us, we have shown by our deed that we are more important than the brother is. But if we tell you this time: "Remain near to him", your love may reckon that we reject you from us because of not loving you. But you must judge the neighborhood of the places and the benefic for your soul out of those, and take heed at the word of the Apostle: "Probing everything, keep that what is good" (1 Thes. 5: 21). I have spoken these due to the love according to God, Forgive me, my brother, for the Lord!

486. Question towards the Great Oldman: A monk who dwelled in a monastic cell that wasn't his, he built up to himself a monastic cell nearby. And a bother who need a monastic cell came to him and he invited him to dwell together in the monastic cell he built. But the coming brother asked for that monastic cell to be bestowed to him with a contract. And the owner accepted to do that if the Fathers will allow that. But the condition was that the coming brother to draw water out of the well, on each week, two pitchers of water. And he asked the Great Oldman about that.

The answer of Barsanuphius: This is not appropriate to the monks. This is because, if you sign a contract between you, you might reach in court, and that won't be a deed of love. So, let the brother dwell that monastic cell without a contract. And if the owner of the monastic cell wants to ask him to leave, he will have to leave, with humbleness and without resisting. And if the master of the monastic cell some to fill up his two pitchers of water, and he who dwell that monastic cell doesn't allow him to do that, let him not get disturbed, but let him bow down in front of him and bring back his empty pitcher, telling him: "Forgive me, brother, for the lord, because I have bothered you, and pray for me". And he will take heed at not to be disturbed by anger. And for his humbleness, God will defend that brother too against the enmity from the devil and he will be pushed to run after him and to bow down before him and he will bend down and fill up the pitcher with water and he will help him carry that pitcher. And the love of God will cover both of them and the loving-of-people God will save them.

[869] From here it follows that we must take care for others more than for ourselves, for we cherish them more than us. Only thus it can be explained the commandment to sacrifice ourselves for others as Christ did it for us (1 Jn. 3: 16).

487. Question: The monastic cell needs repairs. Should him who dwell in that monastic cell spend hi money even thought that monastic cell doesn't belong to him, or he is expected to leave it soon?

Answer: If somebody thinks that everything he has actually belong to God and are common to all believers, and that nobody has something belonging only to him, he must not cogitate thus. This is because that is characteristic to a bodily thinking. This is for even he has spent something but he won't remain there, another brother will have rest because of that and he will always bless him who spent to restore that monastic cell. This is for, if we truly reckon the said things: "With the measure you measure, it will be measures to you" (Lk. 6: 38), and: "He will reward each one according to his deeds" (Ps. 61: 11[870]), and: "May him give you according to your heart" (Ps. 19: 5[871]), He won't let that one come close vainly, but He will shout out towards him: "I won't leave you, neither I will overlook you" (Joshua Navi[872] 1: 5).

[870] In KJB we have: Ps. 62: 11-12: "God hath spoken once; twice have I heard this; that power belongeth unto God. // Also unto thee, O Lord, belongeth mercy: for thou renderest to every man according to his work."; in ROB we have: Ps. 61: 11: "God uttered once, I reward these two things: that the power if of God and Your, Lord, it is the mercy; that You will reward to each one according to his deeds." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[871] In KJB we have: Ps. 20: 5: "We will rejoice in thy salvation, and in the name of our God we will set up our banners: the Lord fulfil all thy petitions."; in ROB we have: Ps. 19: 5: "We will rejoice of Your salvation and into the God's name we will be extolled. May the Lord grant you all your asks." (E. l. t.'s n.)

488. Question: A brother asked the same Great Oldman: "Forgive me, master Father, because I dare to speak: I see mister Abba loving one more than me, and this thought upsets me by whispering me that he wants to be pleasant to some people. This is for, everything some people ask for, he gives them. But he doesn't give me anything. I once asked for a window but he didn't give it to me. On some other occasion I asked for a little whitewash, and he didn't give me that. And he gave that to other people. Why does he do that? And what should I answer to my thought?

The answer of Barsanuphius: Brother, one need patience. This is for our Lord said: "Into your patience you will gain your souls" (Lk. 21: 19). And the Apostle said: "You need patience" (Hebr. 10: 36). If God wanted to test you whether you can endure something, you shows yourself impatient. For hos many years you have been living thus in your monastic cell without saying anything. And by seeing another doing something, you immediately jump as burnt in fire. Why haven't you told to your thought: "I have been living thus for the whole time, won't I have patience for a few more days?". If you thought tells you: "And why has he done it to others?", you will answer it: "Those ones are saints, and I am unworthy and worthy of all troubles. If you reckon your Abba as favoring some people, and that's not true, you will lose your soul[873]. And if he favors somebody, will not be you who will be take accountable for that, but he will be accountable for you. And him who asks for something, let him examine the time, the circumstances, and his ability to use that thing. And then he will find out why he has not been given that thing which he wanted. And if doesn't find out the answer, he won't have to blame others by on himself, saying: "I am unworthy". And you will find escape from that thought, brother. This is the way of them who want to be saved and to live according to God.

[873] "Losing the soul" means also "no longer having soul", namely "becoming soulless". This means becoming insensitive and savage like a wild beast. But that is a torment of the man to himself and to people from around him. Such a man no longer is aware of himself; he estranges from himself, he gets alienated. Thus, one loses his soul in hell.

489. An ole man among the fathers was dwelling in the monastery where the holy Old Men were too. And he was asked by his servant: "What do you want me to prepare for dinner?", he answered, furiously: "Do whatever you want". And the brother got upset, and he didn't know what to do. And he asked the Great Oldman: "Is him right talking like that, or he isn't?".

And the Great Oldman answered him: I am not allowed to condemn anyone. This is for every one carries his own burden. But as it seems to me, such an answer upsets the neighbor, even if we give such an answer for ascesis. The old man should have rather said to the brother with humbleness: "This thing I would like for today". And even if the brother cooked that tasteless and he served it wrongly, he should thank him. This is because, even if the brother does that thing well or wrongly, getting angry because of that it is worse than all passions. This is for such a man gets angry recklessly and this is not out of the knowledge of God, but this is rather a devilish work. Still, him who serves must be long-patient. This is for everyone who bears his brother with the fear of God, he will have the Ghost of God resting upon himself[874].

490. The same brother, by being honored and comforted by Abba and by the brotherhood of the monastery, according to the fear of God, he didn't feel himself healed, but he got even more troubled and he reckoned himself as not comforted according to the appropriateness, so that he left the monastery secretly. And the people form the monastery found out, later, where that old man was living, they wanted to pay him a visit and to pray him to turn back to them, for they heard that he was troubled. And they asked the Great Oldman, mentioning also the words of the Apostles: "Lest, because of too deep sadness, him to be overwhelmed" (2 Cor. 2: 7).

[874] Being patient to the brother who bothers you it is the only means for appeasing him. Being strong in this sense is the only means to communicate him power. The Ghost that rests Himself upon the Son, He also rests upon them who attach themselves to the Son, and He gives them too, the resting, through the comforting brought form the Father. And he extends Himself with His resting united with the comforting produced by Him, within us, also upon the agitate brother, for the Ghost is the One Who make us brothers with the Son.

Answer: The Apostle told that because he surrendered that man to satan (1 Cor. 5: 5). And that one had reasons to get sad, because he was banished away from the community. That's why, by seeing him repenting, the Apostle told them: "strengthen you love towards him" (2 Cor. 2: 8). So, if you know that you were the ones banishing him away, you must go and bow down before him and beg him to come back. But if he decided to leave by himself, even if you go to call him back, for God, his will to justify himself will come upon him again. This is because he will be ready to let himself again to be prey to getting upset. And on any other occasion he will say again: "I was out and I was forced to come back". Therefore, let him be a little tormented by his thoughts, so that he will sorry for leaving. This is for if he is troubled in his body, he will benefit in his ghost. Thus, his pride and his urge to justify himself, they will be cut off from him, if he sees himself in many troubles. And then he will remember the resting from the monastery. And he will come back, with humbleness, and instead of discontent he will show thankfulness.

491. Question: Why, despite being sorry, he is ashamed of turning back?

Answer: If he repents and if he accepts to blame himself, saying: "I am guilty for everything", God Who said through the prophet: "You tell first your iniquities, so that you to be justified" (Isa. 43: 26)[875], God will see that his heart has been tamed and God will guide him in His fear towards his benefit[876].

[875] God justified him who repents, for the man doesn't justify himself.

[876] The heart of his who repents, it will become tamed, it will be softened, and it will lose its callousness that locks that man up in himself; he escapes the prison of his pride, and he enters the communication with God Who is the spring of the live and of the joy. The Kingdom of God is the kingdom of those who communicate through love, and that's why it is the kingdom of the unity, of the true human reestablished in the Trinity of the full communion among the supreme Persons.

This is for he says: "He will guide the gentle in judgment[877], He will teach the righteous His ways" (Ps. 24: 9[878]). And if he benefits more in the place he was firstly, the Lord will guide his heart to turn back there, with humbleness.

492. A brother who served as a soldier in the world, he entered the monastery and he asked the same Great Oldman if the can repent.

The answer of Barsanuphius: Brother, God doesn't deject anybody, but God calls all the people to repentance. So, he who comes to God, he must come close with the whole his heart and he must sow with trust that he will reap. And he must expect temptations to his last breath.

493. Question: But how does God help him?

Answer: Son, the stadium is open. And him who wants to be saved, he will hear Jesus telling him: "Come to me all of you who are tired and burdened and I will rest you. Learn from Me that I am gentle and humble in heart and you will find resting to your souls. This is for My yoke is gentle and my burden if light" (Mt. 11: 28-30). Think at what you are hearing: "Gentle and humble", in order us too to learn these form Him. He who comes to God, he must not get discouraged or to fear. Otherwise, he won't ever set a beginning to his way. This is for God takes heed at his heart and at the intention of his will. And God knows the weakness of the man that the man cannot succeed in anything by himself. But God is everything and God give power to the worthy so that the man to work powerfully[879]. This is because fi God didn't give power to the strong one, where would the unfortunate man be? If God didn't give wisdom of the [877] The gentle ones use the right-reckoning. They know the people's weaknesses. They keep the balance in judgment, by taking everything in account.

[878] In KJB we have: Ps. 25: 9: "The meek will he guide in judgment: and the meek will he teach his way."; in ROB we have: Ps. 24: 10: "He will guide the gentle to judgment, He will teach the gentle His ways." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[879] The power of God becomes the man's power, but it also remains the power of God. God makes the man strong.

wise one and if God didn't change that one's heart, that one's wisdom would be like that of a stupid and of a lunatic. Therefore, let's get close to God, trustfully, by knowing that God is Him Who gives us power in battle. You must prepare your soul and not only for fighting, but also for getting crowned. May the Lord stand close you for helping you, through the prayers of the saints. Amen.

494. The ask of the same one towards the same Great Oldman: My thoughts imagine the world, and they entice me to turn back into the world. Have mercy on me, in order I to be sheltered through your prayers. This is because, by being I still in the same sins, I prayed God to make me worthy of your protection[880].

The answer of Barsanuphius: My beloved son, encourage yourself into the Lord. God has called you; do not get discouraged, but dare, for the beginning of the work according to God requires wars. But God defeats the enemies. The world's army is the darkness and its inheritance are the eternal torments. And the army of God is the light; and its inheritance is the eternal life. Experience, firstly, the two sides, and then chose whichever you want. And a powerful voice will come to you and it will wake up your heart which is still cold. And you heart will make you run quickly, as you ought to. Do not get afraid. For there are people who can guide you towards the Master.

495. The ask of the same one towards the same Great Oldman: The trouble of the war no starter upon me, it comes form me. Have mercy on me, Master, for your prayers to put an end to [880] When he was in the world, he prayed God to bring him under the protection of Barsanuphius. Now he asks Barsanuphius to pray so that he could be protected by God. We pray God to places us under the protection of a spiritual man whom God will listen to. And we ask that spiritual man for his prayers which God will take us through, under His protection. God helps us to find that man who will find us to earn God's help. God wants us to uphold one another in the ascension towards God, and all of us to rejoice together of the life prepared for everyone. God wants us not only to do something person for strengthening ourselves, but Gode wats us also to do something for others, namely one to ask for another's prayers in order to gain humbleness, and another to pray for him in order to defeat his own egotism and to be strengthened through that one.

that. This is for I have lost what I had by meeting my brothers according to body, who came to see me. This is because the memory of the encounter persists within my mind. And it seems to me that I still am together with them. Help my helplessness and my fear of keeping the path to salvation. This is because I do not know how should I pray to God Who called me, after I tries to disregard Him, and after I have forgotten for an hour about His benefactions. That's why I pray you, have mercy on me, for I have sinned much. And the wars born out of my weakness and out of the helplessness of my faith, they wouldn't leave me. (And tell me if it is allowed and useful I to stop my people from coming to see me, in order they not to bring me the charming temptations of the world. This is because you know that my heart, because of still being cold, if they came, they would bring me disturbance and they would push me on the way of the war. Yesterday, these thoughts left me awhile, through your protection. But today I sat a little by myself, wanting to learn a psalm, and those thoughts rushed upon me so fiercely that I started sweating because of discouragement. That's why, I pray you, do not let me in the hands of my enemies, but you uphold me with your power and banish them away because they have multiplied upon me. And you see my heart than I do not fight the wars with pleasure. Do not let me be defeated because of my weakness and I to know their evilness and I to fall again in their traps, which I have been caught in, before running to you. Forgive me and pray for me, holy Father!

The answer of Barsanuphius: My beloved brother, our Master God has a book which are written in them who come to serve Him with sincerity; in that book it is also written the dowery they have gathered since their first day[881]. WE would pray Him Who "doesn't want the death of the sinner, but him to turn back and him to be alive" (Ezek. 18: 23), so prepare for you a place among those who are being saved. And He had mercy and He appointed you too together with me "Him Who wants that all the people to be saved and to come to the knowledge of the truth" (1 Tim. 2: 4). So, you have taken the gift. Not it depends on you to be written down in this book, or not[882]. If you want, you will be helped by Him Who said: "I you listen to Me, you will eat the goods of the earth" (Isa. 1: 19).

Lo, I have told you, take heed not to get sick with an incurable sickness. This is because by falling in that sickness you won't benefit either within the world. May the Lord protect you against the evil one and to save you in the eternal life. Amen. Son "let the dead to burry their dead" (Lk. 9: 60). And you will see how the Lord is extolled in the counsel of the saints[883].

496. The ask of the same one towards the same Great Oldman: Abba, have mercy on me for the Lord, because when I rest alone there occur the hallucinations. But the hallucinations disturb me also when some people come and visit me, so that even when I lay down in bed, I am mastered by the hallucinations and I cannot rest. And because I am fearful by nature, the war stirs up even more and it doesn't allow me to sleep except for a little while. And as I said, disturbed and with fear. Because of that I also feel a weakness into my body and I barely move. So, you master know what is useful to me. Help me, Father. Forgive me, the sinner and the sick.

The answer of Barsanuphius: Brother, we must extoll God for He shows us what the Scripture is proven true like. This is for it says: "Faithful is God Who won't allow you to be tempted above your power" (1 Cor. 10: 16). So, God allows you to live in ascesis according to your power. And He tempts the great ones, according to their power, with big temptations. And they rejoice of that. This is for the temptations bring the man to advancement. This is for, there where a good occurs, there will occur the war too. So, do not stop yourself because of the temptations. But you rejoice yourself for they bring you to [882] That man receives the gift or the power from God to come ever closer to God. But it remains his responsibility to develop or not, this gift. God writes down everyone who has been baptized, in the book of the salvation. But it depends on each of us that God to write down, in his section, the deeds making him worthy of reaching or not, to God.

advancement. Despise the temptation, and God will help and protect you[884].

497. The ask of the same one; Holy Father, because of being I weak and sinner, I do not have daring to ask something from the merciful God, and that's why I am falling to you so that you to pray for me the sinner, so that God to make me worthy of serving Him and Him to bestow me power and understanding[885]. I pray you for all of these, for you heart to knows that I am nothing. But O believe, my good Father, that your prayers are able to make God lenient towards my sins, so that God to overlook my sins and Him to make me worthy of starting to walk of the blesses way; In order I, by stepping on it into knowledge, guided by your mercy, you the blessed one, I to ceaselessly give thanks to the loving-of-people God Who extolls me through you with all the goods. Forgive me my stupidity and my daring, and pray for me.

The answer of Barsanuphius: Better said, brother, may God of the heavens and of the earth strengthen you in His holly calling which He called you with, and may Him make you worthy of adoption which only a few are found worthy of. And may God support your heart as He did to Anna's heart, so that you to bring forth fruits blessed by God (1 Kings[886]: 1-2); and you to sing a new song to God; and you to progress in good deeds on the way ahead you; and you to serve God with a clean heart as an experienced soldier. So, do not allow yourself to get bent, do not weaken, but you run zealously towards the holy city of the saints and of the chosen ones, in order you to inherit the faith, in order you to achieve the hope and the love. And those will take you to the holy humbleness which is the mother of all virtues. And you will be saved forever and ever. Amen.

498. The ask of the same one: Being I sinner and helpless, I am not capable to do anything good or something pleasant to [884] The temptation is given to you in order you to fight it. And if you fight the temptation, you will strengthen you will in resisting into God and by that you will advance into good. If you do not have the occasion to fight the temptations, you will get drowsy.

[886] In the KJB we usually use for this book the name: 1 Samuel. (E. l. t.'s n.)

God. That's why I pray you, Master, pray for me, because of being I, as I said, impeded by my weakness.

The answer of Barsanuphius: Blessed are you, brother, for you feel yourself as having sins everywhere. This is for, him who feels his sins, he will doubtlessly get disgusted of his sins and he will part with his sins[887]. And feeling your sins and asking the Fathers for help through their prayers towards God in order to be delivered of sins and of their eternal torments waiting for the sinner, it is a part of the repentance. We are going to pray for you. And you must use your power in order you to gain humbleness, obedience, and non-keeping your will in anything. This is because out of this it is born the anger[888]. And do not judge, either despise somebody. This is because out of this comes the bluntness of the heart and the blindness of the mind[889]. And out of these it will be born the indifference and the callousness of the heart. And you must take vigil in all the things, by thinking at the godlike law, out of which the heart is being warmed up by the heavenly fire. And do not get sad. This is for your calling is from God, brother. And to not get drowsy, neither you get weak. This is for God doesn't ask from you that what is above your power, but that what is according to your power[890]. Guard your mouth against the useless word and against the vain-speaking[891]. Do not cogitate within your heart [887] He who doesn't feel his wickedness as sins and he praises himself with his inequities, he is an insensitive man, he is a cynic who cannot get out of his sins. Neither him who admits his sins jokingly, he doesn't truly feel his sins as such and he doesn't fight to part with his sins. Truly feeling one's sins is intertwined with a deep discontent and with a big sufferance for having sins. This is the beginning of the correction, through repentance and through the pricking of the heart.

[888] The will of standing by yourself it is one with the pride. And when the pride sees itself menaced or offended, it gives birth to anger. And the anger will not longer be a true will, because of being the man no longer in control of himself. And the proud man sees himself menaced in his mastery upon other things or upon other people. In the true will the man is in control of himself. Such a man is not the slave of his anger, or of his pride, or of his other passions. The man is truly strong when he likens God.

[889] The bluntness, or the insensitivity of the heart and the mind's blindness are united to one another. The insensitiveness of the heart is tied to the non-understanding of the value of the other people, and to the non-knowing about God and about the meaning of the life which is enlightened by the knowledge about God.

[890] The man's power is like grain of dust, but the power of God coming with man it bends the universe's laws, it fills up all the realities with godlike light, starting with the man himself.

[891] The vain-word comes out of a vain-man, and it make the vanity persist within that man. And the vain-man has buried his richness into his deeps, or he has withered that richness out, and he is spreading the death of the vanity around himself.

at evil words. And throw your power, through the prayers of the saints, in front of God[892], by saying: "Have mercy on me, for I am sinner!". And God will have mercy on you and he will guard you and He will protect you against all evil. And so, you will come from darkness to the true light, from straying to truth, from death to life, into Christ Jesus our Lord Whom it is due the glory forever. Amen.

499. The ask of the same one towards the other Oldman: Forgive me, Abba, for the lord, because of my daring and insanity and help me because of the multitude of my sins. This is because him who has committed a sole sin before God he needs much repentance, and what am I going to do, because I have been growing up together with the sin, and because I haven't stopped myself from continuing to upset God according to my power[893]? That's why I need your prayers so that all the sins to be removed from me[894]. And I need to be taught how to walk on this way, because I am a man who has come here from many oppositions and from many evils by the great mercy of God. Because of this, I pray you, you the pious Father, have mercy on me and guide me, as you reckon. And pray for me so that I will be able to keep your holy commandments, as I am trying to do.

Answer: Brother, for you have come to Him Who has been crucified for us, you too must take you cross and follow Him (Mt. 16: 24), and you must throw all your worry upon Him. "He Who has done more that we can ask for or understand" (Eph. 3:

[892] "Throw your power in front of God"; lay down your power as a carpet in the way of the light and of the power which irradiate out of God, and your power will be filled up with His power and with his light which are above-nature.

[893] My too tiny power, when I use it for doing good, it is very helpless. But it attracts to itself the huge power of God. But when my tiny power wants to do the evil, it will have considerable effects by itself. This is because using the man's power to do the evil it will separate the man from God and it will cause him soul death. And this causes to God a big pain and, in this sense, it upsets God, or it anger Him.

[894] The getting out of sine is one with getting out of one's egotism of a sort or another. But you cannot exit the egotism of the absence of your communion with others, if some of them doesn't open himself to you for a communication into good, namely into God from Whom comes the good and towards Whom we advance through good. It is a sense of the necessity of the prayers of others for me, in order to help me getting out of sin, or of non-communion.

20). "This is for He takes care of us" (1 Pt. 5: 7)[895]. So, do not get scared and Christ will help you. You must only have, in your mind, son, the word of the Holy Scripture and the preparation which that word tells you about: "Son, if you come to serve the lord, you will have to prepare your soul for temptations" (Sirach[896] 2: 1), because the "non-tempted man is inexperienced" (Resch., Agrapha no. 80, pp. 130-132). And again: "Blessed in that man who endures the temptation, for he will become experienced" etc. (Jas. 1: 12). I am not telling you these things, my brother, in order to scare out off, but I am telling you these in order to uphold you heart into the fear of God on the path to Him. This is for as all the saints advanced through many temptations and troubles. And they were well-pleasant to God, by being they helped by the grace of God. Do not fear, neither weaken. This is for we believe that God is Him Who plants you, and Who waters you up, and Who grows you up (1 Cor. 3: 6), by the prayers of the saints. Amen.

500. Question: What should I do, Father, for I am bothered by the thought of the fornication?

Question: Torment yourself as much as you can; this stays in your power. But do not trust that, but you smut trust [895] God take all our worries, if we trust Him to entrust our worries to Him, so that Him to bear our worries. This is for he has take our worries from us virtually, when He was crucified for us. Now we are required to show our trust in Him, so that we to unburden ourselves of our worries. Our hardships will be solved by Him; our pains are relieved by His compassion; our mistakes will be forgiven by Him if we ask Him for that with trust; he fights our temptations together with us. We are only asked for trusting Him. Properly-said, we are asked only not to remain indifferent, but us too to fight, and to know that by fighting we bear a cross under which He is too, and He has an endlessly greater power than we have. Through the cross we communicate with Him. He bears the cross further on, for all out things. But now we too are required to place ourselves under the cross, next to Him, and to receive the communication offered by Him. The big weight is borne by Him. But He also allows us to bear the wight of the cross to the extent we can, by strengthening us with His power in bearing the cross. This too is a motif for which we are imparted with Him in the Holy Eucharist. We die with Him in order us to resurrect together with Him. We die with Him, to our egotism, and by that we receive from Him the power us to resurrect with Him in the communion with Him. By rejoicing us of t His commiseration with us, we enjoy also the power of the new life that comes to us from Him through this loving communion.

the love and the protection from God. And do not get idle. This is for the idleness stays at the beginning of any evil (Paterikon, Poemen: 149).

501. Question: If a talk to my brother, I often use an angry word. And if I want to utter that word with love, I immediately will experience a fitly sweetness and an ugly movement of my body, so that I cannot look at the face of my brother without those. What should I do?

Answer: Both of them mean death: either speaking angrily or getting aroused within the body a movement of love for a brother. So, by leaving both of those, speak to your brother with self-control and God will help you. And in addition to all of these, guard your eyes. And pray for me!

502. Question: Whys should I do? Because of being I troubled by the war of the belly's covetousness and of the love for money, and of other passions.

Answer: If you are warred by the passions of the belly's covetousness, you will fight with the whole power that you have, according to God, in order not to give your body as much as it needs. Regarding the love for money, likewise, until the war troubles you, you won't keep anything more than you coat. You must fight thus regarding the vessels and even the smallest thing. And after you have overcome that war, you will procure that what you need, according to God.

503. Question: A brother inhabiting together with an old man, he asked the same Oldman John about diet and sleep and about the disturbance he had regarding some things which seemed to him as unjust to his old man.

Answer: The Fathers say that resting (offering food to) your neighbor is a great virtue, especially when somebody doesn't do this thing because of his weakness, or by wasting food. You must give your body as much as it is enough. And even if you eat for three times, you won't be harmed. This is because what will the man benefit by eating only once a day, but without measure? So, you smut understand the thought of your old man with freedom. This is for, once you are living together according to God, he too must be allowed to speak freely. And you must do anything he says that it rests him, and this is the will of God.

And the sleep if of two sorts. Sometimes the sleep burdens the body because of the much-eating, while some other times does that because of helplessness. This is because, when somebody cannot fulfill his job, the sleep comes to him. And to much eating it will follow the war of the fornication. This is for the much-eating burdens the man to sleep in order to defile his body. He who can discern he find out how and where this comes from to him. We are asked to do that what stays in our power and nothing more. This is for the cover and the mercy from God will strengthen our helplessness. For Him it is due the glory forever. Amen. Pray for me, brother! But try and notice if you speak with humbleness and with right-reckoning in an undisturbed manner. And if there is something that is not such, you will chock up your contrary thought and you will shame that thought up. Ans thus that thought will cease[897]. And do not get troubles by something done by the old man. But say: "God know what is useful". And this will appease you. Think at the old man with humbleness and let him do whatever he wants. Pray for me, you most honored brother.

[897] The words express the realities existing among people on the pan of the earthly life. Sometimes the words exceed the existing relationships by wanting to prepare better relationships for the future. But on many occasions the word cross beyond that what is given us, or that what can accomplish us in our earthly life, and that shows that the people tend towards an existence plan superior to the earthly plan. When the words do not serve to these purposes, they will rather entangle the people's life. And because the man is responsible for anything he does and thinks, he will be also held accountable for the words which do not serve these purposes but which entangle (the logos of) the relationships among people, the words which fill up those relationships with the darkness of the mistrust and which throw the relationships in a dirty murkiness and which cover anything with nonsense. The depthless beauty of the words, the more it has got refined, the more it has become tempted by evil. In this beauty shines the praising of the passions, and the abjection of the inferno. This is illustrated by some of the modern poetries as this one shamelessly uttered by a woman: "My sweet head / Snake fur / only in the viper the desire dies / only in flesh the memory of the meat gets washed up": or in the images of the borderless praises of some pitiful human weaknesses.

504. Question: If a brother lives with an old man and that old man is unable to answer when asked about something, and the brother is tormented by thoughts, can that brother ask another old man, either by having the permission from his old man or not having that permission? Or should him remain bothered by his thoughts?

Answer: If the brother know that Abba wants to be beneficial to his soul, he must dare and ask him: "I have some thoughts; what do you want me to do about that?". And the old man, by himself, as a man having his son ill and taking hi sons to a doctor and paying for his healing, the old man will gladly take his disciple to a man who has the gift of the healing. And if the old man cannot stand that, let the brother tell him nothing about that. But if the brother finds an occasion give him through the oikonomia of God, let him ask another spiritual old man regarding his thoughts and let him ask not to tell his Abba about that. This is because, otherwise, he will throw his Aba in the passion of the envy and here will be a big trouble because he has asked another old man about his thoughts. But let the brother not be offended by his old man for his old man having not such a gift. This is for the gifts from the Ghost are diverse and they are shared among people: to one so, to someone else thus. And if the brother finds no occasion to ask some other old man, let him endure while praying God to help him.

505. Question: A brother, easily getting stirred up to anger, he asked the same Oldman about that.

The answer of John: If you fought top die towards each man and to gain some humbleness, you would get rest and that would get you out of many dangers[898]. Let you heart get humble in front of God and God will come to your help in everything[899].

[898] To die to any man not through indifferentism, but by not giving importance to his words and behaviors which stir up passions within you. It means you be insensitive to anything that brings you sinful thoughts. That is a die that, for it reconciles with the humbleness, it is one with the lenience, with the understanding of the human weaknesses, but also with guarding yourself clean from that what can bring to you sins out of your weaknesses.

[899] If that what makes you non-lenient it is your pride, that what makes you lenient is your humbleness. That's why, the humbleness is open to the kindness coming from God Who is

506. A brother askes the Great Oldman: Father, pray for me, because I am weak with in my soul and in my body, in order the Lord to strengthen me so that I to thank Him. And pray also for my brother who lives with me, because he too needs mercy.

The answer of Barsanuphius: may the Lord strengthen you towards all the good things, as you have asked for. Behold, this too is a good thing: to live, according to your possibility, in peace with your father who is together with you. And He Who said: "I have come to throw fire on earth" (Lk. 12: 49), let Him throw that fire within your heart and within my heart, and I to see you growing up as the Lebanon's cedar trees and flourishing up like a date palm (Ps. 91: 13[900]) "in the Paradise of my God" (Apoc. 2: 7). This is for, by being this fulfilled, I will taste myself the goods and I will be glad[901], in Christ Jesus our Lord Whom it is the glory forever. Amen.

507. Question: Pray for me, Father. And I prey you to show me where does it come to me from, such a big helplessness in my serving and in my hand-work? And how comes that, because of my drowsiness, my thought tends towards eating and sleeping?

Answer: Regarding the prayer, if I have prayer, I cannot pray for my own soul more that I pray for you soul[902]. This is because tremble of Him Who said: "Love you neighbor as on the spring of the kindness. God is lenient too, for God is kind and truly powerful. That's why, in the lenient humbleness, we feel within us the lenience of God.

[900] In KJB we have: Ps. 92: 13: "Those that be planted in the house of the Lord shall flourish in the courts of our God."; in ROB we have: Ps. 91: 13: "Being they planted in the house of the Lord, in the courtyards of our God they will flourish up."

[901] Like him who loves suffers the hardships of his beloved one, likewise he who loves will be imparted with the joy of the goof fruits of the efforts of his beloved one. This happens especially to the spiritual father in his relationship with his spiritual son, as it happened, likewise, in the relationship between the earthly father and his son. This is for the joy doesn't remain only within him who has gained it, but that joy will be common to both of them, for their patience and efforts have been common too.

[902] If they who love on one another they meet each other in their pain and in their joy for one another, all the more him who prays will have his beloved one in his prayers which he manifests in, ceaselessly, his care for his beloved one. Ands they who pray for one another, they meet so much, for they meet into God.

yourself" (Lev. 19: 18). And I do to the extent of my power; but the mercy belongs to God Who has had on us until now and He will have from now on too, a great mercy. I do not deny that He has done that, because that will mean ingratitude.

And about helplessness, now it is so, some other time it will be different. It is so the way. Anyone who travels a little flat road and then he encounters precipices and mountains. And then after, he will meet again a flat road. But he says: "give thanks in everything" (1 Thes. 5: 18). This is for "we are debtors" (Rom. 8: 12) in everything[903].

Regarding the food, the drink, and the sleep, let all of them be preceded by the giving of thanks. You must cogitate at the word of the Apostle: "Either you eat, or you drink, either you do something else" (1 Cor. 10: 31). Guard this in everything and God Whom you thank[904] He will guard you.

508. The answer of the same Great Oldman towards the same one, who asked the Great Oldman if he should use medicines.

Brother, let both them who use a doctor and who do not use a doctor, to use their trust in God, saying: "in the name of the Lord we trust the doctors, for He will bestow us our healing through doctors"[905]. And they who do not use the doctors, let them do so with the trust in God and God will heal them up. So, if you use the doctors, you won't be wrong, and if you do not [903] We must give thanks for everything, because of not having anything from ourselves, but we have all the things from God, towards our benefit. This is for the evil things too, they are useful to our strengthening.

[904] The "God of the thankfulness" (Greek text) is the God sensitive to our thanksgiving; He is the God Who, as Person, He rejoiced of receiving thanks and Who is not tied to a blind, unconscious, and lacking of affection law; He is God Who honors us by accepting to rejoice Himself by a thanksgiving brought Him by us who are all-small creatures and yet wonderful creatures through the conscience placed within us by God.

[905] Everything that our research can gradually know out of nature, or out of the human body, it is in the wide ambience of that what is not know and it won't ever be fully known, even though both the nature and the human body seem to be, on the other hand, as infinite. This is for right this creation of God is a mysterious ambience for all its elements, especially for the creation is rooted into the infinite God. That's why it is good to use that what the doctors know, but we must also pray God too, in order God to do in our benefit that what the doctors recommend to us, through their limited science. The know things must not be detached from the indefinite – but well ordered – whole of the creation. The knower man and the conscious nature have at their origin Somebody Who is more powerful and more knower.

use the doctors, you must not boast himself. This is in order you to realize that if you use the doctors, you will fulfill the will of God and nothing else. And if you want to follow to the word told by Elijah: "Today" (3 Kings[906] 18: 15; cf. The Life of Anthony 7; G.P. 26: 853), you will be freed of any worry[907].

509. Ask: Pray for me, Father, and tell me what does it mean that during night when I want to utter psalms, I feel within myself an idleness. And especially when it is cold. Then, for many times, I utter psalms and I pray while sitting. This is because I fear this is coming to me our of carelessness, so I pray you to clarify me, Father, and pray for me so I to do that what I am told.

Answer: All of us have received the commandment to pray for one another (Jas. 5: 16). Regarding the things which you have asked for, for you want to find out what those things mean, I am telling you that that is partially a mix of the seed of the devils, and it partially is also because of the weakness of the body. That's why, uttering psalms and praying while you are sitting, but with the pricking of your heart, it is not an impediment to be pleasant to God in your serving. As to him who does that while standing but having his mind scattered, his effort will be reckoned as nothing. May the Lord help you, brother. Amen.

510. I pray your holiness, Father, to help me, because I am weak in my soul and in my body. I have many days when I am so weak that I must eat in the morning and then to lay down on the bed. But it happens also that my soul gives thanks and says that God has sent me this helplessness because of my many sins, but from time to time I torment myself, saying discourages that I am not worthy to eat my bread as everybody does it, once a day, in peace. And again, it comes to me the thought that I must not speak against God. "Doesn't Him know everything? Does it happen anything without Him knowing it? Endure it with thankfulness". I pray you, Father, for the mercies of God, pray for me and show me how should I pass over these in order I not to be overwhelmed by sadness[908].

[906] In the KJB we usually use for this book the title: 1 Kings. (E. l. t.'s n.)

[907] At note, in the Volos Edition, it is said that what is here declared about Elijah it is referring to the death penalty give by God to Ahaziah, who was the King of Samaria, because he didn't ask his healing from God, but from Beelzebub (4 Kings 4: 1). But it seems to us that the text is referring to the word of Elijah: "Alive is the Lord of the powers, for today I will show myself to Him" (3 Kings 18: 15). It is recommended to the ill one to immediately appeal God.

Answer: Your holiness has written to my holiness for I to pray for you, you who love God. And I, the unwise Father, I ask you my wise son, you to do the same thing and you to -pray for me because I spend my days in vanities. You tell me that you thank God at least once, but I don't do that ever[909]. Although, because I cannot keep my silence, I am going to talk to you as it comes into my mind. If somebody eats, but not for pleasure, but for the weakness of his body, God won't condemn him. This is because the foods are forbidden because of the satiation and because of the body's frolics. But there where is helplessness, the work of the body's frolics won't be set in motion. This is for, there where is helplessness, there occurs the need for calling upon God. Therefore, I reckon that giving to the body the things it needs, it truly is something necessary and he who find the alleviation of his illness by eating, he won't be condemned. This is for God doesn't ask from the man more than the man can give. As I said, I do not say that that what I have told it necessarily is the truth. But I have unveiled that what I had within my heart. So, you to have to judge and you will find out that what is beneficial to you[910]. And forgive me, because I cannot ever keep my silence.

[908] These questions unveil to us the endless multitude of waves, which agitate the human soul. The soul's life isn't simple; there are in the soul endless resources actualized in questions, in doubts, and in alternative answers. By this too, the soul is always new and the soul shows a thirst for life on a plan that is totally superior to that what the soul knows and can in the insinuating moments. And by that the soul can enrich himself constantly, the soul can always advance, and the soul can always refine himself. That's why, all of those must not bring the soul to despair, but they must strengthen the soul's certitude about his eternal destination.

[909] In his wisdom, the Old Barsanuphius, by saying his spiritual son menaced by despair, because of his helplessness to pray, to trust God, to have no doubts, he presents himself as being in the same state, or even worse. This is in order him to give to his spiritual son trust in himself, so that the spiritual son not to imagine that he is the worst among all.

[910] Taking out of word that what is beneficial, it is a collaboration work between him who tells those word and him who hears those words. He who doesn't hear totally good words, he can get out of those words only that what is good, as also one can also take bad conclusions out of good words. But the hearer can give even more strength and content to the good or bad words of him who utters those words.

511. The same one, because of being weak and because of not being able to stand to do his serving (the praying program), neither being him able to eat only once a day, he prayed the same Great Oldman to pray for him and top tell him what he should do.

Answer: When the Jews were to be liberated form the slavery of the Egyptians, they endured a great tribulation and a great trouble between the sea and the barbarians. And after those signs and wonders seen by their eyes as being done among Egyptians and all over their country, they have forgotten about God Who did those, and they have come close to despair by seeing the Pharaoh and the whole his army about to fall upon them. Only Moses trustfully remained next to the Almighty God. And for "near is the Lord to them who truly call upon Him" (Ps. 144: 18)[911], the Knower of the People answered Moses who was shouting out at Him, by covering up with the door of the silence his lips: "Why are you shouting out at Me? Hit with the staff from your hand, the sea, and the sea will split' and the people will cross through the sea and I will be glorified into Pharaoh and into the whole his power" (Exod. 14: 16-17).

Here it is likewise. It is a helplessness and an impediment from the devils. And then here is a trouble and a disturbance from the thoughts. And the body gets drowsy because of weakness and it is pressed upon by the burned from the devils. If moses shouts out, namely if the mind that takes vigil shouts out, either you are sitting, or you a lying down, that will be heard by Him Who hears the hidden things of the heart, and the word will be fulfilled: "I am sleeping but my heart is watching" (Song of Songs 5: 2). And he rebukes the sea, saying: "Open way to my people". And the Pharaoh gets drowned with all his army, and the people gets appeased and they feast and rejoice, by celebrating the presence of God[912]. So, either you

[911] In KJB we have: Ps. 145: 18: "The Lord is nigh unto all them that call upon him, to all that call upon him in truth."; in ROB we have: Ps. 144: 18: "Near is the Lord to them who call upon Him, to all of them who call upon Him into truth." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[912] The soul that is tormented by all sorts of thoughts, of troubles, of doubts, it is like an ocean storm which the soul seemingly has no escape from. There is a finite infinite in the monotony of the same waves, always various within the limits of this monotony. The deep of that ocean locked in itself it is one with the death, which will be in the future life with even more endless stand or you sit down, either you lay yourself on your bed, let your heart watching and committing the liturgy of your psalms, bowing down to prayer and ceaselessly falling down before Him[913], either during day or night. And then the shameless enemies which wage war to your soul, they get far from you. Regarding a second meal, let you diet to be decent and with the fear of God, and be convinced that you won't be condemned. This consists of not taking anything with lust, but whatever you find, you will take it with self-mastery. And you must remain hungry and not satiated after eating. And pray for me in order I to be able to walk in good spirit and with gladness the way stretching ahead on me thig and trodden, and full of peace, and full of joy, and full of gladness, and full of light. This is for one cannot get ever satiated of these ones, and besides this one there is no other way.

512. Question: The same one, eased of weakness (of illness), he asked the same Great Oldman: Father, when I share myself with food, I get burdened. And again, I cannot fast, because my body get weak and I start sweating. And the callousness of my heart and my pride banish the tears away from me. What should I do?

Answer: Brother, I am embracing you into the Lord, praying Him to strengthen your love and to give patience to you. You must know that this war than burdens you after eating, it comes from the devil, on the purpose to make you drowsy. This is for this war warred me and burdened me very much and for a long time; and it made me vomit every night. And then I started eating small quantities of food, and that change the war. This was because, immediately after I took a bite in my mouth, it made me to vomit. Then I started to do that once in every two tumult, btu still a monotonous tumult. But that soul that get appeased by the conscience of the presence of God Whom all the realities are enlightened in, that souls is open to the comforting and to the reassurance of the infinite goods from God. This light is a true celebration to that soul. This is the only way which one can really advance on, though this advancing it one with the quietude. It is said so at the end of this "Answer". This soul will no longer remain engulfed in the same tumult that is monotonous despite the whole relative difference among its waves.

[913] You can bow down in prayer and you can fall at the feet of God, even while sitting or remaining lying on your bed. This is for you bow down with your unseen mind before the unseen One and you fall with your mind before Him.

days, in order I to like the food. But it happened the same thing. But, by the grace of Christ, being warred and having patience, this thing stopped. And my power weakened more than I can describe, but I didn't renounce and I fought until the Lord strengthened me. I did all those, brother, because I was sick. You too take care of yourself, and Go will help you. This is for nobody envies you except that one which will be toppled over by the Lord.

Regarding the fasting, ow your head and remember the lives of the Fathers and their vigils and humble yourself in heart; and if you can, fast until the ninth hour (tree o'clock on the afternoon). And if you cannot do it, you won't be worried. But strive to keep the fasting of the inwards man, Guard yourself against eating out of wood[914] out of the other passions too. And this fasting of the inward man will be received by God and He will cover you up for the bodily fasting.

Regarding the things you have said about tears, that the callousness of your heart and your pride banish you tears away from you, abolish the two mentioned ones and then the tears will come to you, by the help of the saints. But you are sweating because you have caught a cold, warm yourself up a little and God will help you sand pray for me, because my drowsiness leads me to many evils[915]. Still, I do not despair, by having the merciful God.

513. The same one, by falling sick and not being able to endure the pain, he asked the same Great Oldman for prayer and help.

Answer: By brother and my beloved one into the Lord! With the assurance of the love that I have for you into Christ, I am unveiling you the mysteries of God. This is for you know and you are convinced that I am praying to God, day and night, in order Him to save us from the cunning one, by taking us into His eternal Kingdom. So, I have been praying as usual, God told me: "Let Me test him towards the benefit of his soul and [914] As Adam and Eva did.

[915] After giving many advices to them who complain about their weakening in their spirit, Barsanuphius asks them to pray for him. This too is a means for accustoming them to prayer. This is for the love for another makes you pray more easily than for yourself. And thus you will get accustomed to pray for yourself as well.

through a bodily illness, in order him to know how far his patience goes, and what will he inherit through prayers and pains". And I said: "Try him, Master, with mercy, as a true son and not as on an illegitimate son". It hasn't been necessary for I to show you these things, but I have unveiled them to you so that you to know the joy prepared for you. So, do not be sad, for God will have mercy on you. And if you doubt, bow down your head, by knowing what the holy martyrs endured, and anoint with a little oil mixed with holy water, that place that hurts you. And our God, with his will, he will have mercy on you as He wishes. It is not a pleasure for me to see you suffering, either with your body, or with your soul. May God have mercy on you. Pray for me.

514. Of the same one: Ask for prayer and help for the same illness towards the same Great Oldman.

Answer: My drowsy and speaking-against brother, why are you troubled, why do you shout out and why do you send asks far, while you have Jesus near to you and wanting to be called by you to your help[916]? Shout out towards Him: "Master!", and He will answer you. Touch the tassel of His coat (Mt. 9: 20) and He will heal you not only of this illness, but even of all illnesses. If your mind was there where it ought to be, neither the bites of the venomous snakes nor of the scorpions wouldn't be able to reach the feeling of your body[917]. "I have forgotten, he says, to eat my bread because of the voice of my sigh" (Ps. 101: 5-6[918]). Do not be upset. The mercy of God is [916] Jesus is near to us. He wants to help us. But He doesn't want to work upon ourselves without us willing that, without us feeling the need for His help, showing us that by calling Him. He doesn't want to treat me like I would be an object, I am would have not souly benefit out of the bodily healing that He bestows it to me, because of me reckoning that that healing hasn't been done through Him as God. It that was the case, I would trust only the nature's laws, and I would base myself on them.

[917] The mind advanced in to the sweetness of the spiritual life lived into God, it can overwhelm the feeling that it is uncountable smaller, of the bodily pain. The martyrs who were thrown to wild beasts, they didn't feel, in their fiery love for Christ, the bites of the beasts.

[918] In KJB we have: Ps. 102: 4-5: "My heart is smitten, and withered like grass; so that I forget to eat my bread. // By reason of the voice of my groaning my bones cleave to my skin."; in ROB we have: Ps. 101: 5-6: "Wounded is my heart and it has got withered like the grass; I have forgotten to eat my bread. // By the voice of my sigh, my bone got stuck to my near to you. I am embracing you into the Lord. Make yourself healthy by shouting out towards Him.

515. The same one, very burdened and awfully tormented, he prayed the Great Oldman again, for healing.

Answer: May my God to send you quickly the healing of your soul and of your body. And I believe that through His holy name you will get healed. Persevere as much as you can in thanking Him, for He has loved you and for He has had mercy on you through His pedagogy.

516. The thanks of the same one given immediately after the answer came to him from the holy Great Oldman, and the brother got healed on that very moment, and he sent thanks to God and to the Great Oldman, asking the Great Oldman, in the same time, for his ceaseless prayer, for him to progress, and for his salvation[919].

Answer: My all-beloved brother, let's raise ceaseless praise to our Master God, for He bestows the present things for a peaceful life. This is for, by elevating us through hardships, he gains us; and by tempting us, he bestows us the escape and the power towards enduring the troubles (1 Cor. 10: 13). And thus he "kills us and He makes us alive" (1 Kings[920] 2: 6), and He "makes us example to the world, to the angels and to the people" (1 Cor. 4: 9)[921]. Let's, therefore, gladden Him through

[919] All these "Letters" are mentioning the trust we just have in others' prayers. Even the comforting brought to somebody by the fact that he thinks at somebody else who takes care of him through prayer, it will bring a strengthening to the sick one.

[920] In the KJB we usually use for this book the name: 1 Samuel. (E. l. t.'s n.)

[921] "He kills us and He makes us alive", namely He takes us to the brink of the precipice, He makes our life almost gone. But right through that we receive a totally new life in comparison to the life on earth, a life coming exclusively from God Who is the spring of the life. Right in this state of dead to the earthly life we feel the power of God towards the helpless of the world and of ours. And out of feeling this power we come back to another life that doesn't trust the body but that trusts God and the Holy Ghost. Through death we cross to the true life. We feel the power of this life right in reaching the brink of the live according to body. That's why, as we get weaker, we will feel ourselves strengthened into God, if we continue to exist and work our humbleness, through our patience and gentleness and long-patience and decency and peace and thankfulness[922]. May it be to you, you all-desired brother, all the things which you have asked for into Christ Jesus Whom I am embracing you into, and I pray Him to guard you against all the evil. Amen.

517. Of the same one about a trouble of his heart. And where does it come from that he still is submitted to a light illness?

Answer: You my drowsy brother, why don't you "leave the dead to bury their dead" (Lk. 9: 14)? You must despise your body that is destined to be food to the worms. This is for you won't help your body by anything when it will be submitted to rotting. That's why he says: "Do not make to yourself a lust out of the care for your body" (Rom. 13: 14). Lo, this is a theme to cogitate at. And about the things you have written to me, a part of it is the remnant of the venom, and another part is from the devils, so that, turn a little your though towards yourself and if, by the will of God, the remnant from the devil will decrease, that remnant of the venom won't harm you. I pray God, according to the power of my helplessness, Him not to reject your asks but Him to fulfill your asks abundantly and with the love for people. This is for it is characteristic to Him to be merciful. But it belongs to you to pray. Understand what I am telling you, and pry for me.

518. The ask of the same one towards the same Great Oldman: Tell me, Father, if one must help his body when needed, with food appropriate to the illness, or if the ill one must eat sooner; or if he must respect the appointed time and him to despise all the other things, even if some hardship would come to him out of that.

for Him. "When I am weak, then I am strong" (2 Cor. 12: 10). As we get closer to the bring of our earthly life, we feel ourselves on the porch of the eternal life. This wonder happening with us, it amazes both the angels and the people.

[922] By all of these we open yourselves to God and we communicate with God, we tear down the wall of our pride and of our egotism, and we get our humanity out of our petrifaction.

The answer of John: God has given us knowledge through the godlike Scriptures in order us to lead ourselves on the right way. The Apostle says: "Try everything, but keep the good" (1 Thes. 5: 21). The man needs nothing else but to not take and to not do anything with passion. If he does that because of his weakness or because of his need, that won't be reckoned to him as a sin, nor as indifference. But if, by being him healthy, he searched for the satisfaction of his body, that will become a lust to him. So, by managing our body according to the need, we will make our body as servant of our liturgy[923]. This is for, if we take care of animals for our need, how much more must we take care of our body, for the body is the tool of our soul[924]? And when the tool gets blunt[925] and it will impede the craftsman, even thought the craftsman is highly skilled. The Apostle, by taking in account the weakness of Timothy's stomach, he commanded him to use a little wine (1 Tim. 5: 23), because Timothy told to the Apostle that he was getting tired in his work of spearing the Gospel. So, one needs discernment (right-reckoning) and he who has the discernment he won't fall easily. Forgive me, brother, because I do not know if I have spoken correctly, but I have spoken because we must not oppose. I told to your love what I have had within my heart. But you should do what you reckon as being the best.

[923] Servant of "Liturgy" it is in the French Edition. In the Volos Edition it is "servant of the need". But that need which we will have served to it is "Liturgy" or praising to God, which we cannot fulfill it without our body while we still are on earth. Through the body we speak and do the good deeds; through body we utter the prayers and the psalms. So that we owe to feed our body in order to be capable of bringing that service to God, but not in order to satisfy the body's lusts.

[924] The animals, the things, the nature's energies are indirect tools of the soul. We use all of those through our body. Our body is the direct tool which we make all the other things as indirect tools of our soul. The whole cosmos is like a widened body of the man. All the world's realities are felt by the soul through the body, and they become through body not only objects of the soul, but they also become a wide felt field and means of working upon the world. All of them are gathered together in the knowledge and in the feeling of the soul through the body. By cleaning up the feelings of our body, we will clean up the feeling of all realities. The body is also a means, but the body is also together-subject of feeling all the realities together with the soul. If we do not use our body for working the good through it, but we use our body only for satisfying its lusts by using the things, we will make our body an egotistic servant to the evil.

[925] The body as tool of the soul gains an amazing dexterity in those works which the body get accustomed to, and that dexterity cannot be explained without the presence of the mind into the body. Al the palm's muscles gain a flexibility according to the work they accomplish. The eye catches nuances of the seen shapes and of the spiritual sentiments of the persons. The body is a living screen of all the images united with the spiritual revelations of the soul.

519. Question: How comes that I feel a big tiredness when I wake up at night to read the psalms? I feel like wick. And anything I do, I do it with difficulty. Could that be because of my illness, or it is from the work of the devils?

That what is because of your illness, it is known. If the body doesn't receive its usual food, it will be proven that the body is sick. And its service must be eased. And if you body eats like usual but it doesn't get up to do its job, it will be obvious that these things come from the devils and you will have to force your body, but, doubtlessly, according to its power and not overmeasure. And when you heart take vigil, the body's sleep has no importance even when the body is close to snore. This is for, if the body hears a breaking in of the thieves, it will engage all his power in order to get rid of thieves. If we think thoroughly, we too are alike[926].

520. Question: Tell me, Father, if the illness can come from God, and how can one know that?

Answer: The illness can come from God. When somebody feels his illness, but he doesn't feel also the disturbance of the suffering, such an illness is from God and it will scatter away the war[927]. In such a case one needs to loosen up his ascesis, a little. But the illness can work also through the disturbance brought by some of the passions. Then one must not loosen up his ascesis in anything. This is because the passion comes from the devils and any loosening up it will increase it. So, of is useful that there where the body is warred, the body to be persecuted, even thought by that some illness could come upon the body, lets by being the body fortified, the soul to be thrown into illness. But again, if it is obvious that the cause of the illness, in the sense that the body got sick because of a tiring [926] The main thing is us to remain awake in our soul, even thought our body is drowsy because of its tiredness.

[927] An illness is from God when the man hasn't reached in it through some passion of his, and when the man doesn't work the passion: for instance, the covetousness of the belly, the debauchery, or the drunkenness. Such an illness doesn't give place to the war, to the rebellion, or to the sadness etc.

trip, or because of some indigestion, then one should loosen up his ascesis, a little. But he must do that appropriately and not excessively. This is because otherwise the devils will get involved too.

521. Question: Teach me, Master, whether the illnesses coming from our carelessness and from our disorder, are they from nature? And why are those illnesses sent by God to the man? And if the bad happenings (accidents) come upon somebody due to a preceding permission given by God?

Answer: The illnesses due to carelessness and to the life's disorder, they come form nature. And the illnesses sent to the man in order to correct the man they are sent because of man's disobedience. So, it depends on you to life carelessly and disorderly and to fall into the first sort of illnesses, until you will become again ordered; and to escape those illnesses through repentance. Regarding the bad happenings (the accidents), those too are due to carelessness and they are useful to us in order us to get corrected, so that we can repent. But it is a feature of the spiritual man to be able to discern among those.

522. Question: When the illness is mixed and comes both from nature and from devils, tell me, Father, what should one do? But, first of all, pray for me into the Lord.

Answer: He who wants to be victorious, he forces himself a little either to fasting or to vigil, either to any other good thing. For instance, if somebody owes not to eat, according to the custom, until the nineth hour (three o-clock in the afternoon), but his weakness forces him to eat at the three hour (nine o-clock in the morning), let him force himself not to eat until the sixth hour (at noon). And let him do the same regarding the taking of vigil. This striving resists the devils' work[928]. And the [928] This innocence is a means of strengthening one's will, or one's spirit, against his inferior impulses which elicit the body's weaknesses, but sometimes they lead also to other passions which enslave the man. The lust for food is among the first ones, and the anger is among the last ones. Only the man who is strengthened through will, the peaceful and generous man, only him can become dwelling place of the godlike Ghost. Only such a man is free for the true loosening up of the ascesis is a help given to the body. One should do the same regarding the other things. Let the man spend his days by doing these two with right-reckoning, into the fear of God. May the Lord help to our weakness in all things. Pray for me.

523. Question: If somebody experience difficulties in getting accustomed to the usual food, what should him do?

Answer: If one gets accustomed with difficulty, he sometimes can force his thought a little. And if he cannot do that, he will loosen his ascesis a little. This is for this helplessness is an illness too. Strive yourself, brother, not to forget these. And I believe that through the holy prayers you will be helped by God and saved.

524. Question: Forgive me, Abba, the Fathers tell us to despise our body, but then they also say that we must govern our body with right-reckoning. I pray you, make me understand this difference between advices.

Answer: Regarding the things you have asked about, the Apostle shows the difference between those two, by saying: "Do not make a lust out of the taking care of your body" (Rom. 13: 14). And the same one says: "Nobody hated his body, and he feeds it and he takes care of it" (Eph. 5: 29). So, if you see in work the pleasure, you will despise your body. But when you see your body tired and suffering, you will take care of it and you will feed your body in the fear of God, in order your body to serve you in the spiritual liturgy.

525. Question: Because you have said that we must take care of our body when it is tired, through a special diet, should we not stop our body from the harmful foods and drinks?

relationship with God and with his fellow humans. Only such a man is strong and unpreoccupied with himself because of his weakness.

Answer: If the man gets accustomed to restrain himself from the harmful foods, this won't be a sin. And if the man takes everything coming to him, and he despises God for the harm of his body, bigger that this is not to allow himself to be stolen through the door, namely through the self-appreciation. But the man must guard himself against eating or drinking passionately. This is because this means one to be defeated; so, that rather harms him than being beneficial to him. But both the health and the illness are from God Who said: "I will kill and I will make alive, I will hit and I will heal; and there won't be anybody to escape My hands" (The Second Law 32: 39). But God, when He wants, He bestows health through the doctor, and when He wants, He bestows health by word[929]. And the prolongation or the illness or the non-prolongation of the illness depends of the prescience of God. So, they who totally surrender themselves to God, they will escape from their worries. And God will do how He wants and how it is beneficial. So, each one will use the food as he can, or, better said, according to the faith he has.

526. Question: What does it mean "according to the faith he has"? Please explain me this.

Answer: If God sanctified all the thing and He cleaned them up in order to be shared them who believe in them, let the man take with gratitude the things he finds and let hi make no difference. This is for not the holy and clean things do harm, but only the conscience and the suspicion of the man, by thinking that those will harm him. This is because that one by being hesitant in his faith, he makes differences among things and that's why his illness advances in him. If the man believes in Him Who came and healed all the diseases and helplessness among people, he will believe that powerful is Him to heal not only the bodily illnesses, but also the illnesses of the inward man. But if the man makes differences among foods, he will avoid the harmful foods, because of not trusting that he can [929] In the word of God, which all the realities have been created through, it is given also the power to heal somebody. This is for that word mobilizes the forces from within the human being through the trust elicited by that word. This was shown by Christ for many times. The word produces the faith within him who received that word. And the faith is a great fortifying and transforming power within man.

bear those. And so, his thought has been defeated and he has been proven as not having a strong faith. That's why, you must avoid taking something passionately. This is because this harms the soul and the body[930].

527. Question: If somebody thinks one that he won't be harmed, but he feels the pain from his illness, what must him think at, in order him not to fall into faithlessness?

Answer: If he eats with faith, but the pain persists, let him not doubt[931]. This is for God permitted him to be in this suffering by knowing that this pain delivers him from many passions. Then he remembers the Apostle's word saying: "When I am weak, then I am strong" (2 Cor. 12: 10). And let him now think that this comes to him because of the foods which he reckons as harmful to him, but let him believe that this comes to him from God's permission. Even if he imparted himself with [930] The content of this "Letter" is complex, it is difficult to explain, because Barsanuphius unites in it the theme of the bodily illness with the theme of the souly illness, and that's why he speaks about two kinds of faith by suing the same word. By faith, one discerns between foods which can harm him bodily and souly, but by doing so he proves himself as not having the strong faith that God can protect him against getting harmed by those foods, or that God can heal him up of any of his bodily illness, a fact that protects him against his souly passion too. Another, by believing that all the things are holy for being created by God and that god can heal any illness and that god can protect him against any passion through his steadfast faith, he will have the surety that God will heal him up of any bodily and souly illness; and that's why he uses any sort of food passionlessly. This intertwining between the bodily illness and the souly passion, and between the possibility of escaping from both of them through the strong faith, it is a reality, so that Barsanuphius is justified in presenting them in this intertwining. All the things for they have been created as gifts from God for us, are by that holy and harmful. But they who discern among things, they unite a passion with them and by that they make those things harmful. Saint Maximos the Confessor sin in his "Heads about Love" that the things have a pure sense of their which is form God, but we are the ones tying up the things to our passions. If we can detach the passion from the things, the things will no longer be harmful to us. Thus, in gold there is a pure sense, but we tie this sense to our greediness. So, in the man's freedom stays the possibility of using the things cleanly or of defiling the things. We must clean ourselves of passion, in order us to be able to see and to use the things in their cleanness. The man makes all the things dirty because he sees the things as separated from God. If we restore our connection with God, by seeing again the things united with God, we will bring the things back to their holiness.

[931] Let him not say that he used a harmful food instead of a harmless food.

the foods reckoned as good and useful, he wouldn't benefit anything from that without the will and the work of God[932].

528. Question: if one needs faith, why said Abba Isaiah that "if there is brought to refectory some food that harms you, you will force yourself not to eat it" (Abbe Isaïe, Recueil 5: 7; p. 27). So, even being present the faith, the food still will be harmful[933].

Answer: They who despise the medicines and the foods reached the measure of the faith, but not of the consummation.

530. Question: If one doesn't have such a faith, must him search for foods useful to his illness? Or must him only avoid the harmful foods? Or fi there happened to be serves a food that neither harms nor is useful, must him eat without fear?

Answer: One must avoid only the foods which harm him. And if there happens to be serves something that neither harms nor is it useful, let him not eat to his satiation, but only a little. This is because he who eats to his satiation, even if that food is useful to him, he will be harmed.

531. Question: If there happen to be served two sorts of foods, one cheaper and one more expensive, should one choose the cheaper one? And if the cheaper one is more pleasant, which one should one use?

[932] That what we know it is framed within the general mystery of the entire creation, and by that it observes the order of the Almighty and Eternal God. If it isn't overpoured out of that power in fulfilling the partial work recommended by the doctor, on the measure of his knowledge that is limited to a sum of partial works, we won't be healed through that. And the powers from God are given to the man who is open to the by his faith. Such power overpouring are done through – and therefore also out of – our spirit. If we breed some animals by giving them only the food containing the vitamins reckoned as necessary by science, but we do not pet them and we don't love them, we will see that he won't thrive and they will love wight or they will even get sick.

[933] The educate man know that a food is harmful, more that the illiterate know that. That's why Abba Isaiah eats that food, but he knows that that food is harmful, in order to cut off, through faith, his tendency not to eat that food.

Answer: If there happen to be served to sorts of foods, take a little out of both of them. And if they are not alike, one should use the cheaper one. And if the cheaper one is more pleasant, and the more expensive one is available too, let one use it. And if the cheaper food is not available but only the more expensive is available, and it is more pleasant too, let one use it but he also must avoid the pleasure caused by eating that, by taking only a little of it. Why is that? Doesn't one need for his illness that what is very unpleasant? And isn't the man forced to use that unpleasant thing until he will be healed? It is alike if the thing is very pleasant, but one needs to use it, he will use it. And the man must take heed only at not allowing himself to be defeated by pleasure. And, even if that happens, after he crossed over that deed, let him reproach to himself.

532. Question: You told me that one is not forbidden to use the doctor in the name of God. But you said also that it will be good if one leaves everything to God, with faith and with humbleness, but my thought tells me: "If some bodily illness happens to you, you must show that to the doctor. This is because you haven't reached yet that measure for getting healed without medicines". But, on the other hand, my thought tells me not to use the medicines, but that I should rather use the holiness of the saints and to be content only with that. Tell me, you merciful Father, which one of these two should I use?

Answer: Brother, I see you worrying much about healing the bodily illnesses. I think that the Fathers do not worry that much about those. That's why I reckon that your second thought is better than the first one. This is for in that thought there is the consummate faith in God. while the first thought has the faithlessness within it. The second thought has the patience within it, that makes the man proven. The proven one gives birth to thew trust that won't be ashamed. And in the other thought there is the lack of courage, that is the sister of the fear, which it is dwelled by the fewness of the faith, the mother of the doubt that estranges from God, and that leads the people to perdition. His one makes the people friends of God, the other one make the people enemies of God. This one leads us to the Kingdom of Heavens, the another leads us into Gehenna. This one raises our head and gives us daring towards our Master God[934]. The other one makes your head to bow down and it makes the man without daring towards God. This one gathers the mind in order to throw the whole mind's worry at God (1 Pt. 5: 7). The other one throws the heart into slavery and in other bad occupations. This one he uses everything he had towards building, the other one uses everything to weaken up them who choose him. This one is full of wisdom, for he believes that Him Who looks at his hidden passions He can heals his passion too; the other one will get filled up with insanity, either he is healed of not. This one is full of a state of peace and he teaches the people not to get idle. The other one is disturbed. One pushes the people to walk through countries and cities, the second one deliver the people of everything. One throws the sadness within heart, and that makes the heat to melt down; the second, throws within heart the gratitude which usefully mediates the people's salvation to the Great Doctor Who bears our sufferings (Isa. 53: 4)[935].

I, my beloved brother, in my idleness from yore, I didn't show myself to any doctor, neither did I put some medicine on my wounds, but not out of virtues, but because of my laziness, because I avoided to walk through villages and cities and to burden somebody by making him to take care of me, the worthless, because I feared the answer I was to give at that time which all of us are wanting for, to my enemies. Blessed is him who can endure, for he makes himself partaker to the patience of Job.

I think that there are many women too, which persevered in enduring their bodily pains, for they left everything in God's care, so that I am ashamed to call myself a man. That one that suffered of a spilling of blood, by forsaking also her thinking from before, after she saw that the bodily doctors could do nothing for her, despite she spent everything she had with them, she impropriated another thinking and she ran to the Great and Spiritual heavenly Doctor Who heals both the souls

[934] There is a raising up of the head as sign of hope and prayer, and not as sign of pride. There is a daring towards God as sign of trusting Him. Contrary to this raising there is a bowing down of the head in the sense of the fatalistic submission to the nature's laws, to the passions, of the obedience to people, and of the lack of hope.

[935] Christ suffered on the cross, out of love for us, and He remains full of the same mercy, so He cannot but suffer for us in continuation. This is the sole mode which you can relieve others pains through, especially those pains united with the will of not remaining in passions. That's why Christ is our true Doctor.

and the bodies. And her illness ran away from her scared by the commandment (Mt. 9: 20-22). And the Canaanite woman left the world's people, the sorcerers, the fortunetellers, because she saw the uselessness of their craftsmanships, and she came to the Master, shouting out at Him: "Have mercy on me, You Son of David" (Mt. 15: 21); and from an edge of the earth to another it was heralded to anybody that what the loving-of-people Doctor did to her. I leave aside the other examples and I limit myself to these two examples, by thinking only at the fact that I could somewhere in the future to reach their faith, in order I to me found worthy of happiness. This is because these two women are enough to me to make me feel shame, and that's why I do not need to mention the faith and the humbleness of the centurion, who not only didn't allow the doctors and others in order him to come to the Master, but he also reckoned himself as unworthy of bringing the Master in his house, but he only told to the Master with faith: "Tell me only with Your word and my servant will be healed" (Mt. 8: 8). His great faith was praised even by our Savior. And I am telling these examples in order to shame myself up. This is because I have no desire, I do not aspire to, I do not strive for, I do not fall at the feet of the Lord and I do not think, me the worthless one, at that moment which the condemnation will reach me at, when the scary angel will come to take my wicked soul, when the door will be locked and I will remain outside with the five virgins and nobody will hear me anymore[936] (Mt. 25: 10-11). And the fact that these ones are biting me even from now, it is obvious. And it is not a secret that I am defeated by idleness and laziness. But what will I do? Will I despair? May that not be[937]! This is because the despair is a deadly sin. Cry for me, brother, and shed bitter tears over me, as over a cadaver and as over a stinky tomb. This is for I know that those are very useful[938], as we have been [936] It is a great comforting somebody to hear you when you are in pains and to commiserate with you, and it is the biggest unhappiness you not to be heard by anyone, and nobody to want to hear you or to commiserate with you. This is the hell, without any light. You have been despising everyone, so that you will be forgotten by anyone. You have accustomed yourself not to trust anyone, the gate to communion with everyone it will be locked up in front of you, because yourself have locked your own gate and you are no longer able to open it up. Your door is stiffened in the locked-up position. And you have lost the keys.

[937] How difficult is one to escape from his spiritual idleness! What a steadfast effort one requires for doing that!

[938] The together-suffering of another, with me; only the pain of another can invigorate me, it can bring me to life out of the death of the idleness and of the indifference.

taught by the teaching of the crying of Peter[939]. And pray for me, because I am telling you all of these but I do nothing good. So that the good Doctor to have mercy on me and Him to heal the illnesses of my soul and of my body. His to be the glory forever. Amen.

533. Question: Lo, I am surrendering myself to God and in your hands. Take care of me, you merciful Father, for the Lord.

Answer: Brother, if you believe so, you won't be forsaken by Christ Who said to the sinner woman: Your faith has saved you" (Lk. 8: 48). So, leave everything to God's care. This is for God takes care of us. His to be the glory forever. Amen.

534. Question: A brother asked the same Oldman, saying: If somebody suffers of an illness that requires a surgical procedure, must him allow himself to be operated? And must he do that with the counsel of the Fathers?

Answer: he who suffers of any illness must ask someone among the Fathers about that illness, and he must do everything according to the advices he will receive. This is for, sometimes, there happens that some Father has a charisma which can heal the brother even without noticing it. And one doesn't need the bodily doctors in all circumstances.

535. Question: Although it seems to me a good thing I to restrain myself, or I to leave in ascesis into quietude, or to do something good to somebody, should I do that by my own, or should I ask for the advice of the Fathers before doing that>

Answer: Not asking the Fathers for advice before doing something that seems to be good, it will lead the final things to evil. And doing so he will transgress the commandment that says: "Son, do everything with advice" (Prov. 24: 72) and: "ask your father and he will teach you; ask your old men and they will tell you" (The Second Law 32: 7). You won't find anywhere in the Scripture any command that somebody to do something by his own. This is because not asking from advice is pride. And by doing that one has God as enemy. And "God opposed to the proud ones, and God give grace to the humble" (Prov. 3: 34). And who else is humble except him who bow down his head before the old men and he asks for their advice in the fear of God[940]?

[939] The another's pain for me it can wake up me too, to feel the pain for my wickedness, as Peter was brought to crying when he saw that Christ was to receive the death for him and for all the people.

536. Question: If somebody was suspected as bring a heretic, btu he confesses the right-faith, would him be believed or not?

Answer: The Fathers didn't ask except for the right confession of the faith. So, if somebody truly shows himself blaspheming Christ with his mouth, and by living outside Christ, that one must be avoided and you must not get close to him. But we must look at his heart too. This is for everyone who doesn't keep Christ's commandments, he will be a heretic. And if the man doesn't believe in his heart, his words will be useless[941].

[940] It is easy to say that you bow down in front of God, but you do not do that in front of the people. By saying that you do that what God tells you to do, you actually do that what it seems to you that God is telling you. This is the sin of the Protestantism. Then, even though the Protestant believer says that he humbles himself, by reckoning that everything good comes exclusively from God, in this rather is a predestinationist, which the man is required nothing in, because of being denied any freedom of the man to do the evil, when God has chosen that man to do the good through him. The man cannot even humble himself. The true humbleness consists of "cutting off your will" which God leaves is to you. And you must cut off you will not by thinking that you cut off your will in front of the unseen God, but without being you sure of that, but you must cut off your will in front of him who gives you and advice in the name of the Lord. Only so you will really cut off your will. And you cut off your will being conscious that you do that in front of God Whose presence is witnessed to you by somebody else who helps you to show, objectively, the cutting off of you will. God doesn't want to allow His presence to get evaporated into your subjectivity, but God wants to make His presence and His will as felt objectively through somebody else who has his conscience strengthened by the churchly community started by Apostles, the conscience that he talks to you in the name of God.

[941] He who has the faith into Christ as a theory and he doesn't draw out of his faith any conclusion for his life, namely he has a faith lacking its spirituality, because of not having him a spiritual life, he will have a faith lacking its living core or its fructifying core, so that he will be a heretic too, according to Barsanuphius, because of him rather compromising the faith than serving the faith and defending the faith.

537. Question: If a certain Abba argues in favor of a heresy, must a brother leave that Abba[942]?

Answer: If he is surely proven that he sustains a heresy, the brother must leave that old man. But if that is only a hunch, the brother must not leave him, neither must the brother start examining the old man. This is for the hidden things are known only to God, while the shown things are known by people too.

538. Question: If Abba believes rightly, but the brother expects that some heresy is going to start there, and the fear of transgressing the right-faith gets born within the brother, and Abba doesn't' want to leave together with the brother for another place to live, and because of that, the brother, by knowing his weakness, he wants to leave for another place, will him do good or bad[943]?

Answer: Before being shown that that heresy is imposed forcedly, one must not leave, lest will be fulfilled with him the word: "The miscreant runs away, being banished by nobody" (Prov. 28: 1). And if it becomes obvious that that heresy is imposed forcedly, the brother will have to leave only with the counsel of his spiritual Fathers and in the fear of God.

539. Question: What one should do if there were not some old men whom the brother can trust to that they can discern the things? Should that brother leave for the danger of the heresy and him to go elsewhere, where there are old men able to discern and him to ask those fathers about that?

Answer: Yes, let him to that and let him fulfill the things said to him by those.

[942] Here is about an old man who is served by a brother.

[943] In the majority of the monasteries from Palestine, at that time, there occurred Origenistic strife, and sometimes, in some monasteries, the Origenism conquered the majority of their inhabitants.

540. Question: If somebody among the Fathers accompanies me and he quarrels with me because he wants to carry my burden, and that is inappropriate and that doesn't build up them who see that, because he is superior to me, why should I do on such occasion?

Answer: Prostrate yourself in front of him with humbleness, and ask for you to be the one carrying that burden. If he doesn't accept that, you will prostrate in front of him for the second time, and you will tell him: "Forgive me, for the lord, but we cannot go ahead together. This is because it caused offense to the who see us". And if he quarrels even after that, you won't insist anymore because of being that a game of the devil.

541. Question: Wouldn't that be more useful it I stopped arguing and if I let him carry the burden, even thought that would offend the people seeing us? I ask that because here it seems that the quarrel is worse than letting him carry the burden. And between two evil things, maybe one must choose the smallest.

Answer: The quarrel that continues after prostration is proven to be from the devil. And one must not continue quarreling. This is because the Fathers say that the superfluous things are from the devils (Paterikon, Poemen: 129).

542. Question: A brother asked the Great Oldman, if it will be useful to the brother to accompany him (to live in withdrawal)?

Answer: he who wants to walk of the way to God, let him not ask honor for himself. This is because, what is the way to God if not one throwing his will behind him in everything, and him reckoning himself as the las one and the least one among all[944]? Only one like that will be able to walk on this way. This is because him who doesn't cut off his will and who doesn't place his trust into the Lord, he won't be able to walk this way. With that one will be fulfilled the word of the Gospel: "Search for, and you will find, known and it will be open to you" (Mt. 7: 7). These are the live and the salvation which one just aspire to, in order him to achieve them.

[944] He who reckons himself the least among those who reckon themselves as great, he will be in communication with the imperishable and truly existing being of God. He who doesn't' search for the soap bubble of the passing honor, he will be dressed up in the honor of the

543. Question: What should I do, Father, because of being I tormented by the wars gathering against me? Tell me which is the sign that I trust God and which is the sign of the forgiveness of my sins? And how must I sit within my monastic cell according to the will of God?

Answer: Brother, the time of the wars is a time for working. Do not get yourself weak, but work and fight. When the war corners you up, you too must press upon that war, by shouting out: "Lord Jesus Christ, see my helplessness and my trouble, and help me and escape me from those who persecute me, for I have run to You!" And pray for you to be given power to serve God into a clean heart.

The sign that somebody trusts God it is him to shake off all his thoughts and all his worries about his body (2 Cor. 7: 1), and him not to imagine that he has at all anything of this life, because of otherwise he would trust the things of this world and not God[945]. Abd the sign of the forgiveness of his sins somebody has it in that that he hates his sins and he no longer commits those sins. This is because, as long as he still cogitates at his sins, and as long as his heart feel pleasure for those sins, that is a sign that his sins haven't been yet forgiven because of still being him kept by his sins[946].

imperishable godlike shininess. Such a man advances on the way to God, the only true subsistence. That one cuts off his will enslaved by the appearance of reality of some smokes.

[945] You trust that what you reckon that you will have forever. But what you can trust for eternity in this world? This is because, anything you have in this world, it has an end sooner or later. You cannot lean forever on anything or on anybody from this world. This is because of being everything in a continuous collapsing.

[946] Your sins will have been forgiven if you have truly asked for you to be forgiven of your sins. And you have truly asked for your sins to be forgiven, when you will no longer enjoy living in those sins or you to continue committing those sins. If you still enjoy committing those sins, it will mean that those sins are still imprinted into your being, so that those sins haven't been erased from your being, because of you not wanting to powerfully ask for those sins to be truly erased from you. If you continue to be attached to a sin, that sin won't be

And sitting within your monastic cell by the will of God, it means condemning yourself as much as you can, with your heart, when you see something beautiful within your monastic cell, or for any cause of bodily resting, by saying: "Woe to me, the sinner, because of seeing around me relieves which condemn me, because of not being I worthy of those, and other who are worthy of those are tormented by traveling and not finding bodily resting[947]. Lor Jesus Christ forgive me for this, for Your name called upon us". May the Lord strengthen you, son, and may the Lord give you power for you to progress and to reach the consummate measure.

544. A brother askes the other Oldman, John: Father, pray for me, for the lord. And tell me whether is it good us to ask the Fathers for many times to pray for us, even if they assured us previously that they do that? Wouldn't us seem to temp them by doing so?

The answer of John: Brother, I wrote to you for many times about the prayer, that in the virtue of the commandment of God we owe to pray for one another. And especially when we are asked for doing that, we will even more debtors to do that. This is for we cannot but put the whole our power into this[948].

forgiven to you. The man isn't washed up like an object, but he is a subject who washes himself too with the water flowing from above and who wants himself too for his heart to get softened by the mercy shown him by God.

[947] He who has a peaceful monastic cell and he find in that monastic cell the resting form the bodily worries, he must condemn himself if he doesn't succeed to appease himself, because despite having all the conditions he doesn't use that for his progress in the union with God through prayer, and so he proves himself as being unworthy of those conditions, while others could use those conditions better, for they are worthy of those conditions, but they do not benefit of such conditions. This means using the resting of the sitting 3within the monastic cell according to the will of God. Let the one sitting within his monastic cell not be satisfied only with his bodily resting.

[948] God wants us to pray for one another, for though this, by not despising God as the spring of all the gifts, we also show our love for one another, as God wants us to. This is for I must not remain indifferent to the salvation of others, while being I interested only in my own salvation, like I also must not take care only of my bread, while being I indifferent to the misery of others. But I must be all the more interested in their eternal life than in their perishable life. That's why we need also to ask other for praying for us, and not only us to grant them our prayers. This is for by that, we also show our humbleness and the fact that we need their love. By doing so we will show God that we too need others' love, as they need ours. God created us so: for us to love on one another, by seeing within us our need for love and for being loved. That's why we must pray for others much more than they ask us for

And asking for the prayers of our Fathers, it is very useful. This is for he says: "Pray for one another" (Jas. 5: 16). And again: "Not the healthy ones need the doctor, but the ill ones do" (Lk. 5: 31). And we must not forget to remember about the daring of the widow in front of the unjust judge (Lk. 18: 108). And if our heavenly Father knows the things we need even before we to ask for Him for them, why He didn't' say to us: "Do not ask for them, for I know what you need even before you ask for it"? But Himself said: "Ask for and you will take" (Jn. 16: 24)[949]. So, it is goof us to ask for, in order us to receive His promise. And by asking for the prayer of Abba, you will say thus: "Abba, I feel bad, pry for me, for I kn0ow that I need the help from God". And God will have mercy on you as He wills. For His is the love for people, and His is the glory forever. Amen.

545. Question: If somebody eats at the table and he gets satisfied more quickly, will it be good for him to ask Abba to get up, or will he have to sit until everybody will get up? Is it good one who taste of all the meals, or not? What is it better?

Answer: If one sits at the table and he feels that he has fulfilled his need for food, and he cannot sit there without continuing eating, he will ask for being allowed to leave. But sitting there without eating will be the best. And it will be better if one shares his bread will all the foods than not to do so.

546. Question: Two brothers who wanted to restrain themselves, they asked Abba if he would allow them to leave the table before other brothers, because if the kept sitting at the table they wouldn't be able to control their stomach. And Abba gave them permission to do so, but some other brothers judged them doing it. We have proven ourselves more insensitive when others have asked for our love but we haven't given it to them, than when we have reckoned that other haven't needed our love so that we haven't showed our love to them.

[949] Our heavenly Father knows what we need even before we to ask for it. Still, He wants us to ask for what we need and He doesn't give us that what we need without us asking for it. This is for we must become aware of the fact that we need those things and that we cannot receive those things except from Him. He wants an affectionate relationship with us which we to be active partners in. Vainly somebody will offer me his love if I do not need his love and I do not try to get it. Only by being I offered God's love, I won't come to the true love without accepting God's love.

and defamed them, because of not being they able to understand the benefit of such deed. That's why the sent to ask the same Oldman about that situation.

Answer: Thos brothers, as some workers and carers of they souls, they do this by fighting for restraint, lest, by sitting to crave for more food. This is for it is characteristic only to them who are consummate to sit at the table without being they defeated by their stomach. But you are vain in your mind, because of not taking heed at the word of the Fathers who said: "Do not tell, what is this for? But you rather must to take heed at yourself". The Fathers also urge us not to gossip on anybody, but us to fulfill the prophetic word: "Let my mouth not to speak about people's deeds" (Ps. 16: 4[950]). But you have fallen under the condemnation that says: "The evil man gets his things out of his evil treasury" (Mt. 12: 35). Why haven't you rather think at the good things of those brothers, which are towards building up, by saying: "We are indifferent, while these brothers of ours, they restraint themselves", as these brothers who left the table thought about you the good things, saying: "Woe to us, because we leave the table because of our helplessness, while our brothers, even though they eat more than we eat, they won't get harmed. This is for they do everything with right-reckoning. BY that they run away from the menace of the condemnation that says: "Do not judge, so you not to be judged" (Mt. 7: 1). And you fall into it because of judging your brothers who are superior to you, and because you transgress the word of the Apostle who says: "Him who eats, let him not despise him who doesn't eat" (Rom. 14: 3). You who eat more than those two brothers of yours, so that you owe more than they, you should on one hand to get sadder as one who are defeated by their stomach, and on the other hand you should thank God more for food. And so, God can set you free, through the thanks given Him by you, from the war of your belly and from condemning your brothers. And if you want to understand, the things themselves lead one to the right-reckoning, by helping him to discern between good and bad[951], according to the Apostle's word who says: "Try everything, but choose the good" (1 Thes. 5: 21). But for the decision belong to Abba, the things decided by him it must be accepted without any opposition.

547. A brother asked the Great Oldman, saying: I have dogmatic books and by reading them my mind is moved from the passionate thoughts to the thinking at that what I read in those books. But sometimes my thought rebukes me, saying: "You must not read this kind of books, for you are inexperienced and unclean".

The answer of Barsanuphius: I haven't wanted to occupy myself with such books because they elevate the mind to the high things, but I have been occupying myself with the "Word of the Old Men" (Paterikon), for they humble the mind. But I am not saying this because I disrespect those dogmatic books, but I am telling this in order to advise you. This is for there is eating and there is delectation[952].

548. A foreign brother got sick, and he came to take care of his health into monastery[953]. And being him given to dwell in the monastic cell of a brother, but that brother wasn't content of receiving him. And the Oldman found out about that and he said that brother the followings:

Answer: Examine your through, brother, and realize it: If that brother was your brother according to the body, wouldn't you receive him and take care of him as for the apple of your [951] The things themselves lead to a kind of union among people and between them and God, as the things also lead one to discern between good and bad. So, he who eat more, if he thanks God he will be redeemed from his covetousness, and he will understand them who have left the table earlier, by taking in account the restraint which those ones have submitted themselves to. But this will take place only if the people tolerate on one another.

[952] I do not want to walk with my mind among the high realities. This is for I do not feel myself worthy of that. I gain more by humbling myself. This is for reading the words of the psalms is a food necessary to the soul, in order I to get cleaned of my passions. Reading the dogmatic books is a delectation, but it is not a necessary food.

[953] One can see that in the monastery there was an infirmary, as we can see also out of the "Teaching of Abba Dorotheos" (The Romanian Philokalia, volume IX).

eye? So, take care of yourself because you are dominated by bodily thoughts. You have been given to receive your spiritual brother. This is for all of us are one into Christ. So, take heed at yourself, brother, into the fear of God.

After the brother heard these, we repented very much and by benefitting of that teaching, he said to the Oldman: "forgive me, Abba, and pray for me. I receive my brother with great joy".

549. A brother, who was a disciple of the same Great Oldman before the Oldman withdrew himself in order to appease himself into monastery, that brother left for abroad. And when that brother turned back, he was despising a pious brother for his simplicity and unimportance. But he also insisted in asking the Oldman dot guide him as before, saying: God brought me again to your holiness.

The answer of Barsanuphius: The Apostle says: "The Kingdom of God doesn't consist of word" (1 Cor. 4: 20). And Abba Makarios said: "Him who believes and works rightly, Jesus won't surrender him in the hands of the devils". And the Lord said: "during the days of Elijah many widows were in Israel and he wasn't sent but to that from the Sarepta of Sidon (who was a pagan) (Lk. 4: 25-26). And he said again: "During the says of Elisha many leppers were in Israel but none of them had been cleaned, except Naaman the Syrian" (Lk. 4: 25-27), despite he was a foreigner. This was for he believed. I reckoned that, by living for abroad, you will forsake your habit of justifying yourself and so you will gain the humbleness[954]. But as I see out of your thoughts, you are the same, or even worse. And if God chose the crazy ones, the weak ones, and He disregarded ones of the world, it will be obvious that God rejected the things glorified and praised by people (1 Cor. 1: 27-28). So, not they who are pleasant to the people will be pleasant to God, but they who are unpleasant to people will be pleasant to God for they are searching for God, and the have their happiness in front of God. This is for it was said: "Blessed you will be when they persecute you and when they will hate you and they will speak evil of you, for My name. Rejoice and be glad, for they did the same to your parents" (Mt. 5: 10-12).

You have been growing up next to me, not for a short time. Examine your heart! What word or advice have you received from us which got you far from the way to God? And the protection that was over you, where did that come from? Not from the trouble you were bearing? This is for the Oldman helped you for your benefit[955]. Tell me, brother, Does God take care of the things form the beginning of the man of does He take care of the last things before the man exiting this life[956]? D you see that what you have earned while living abroad? And you also know that when you were living together with me, yore, I told you that if you listen to me in one thing but you resist me in some other thing, even in that thing which you obey me you will actually do your will, so that I won't be able to defend you at judgment[957].

If God has brought you here, God too will be the One guiding you. And if you have come here according to your will, it is written that: "I send to them according to the craftsmanships of their hearts" (Ps. 80: 10). But pray for me. And do not worry about me. For I too want to be worriless in everything[958].

[955] The Greek word used in the original text has in the first place the meaning: "he persecuted you", by submitting you to troubles, and by watching your progress. This is one of the growing up through harshness, in order to strengthen the spiritual son. Letting the spiritual son to get drowsy and satisfying all his desires, it will lead to make him weak.

[956] God wants us to use our earthly life in order us to progress sin good, in order us to get ever consummate through our efforts. God isn't content about us being good in the beginning but we get less goof while advancing into life, so that we would reach to be totally evil at the end of our life. That's why we have been given the time of our life. The positive purpose of the movement of our being it has been theologically explained by Saint Maximos the Confessor in his word "Ambigua".

[957] If the disciple fulfills on one occasion the will of his spiritual father but he doesn't do the same on some other occasion, it will show that the disciple has chosen, each time, whether or not he has wanted to fulfill what he has been asked for. So, even when he has chosen to fulfill a certain request, he has been fulfilling his won will. He has been choosing what request to fulfill, according to his own will. And about the things done by disciple according to his own will, the spiritual father won't be requested to express his opinion, either good or bad, because of being those deeds committed on the ground of his disciple's will and not on the ground of the father's will.

[958] If the father didn't pray for this disciple as well, the father would bear the worry for not accomplishing his duty by doing everything he could for his disciple. But the father gets rid of that worry, for he prays for him who is given in his care.

550. Some of the brothers, by getting out of monastery, they bought monastic cells in places which were close to the monastery, but they didn't' ask Abba (Seridos) for permission to do that. And Abba got upset with them, because they transgressed the order, so that Abba wanted to banish them away form there. And they tried to resist him. And the same Oldman was asked about that situation, of the brother did good or wrong. And what should be done?

Answer: We see everywhere that the "standing against" lost many people. For instance, they who were around Datan and Aviron and who rebelled against Moses (Num. 16). And that what has happened now it is bad sign. This is because they haven't renounced to their decision when asked by Abba to do so, and therefore who will be able to convince them? And if somebody doesn't allow himself to be persuaded it is a sign of thoughts rebellion. And the rebellion is out of the urge form the devil. This is because the devil has been rebelling since the beginning, and they who do the same thing, they will become his sons. And what will happen to them? These ones have got themselves out of humbleness[959], by covering up their ears in order they not to hear Him Who says: "If they banish you away from this city, you will leave for another city" (Mt. 10: 23); and: "Him who wants to go to suit you and to take your coat away from you, leave him your shirt too" (Mt. 5: 40)[960].

[959] "They exiled themselves due to their humbleness". Remaining into humbleness means remaining in accord to the will of God and so in communication with God. The opposition between you will interrupt the communication. But our will is made to remain in accord to Him Who has created us; This is because not were not us who created Him. And by creating us, God wanted the best for our nature, He wanted that what our true nature will chose too. The accord with His will keeps us in communication with Him Who our will come out of, and it upholds our life.

The will that upholds our life it is that will that remains in accord with the will of God. This is our will conforms to our being. The will that is contrary to God it is also contrary to us. The will contrary to is it chews away our being, it keeps our being into a poverty and into a torment. The great mystery is that God allows us also the possibility of a will of ours that is contrary to our being, and this is for God doesn't want to destroy us, neither God wants to bring us to the state of some objects. And thus, God allows our being to coexist with a weakened, crooked being of ours, but still an existing being. And this is a mode which the relativity of our being is shown through, and the relativity of the entire created existence, and the possibility of the accompanying between it and a non-full and tormented state of the created existence.

[960] These quotes are given in order us to avoid resistance.

But these ones obeyed the evil[961]. And the evil gives birth to no good. This is for he says: "The bad tree won't bring fort good fruits" (Mt. 7: 18). And they have transgressed the rule of the Fathers in their disobedience. This is because the Fathers say that, if you leave for a certain place and you dwell there, you should ask, in the first place, if somebody will get upset with you about that. And if the Fathers command this when it comes about the upset of others, all the more this thing will cause sadness to the hegumen. Thus, this thing must be ended, so that they who have mistaken to take other together with them[962] and to beg their Abba to forgive them and not to rewards their evil with evil. This is for it was written: "we the strong one must bear the weaknesses of the helpless ones" (Rom. 15: 1). And our Lord also says: "If you don't forgive their mistakes to the people, neither you Father Who is in heavens will forgive your mistakes" (Mt. 6: 15); and again: "Be consummate as your Father from heavens consummate is" (Mt. 5: 48). And so will God be glorified, for this will be towards the building up of many.

551. The Abba of the monastery where the holy Fathers dwelled, he was hesitating to do something. And some of the brothers who wanted that thing, they endured that hesitation with difficulty, and they were speaking against. And the Great Oldman found out about that and he gave to them this answer:

Answer: Brothers, our Lord said: "My sheep listen to My voice and they follow Me (Lk. 10: 27). So, if there is somebody a true disciple, he will obey his Abba in everything, all the way to death. And through everything Abba does, the disciple gets built up and he doesn't dare to make differences in the things told him by Abba, neither the disciple dares to ask; "What is this [961] He who resists, he obeys the evil. That one has exited the good, or the possibility of communication and of agreement.

[962] It is recommended that other who did not mistake to Abba, to pray for they who did. Here we have a motif for which we ask for the prayer of the saints for us. If him who didn't mistake prays for him who mistook, his deed of love will be united with a deed of humbleness, by reckoning that brother who mistook as still worthy of forgiveness, as worthy of being imparted with the happiness of the others. This is a solidarity among people that is pleasant to God. This is for God wants the whole creation to be reunited in the happiness from within Him, also by the efforts of the creation too.

for? What is the purpose of this?". This is because, if he did that, he would no longer be a disciple of Abba, but a judge. All of this come only out of the worst will of the man[963].

So, if Abba tells somebody to do something, and that disciple resists it, it will be obvious that that disciple wants to impede that thing to be done and he empties of power the word of Abba. Sucha disciple must thing who sis his Abba: that one whose word was impeded, or that one whose word has been fulfilled? So, if the disciple wants to do his will, he will be the son of the devil. And anyone who does the will of such a disciple, he too will do the will of the devil[964].

And even the disciple fulfills his will, he won't reach the peace either on this way. This is because what is there within except the disobedience that is destruction to the soul[965]?

So, if somebody sees himself being offended by his Abba, he ought to leave his Abba, so that he won't lose his soul and he won't bear the guilt for the condemnation of the other whom he has twisted their minds, because he doesn't' know if Abba was right or wrong, but he gets offended purposelessly, by the sake of his won will. And if he has done his will, he won't become more righteous than Abba. And if he knows better than his [963] If by being separated the man's will from the will of God, the man gets out of the communication with God and out of the will according to his own being, likewise, through the separation of the monk's will from the abbot's will – the abbot being the one guiding the monk on behalf of God – the monk will exit the communication with the abbot or the unity between him and the other dweller of that community. By that, even the unity of the monastery will fall apart; the monastery was founded by Christendom as an oasis progressed in that unity which God wants to lead the people in. The division among people is caused by their evil will, a will upheld by their pride, a will upheld by their egotistic care for himself, of each one of them.

[964] It is the will of the devil because of parting the man from another man, namely it gets the people out of unity. Through this proud will the people get divided and they fight one another, because they do not think at God in Whom they must get united.

[965] He who wants to fulfill his will that is contrary to Abba's will, he won't have peace either when he starts resisting or when he sees his will fulfilled. This is because, in the last case, he has committed the separation between him and Abba and that won't bring him peace. But also, until fulfilling his own will he is in the agitated tension of the disobedience. That is a disturbance that doesn't allow him to peacefully think at God, or to pray. Therefore, that means the perdition of the soul, because the soul will be dead without the communication with God. That's why him who doesn't bring his will in accord to Abba's will, he will better leave than fulfill his won will, by bringing to the end, and therefore to perdition, his opposition, and dragging others too to rebellion, namely to the perdition which he will be held accountable for, at the final judgment. Neither must him remain in monastery, because by constantly opposing to Abba he will drag others too to opposition. This is because by that they will work a division that comes from the devil.

Abba that what is useful, why will he still remain his Abba's disciple? Let him leave and teach others.

Do not allow yourselves to be deceived by the devil, so that you to preserve your will towards your harm. And it will never be fulfilled the will of yours.

Brothers, I have written you in order to spare you, and God know this very well. If somebody accepts these, that will be him towards his salvation. And if he doesn't accept these, let him spit on the written things, it he wishes so. This stays in his power. That is what some of you have already done within their hearts. And others even slandered us with their mouths. Forgive me!

552. The Answer of the same Great Oldman towards someone among the Fathers who asked him if he must rebuke his disciple who opposes him by word.

Beloved brother, you must know that the time is bad (Eph. 5: 16). That's why there are witnesses that rebuking in order to correct it is good. This is for he says: "Whom God loves He rebukes him" (Prov. 3: 12; Hebr. 12: 6). And again: "Blessed is that man whom the Lord rebukes (Jas. 5: 16). The brother is warred by the callousness of his heart. Suffer him and toil together with him[966]. But, in the same time "reproach him, rebuke him, and urge him" (2 Tim. 2: 4), according to Apostle's word. And if he accepts this rebuking, he will be gained again. Wake him up out of his deep sleep of the callousness of his heart[967]. This is because if his skin gets thickened by thorns, it will become to himself a big and insupportable pain[968]. But if he toils to pluck off his thorns until they still are soft, he will be quickly delivered form this passion. But if the fabric of thorns [966] In the French translation: "Suffer together with him". Actually, the toil is a suffering. The spiritual father toils and suffers together with his spiritual son who fights his helplessness of not contradicting the old man.

[967] The callousness of the heart is like a deep sleep. It is a big insensitivity. He offends another without feeling the pain he causes him.

[968] The callousness of the heart is like a skin, or it is like a fabric knitted out of thorns, and that makes the heart, on one hand insensitive, while on the other hand by pricking others with its thorns it will bring suffering to him and to those pricked by him. This is because his offenses will be answered with offenses as well. And this will help the man to liberate himself of that.

gets strengthened, those thorns will be plucked only with toil and pain. So, tell him to take heed at himself with much care.

553. The answer of the same Great Oldman towards a brother who was working as carpenter in monastery and he was warred by diverse thoughts and he reckoned that he benefitted nothing out of his work and he had not help.

Brother, we ourselves are those ones who do not want to be delivered from hard days and from heavy annoyances. This is for God have given two gifts to the people, which the people can deliver and save themselves through, of all the passions of the former man: the humbleness and the obedience. But we do not impropriate those, neither we want to live in those, nor we want to cross through them in order us to find help, in order us to get rid of evils and us to attach ourselves to Jesus[969] through those ones, for He is the Great Doctor Who wants to heal us of the fever of our passions. Why do you pile up all the evils into your treasury, so that you get disturbed and restless? Stop yourself from being furious, angry, and envious. You must know that those do not enjoy honor, but dishonor. Leave all your cunningness and bend down you head into humbleness and obedience, and you will find mercy. If you do what you hear with humbleness and with obedience, the Lord will bring through your hands, to a good result, not only your present work, but all your works. This is for the Lord guards the path of them who fear Him, and He covers their roads. Why do you get upset, and why do you doubt? The mercy of God will help you if you persevere in the patient waiting for God. You must die, you the miserable one, towards any man. Tell to your thought: "Who am I? Dust and ashes" (Gen. 18: 27). "I am a dog". Say: "I have nothing forever". Why are you prophesizing your perdition and why you don't fear God? Aren't you ashamed to say: "I have received not help?"[970]. Satan blinds our heart up by leading you [969] The humbleness makes transparent the greatness of God. The unconditional obedience wakes up within heart the sentiment of the connection to God.

[970] We often deplore the fact that God hasn't helped us to succeed to become better, or that we haven't felt God's presence or His power. And this throws us into a bit sadness, sometimes almost into despair. But right the hardships coming upon us are means allowed by God in order us to advance into good by patience. Why do we blame God because of the fact that we do not open our eyes so see His presence and the help from Him?

to ingratitude, so that you say that you benefit nothing in this place. You unwise man! If you were not guarded by the hand of God and by the prayers of the saints from here, where would you be? In the "outer darkness" (Mt. 8: 20). Where could you benefit otherwise? Nowhere. But the devil, by wanting to get you out of the love for the saints, from under their cover and benefits, he sows within you the seed of the death towards perdition, so that you will totally end up in the hands of the enemies of the truth and they to tear apart your lamb, namely your soul. Guard yourself against despising or mocking on somebody. This is because by doing so, your enemies will catch you in their traps, by disturbing you; they will harm you, they will get you out of quietude and peace, out of good order and out of the whole good. Forsake those and follow my words and I will bear your burden[971]. And you will find help and mercy and salvation to your soul. We get saved by toiling, brother. Guar yourself strongly against saying: "What is this for? Why don't have I the same things as those ones have?". Do you little handwork zealously, and in the fear of God. This is for you will be rewarded abundantly for it. And to not despair about yourself. Your desperation is the joy of the devil, that may God not give it to him, but may God rather haggle for your salvation[972], into Christ Jesus our Lord Whom to be the glory forever. Amen.

554. The same brother asked the other Oldman: my thought tells me: "If you want to be saved, get out of monastery and live in ascesis in the quietude which the Fathers spoke about" (Paterikon, Sentence 274; Les sentences the Pères du désert, Solesmes, 1966, p. 180, no. 47). This is for I do not benefit here out of this craftsmanship as carpenter. This is because much disturbance and trouble come to me out of it.

[971] The Oldman bears that one's burden but with the condition to have him near to himself with his soul, so that he won't feel the whole burden anymore.

[972] The devil is jealous on that love which the soul unites through, with Christ. That is the envy of him who cannot master upon the man for the man loves Christ. Because the devil is incapable of loving, he cannot have the joy of being loved by anybody. The devil wants to make the people too as incapable of love and tormented by that state. That's why the devil laments when seeing two mans loving on one another cleanly and steadfastly. And the devil will do everything to divide them.

The answer of John: Brother, I showed you before that it is not useful to you to get out of monastery. Not I am telling you that if you get out, you will reach your perdition. So, you know what you have to do. If you truly want to be saved, you must achieve humbleness, submission, and obedience, namely cut off your will and "you will live in heavens and on earth" (Mt. 6: 19)[973].

Regarding the quietude which the Fathers speak about, you do not known what that is like, as many do not know too. This is for such a quietude doesn't mean keeping your silence with your mouth. For there is some people who speak tens of thousands of useful words and that is reckoned to him as silence. And there is another uttering a sole vain word and that it will be reckoned to him as he would trampled on all the teachings of our Savior[974]. This is for Himself said: "You will answer on the day of the judgment for any vain word that has come out of your mouth" (Mt. 12: 36). And because you have said: "I do not benefit out of my carpentry", believe me, brother, that you do not know whether you benefit of it or not, but the devils mock you and they show to your thought that what they want to, in order you to do your will and you to disobey your Fathers' will. This is for him who wants to stay into truth, he will ask the Fathers about him benefiting or not, and he will believe that what they will say him. And thus, he will do that what is beneficial to him. Many paid other people to curse them, so that they would learn how to endure that. And you learn the patience without paying for it, for the Lord tell you: "into your patience you will gain your souls" (Lk. 21: 19). We mut thank him who torment us, for through him we gain our patience. You will sit here, peacefully. May the devil not to tempt you. May the Lord help you. Amen.

[973] This is the true life, when you allow to be done within you, and with you, the will of God, so that you will be in communication with God, and God's life will be overpoured within you and you will live on earth as in heavens. You will no longer be disturbed by any pride, or by any worry about yourself.

[974] Tens of thousands of words highlighting the glory and the untold mystery of God are reckoned as silence, as coming out of the quietude of the heart's deep contemplation. And a superficial word that mocks the mysterious teachings of Christ will be contrary to any quietude and to any view of the unveiled horizons of the silence.

535. A brother asked the same Oldman, saying: For Abba wants to spare me, should I ask him: "Do you command me to do that thing?".

Answer: In order not to put your will in that thing, you will tell him: "What do you command me to do?". This is because him who wants a thing and he asks about that thing, even if he was commanded by another to do that thing, he would bear himself the whole danger for that thing, because he would fulfill his own will[975].

556. Question: But in case that I want something and I do not ask Abba about that, but he commands me from himself I to do that, will that be reckoned to me as own will?

Answer: Tell Abba: "I want to do that thing. What do you command me?". And if he tells you to do it, you will it is going to be done. And if he gives you something else to do, you will receive that too, joyfully[976].

557. Question: And if I do not have the desire to do a certain thing, but I reckon that I can serve Abba by doing that thing, and I talk to Abba about that thing, for I know that Abba likes that thing to be fulfilled, will I be in the state of one who has received the commandment to do that thing? And if by not doing that thing right then, and later on a thought comes to me do fulfill that thing, will I do that thing inappropriately?

[975] The disciple intuits that Abba would want him d to do a certain thing, but out of gentleness Abba doesn't' want to ask him to do that thing, for Abba wants to defend his disciple against the danger or, eventually, against the temptation related to that thing. The disciple asks the Oldman for the advice if he could ask Abba from himself, if Abba commands him to do that thing. The Olman tells him to only ask generally, if Aba wanted him to do something. This is because if the disciple askes Abba if Abba wanted him do to a certain thing, that would show that the was the disciple's will to do that thing, so that the disciple would bear the responsibility for consequences, even thought he asked Abba for the command him to do it. So, it was recommended the total cutting off of the will regarding anything one should do.

[976] Here is not previously felt a desire of Abba. So that the disciple can show Abba his desire. And if Abba approves that, that will have become Abba's desire. And if Abba commands his disciple to do something else, then his disciple will do that thing.

Answer: You better wait for hearing the commandment form him. And if you see him hesitating whom to command that and you tell him that you want to serve him, it won't be inappropriately. But if you have received a commandment to do something and you haven't fulfilled that thing, you will remember that you haven't fulfilled that. And by fulfilling it, you won't think at it.

558. The Scripture says: "If the thought of the master will climb upon you, you won't leave your place" (Eccl. 10: 4). What does that mean?

Answer: Do not allow him to climb upon you, neither will you talk to him, but you will run to God. This is because, if you want to answer him, you will fall into much-speaking and that will impede you from feeling the prayer's warmth.

559. A brother asked the same Oldman: If I hear that somebody speaks evil about me, what will I do?

Answer: Stand up immediately and say a prayer, firstly for him and then for yourself, saying: "Lord Jesus Christ have mercy on this brother and on me, for I am Your unworthy servant. And shelter us against the evil one, by the prayer of the saints"[977]. Amen.

560. Question: If somebody started to gossip somebody else and I noticed that, what should I do?

Answer: If somebody starts gossiping, you must cut off quickly or to move the word to a useful discussion. But neither will you tarry much in that new subject, lets because of much-speaking him to fall again in gossiping.

[977] The brother is the first one who needs the prayer because of speaking evil about me. But I need that prayer too, in order I not to be stollen by upset against him and because he has found at me something that is not good. But because both of us are unworthy, let's pray the Lord to forgive us for the prayers of the saints, for their love among themselves and for us it is a role-model to the love which we must have for one another.

561. Question: If somebody gossiped another and I listened to that gossip with pleasure, w0oudl I fall under the same condemnation because of that?

Answer: Even the listening with pleasure to a gossip, it is a gossip itself, and it will fall under condemnation.

562. Question: Where the idleness comes from and what should One do when the idleness appeared?

Answer: There is an idleness of the nature because of being tired. And there is an idleness from the devils. If you want to discern between the two sorts of idleness, you will examine then like this: The idleness from the devils occurs within somebody before the time he needs rest. This is because, after he has started working, before he has finished a third of a quarter of that work, his idleness urges him to stop working and to get up. So, one must not accept the urge of this idleness, but he must say a prayer and let him sit and endure. This is for, if the enemy sees the man uttering a prayer because of getting idle, because the enemy doesn't want to offer an occasion for one to pray, the enemy will run away. And the nature's idleness occurs when the man gets tired over his power, and when he forces himself to work more than needed. Thus, the idleness of the nature is born out of the body's helplessness. So, if that was the case, the man should trye his power and he should rest his body in the fear of God.

563. Question: The place itself where the idleness from the devils occurs, it is very hot place, and the idleness is added to that place, and it burdens the man so that the man won't be able to resist both of them. So, should the man leave that place at the time of that war?

Answer; It is good to fight and not leave that place during that war. But if you see yourself getting defeated, by being burdened by tiredness, you will leave that place. And once you have got rid of one of the burdens, you will fight the idleness itself, by calling the name of God and you will receive His help. But leaving that place because of idleness, that is not a burden, it will bring you even more burden and it will increase that war even more, and it will bring harm to your soul. And by taking the man inti its mastery, it will require great efforts in order the man to get rid of it, even if prayers are uttered for him[978].

564. Question: If out of idleness there was born a sleepiness which impedes me from the work I am doing, should I get up or should continue sitting?

Answer: Get up and do not cease form praying to God and God will banish away your sleepiness through prayer.

565. Question: When an evil thought comes to me, my heart moves against it angrily, so that I feel the need to use my voice as well. And it happens to me do to so even when other people are present. Is that good or not?

Answer: It is not good you to do that, because of being possible that to become a habit of yours, and that to be harmful to the people and offensive to the watchers, but you must call upon the name of God, without disturbance, and that thought will be banished away from you.

566. Question: A brother who left the monastery and who became very weak in his soul, asked the same Oldman, saying: I sinned by making myself the toy of the devils and of my mother. I got out of your cover, of my Fathers. I beg you place me among the beginners who haven't received the schism yet.

[978] That idleness that is not caused by a too big tiredness of the body, it has in it something spiritual and as such it appears as having in itself something from the evil one. I feel an idleness for something when doing that what doesn't cause me a bodily pleasure. It is a sort of self-suggestion that can be defeated by self-suggestion too. That idleness can be defeated by one's will, and it will be proven as coming out of a weak will too.

Answer: It is inappropriate you to ask for being placed among the last ones. This depends on the Abba's judgment. That what you have to do it is to prepare yourself for obedience.

567. Question: The ask of one of the Fathers who were living in quietude (withdrawal) towards the same Oldman: I pray you, Father, pray for me in the name of the Lord, because I am very endangered by my indifference and by the disturbance from the enemy. This is because, if God doesn't give me for your prayers and if God doesn't banish the enemy away, I won't be sure that my boat will reach the shore. But as Moses asked God for not to lose so much people by His anger, likewise you, pious Father, pray for my wicked soul. This is for God is good and God wants to Him asked by saints for the salvation of the souls[979]. And such an ask if it appropriate to you to do it. Pray Abba too, not to be late in coming and seeing me, For I love him very much. And I need his support as well.

Answer: If your love wrote about us who are the last among people, that we do not want somebody to be lost, what should you say about Him who sworn on Himself: "I am alive, says the Lord, for I do not want the death of the sinner, but him to turn back and to be alive" (Ezra 18: 23); and about Whom the Apostle confesses too, saying: "Who wants that all people to be saved and to come to the knowledge of the truth?" (1 Tim. 2: 4).

[979] It was said before that God rejoices Himself when we pray. Not it is being said that God rejoices Himself when the saints pray for the salvation of the souls. If Christ prays for us and Christ ceaselessly presents to the Father His sacrifice for us, how would not rejoice the Father to see the saints in accord to His Son, and how would Christ not to rejoice seeing them not remaining indifferent that what He does? The salvation consists of the consummation of the people, and the consummation cannot be cogitated without the love among people, without the progress of the people into unity. In the prayer of sone for others, it is shown this interest of ones for others, in that what is most important to them. In prayer are united not only the people among themselves but also with God. Only in God is possible the union of all people to be accomplished, for only His love cover all people. Only out of Christ's love and out of His sacrifice for all people, our reciprocal prayer and sacrifice can be nourished. And this rejoices Christ. This is for He sees Himself understood and accompanied in the things He does for us. And Christ actually see being accomplished the union among us, and between us and the Heavenly Father, a union for which Christ embodied Himself, has sacrificed Himself, and which He ceaselessly prays for. God saves us by asking also for our collaboration, for he honors us as subject, in His image. And what honors God gives us when making our salvation depending on others' salvation and on ourselves? And also, how high responsibility has He placed on our shoulders by that?

Brother, do not feel burdened to come to Christ saying: "Save us, because we are perishing" (Lk. 8: 24; Mt. 8: 25). And you will see what He does against our enemies. Come to Him and say: "Lord. My God, show me how You punish them, for I raise my soul to You".

Regarding the troubles and the temptations which you have to endure, there is not need for you to write me about those, for you know that the Apostle say about that, and you know which the end of the patience is. Let's not get discouraged, brother. This is for great is the Lord Who takes care of us, in order Him to help us. That's why He encouraged us by saying: "It is Me, do not fear" (Mt. 14: 27). And again: "Dare, for I have overcome the world" (Jn. 16: 33). Let's no get lazy and let's fall at His feet and let's ask for His kindness. This is for He will give us more than plentifully the things which we ask for and think at. You must think that there where the toil is, there the rewards will be too; and there where the trial of the temptation is, there too will be the crows of the victory; and there where the love of God is, there will be also the climbing on the cross together with Him; there where the suffering together with Him is, there will be also the glorification together with Him; There where the death together with Him is, there will be also the live together with Him. So, He Who has climbed the cross, he has been relieved form the things of the earth, for he had dies to the world[980]. He must cogitate at the realities from above, there where Christ is on the right hand of the Father.

Regarding Abba, pray for him so that the Lord will cover him, for many are his worries. But we believe that the Lord will cover and help him. I told him that you are late to strengthen [980] Christ climbed the cross for the liberation of His human nature of its affects which were consequences of Adam's sin, and also for elevating His human nature to the state of resurrection, and also for sharing His human nature to us in this new state, and therefore for us too. So, Christ climbed the cross for us in order Him to show in that His love for us, and his together-suffering with us. He didn't untie the love He showed us through the pains of the cross, from enduing those pains, in order Him to elevate our nature take by Him at the state of incorruptibility, so that Him to give it to us too as such. For these things we too climb the cross together with Him: to strengthen our nature by enduring the pains and to help others through the irradiation of this power out of our nature that has reached the consummation. So, neither I separate our consummation through cross form showing others our love through the cross. That's why we too are glorified together with Him in our strengthened nature, and we are elevated to the clean and incorruptible life which He has raised Himself to. We cannot separate our consummation from our love for people, from commiserating with them. We gain both of these on the cross which we climb on, together with our Lord.

yourself. And he defended you, as he too has assured you. And regarding the prayer, you know that I am nothing. But neither can I untie myself from the love for you. So, you too pray for me, into the Lord.

568. The ask of the Abba of the monastery towards the same Oldman. Because the time id hard, pray, Father, to the Lord to make it pass and for His servants to be covered against all the temptation of our sins.

Answer: If we do that good, the Lord makes the time passing with difficulty. But if we add evil things, we will cause to us even more the untimely perdition. And if you remain into good, God will send his angel and the angel will seal you as the one yielding the sword to defend you (Ezra 12: 53), by the prayer of the Saints. Amen.

569. The ask of the Fathers who lived getting appeased (in withdrawal) in monastery, towards the Great Oldman, for the world. Because the world is in danger, all of us beg you, Father, to pray the kindness of God to turn the arm and to place the sword into holster. Stay among them who fell and among the living with your holy incense, and stop the Destroyer. Elevate the holy alter in the holy courtyard of the heavens and the anger of God will cease[981]. We ask and pray you have mercy on the perishing world. Remember that all of us are your limbs. Show in the present time too, the mercy and the wonders of God. For Him is due the glory forever. Amen.

Answer: Brothers, I cry and I weep for the anger that menaces us. This is because we do all the things against that what is needed. This is for it was written: "If your righteousness doesn't exceed that one of the scribes and of the Pharisees, you won't enter the Kingdom of Heavens" (Mt. 5: 20). And our inequities have exceeded those of other nations. There are many people begging for God's love to stop His mercy started towards the world and there is nobody loving the people more than God does. Still, God doesn't want to have mercy. This is because He is told about the multitude of the sins from the world. But there are three consummate men in front of God, who have surpassed the human measure and who have received power to tie and to untie, and for forgiving the sins and for keeping them (Mt. 18: 18; Jn. 20: 23). They stay in the middle so that the world not to be destroyed at once, but through their prayers the world to be rebuked mercifully. And they have been told that this anger will last for only for a little more. So, you pray together with them. And the prayers of these three men meet at the entrance of the altar from above of the Father of the Light. And they rejoice together and they gladden themselves together in the heavenly ones. But when the look at earth they cry and they mourn and they weep together for the evils committed and they set in motion the anger of God[982]. Thes ones are: John of Rome, Elijah of Constantinople, and another one in the eparchy of Jerusalem[983]. And I believe that they will gain a greater mercy. Yes, they will. Amen. God wants to strengthen you in order you to hear and to bear these. This is because to them who lack the understanding those things will remain non-understood.

[981] Both these asks are inspired by the Apocalypse. The almost continuous wars started among Persians, made persisting an atmosphere of incertitude. Only the prayer and the sacrifices brought by the saints on the heavenly altar, next to the sacrifice of Christ, could escape the world. These asks were a foretelling for the desolation brought to the Christians in Palestine and in Egypt by Mahomedans.

570. Ask: A brother sent to be asked the other Oldman, saying: "in the name of the lord, if you need something, tell me so I can give that to you".

Answer: Brother, may God give you the good reward for your intention. But I have never told anyone, if I needed something: "Give me, but if God sees that I need something, God will have sown that thought to somebody and that one will [982] It is a paradox in the union between the gladness had by them in heavens and the pain felt by them for the things happening down on earth, resembling to the state of glory and of sacrifice of Christ. Commiserating with them who suffer it is a resting for those who love them (Basil Gonddikakis, Εισοδικον, Athos, 1974). On the opposite, the indifference, the callouses of the heart towards them who suffer, it will bring torment.

[983] At note in the Volos Edition, p. 267, it is told that that one was Barsanuphius who lived in the monastery in the land of Gaza, that belonged to the eparchy of Jerusalem.

bring me that what I needed. And I received that. This is for, if I told that, it would be lust and not need for it[984].

570. bis. Abba (Serid) told to the same Oldman (John) that he has never seen him smiling, or getting disturbed: neither receiving the Holy Impartation without tears, after saying: "Lord, not towards judgment be to me these holies".

It happened that the Oldman told Abba to do something but Abba forgot about that after he left. When Abba came for the second time, the Oldman told him: "If you remember, do what I told you to do". And leaving, Abba forgot again. And after a few days Abba came again and the Oldman gently reminded him about the thing he told Abba to do. And Abba got very sad. And the Oldman told Abba: "Do not be upset, and when you remember than, do it". And because that happened for several times, Abba asked the Great Oldman to show him what did that mean? And the Oldman told him: "That happened with the permission of God, in order you to see the patience and the long-patience of the Oldman, and you to become his follower".

570. c. The Story about Abba Serid.

About Aba Serid I can say many and wonderful things, worthy to be told. But, by leaving aside most of the things, in order our word to be short, I am going to mention only a few of those, but enough for showing the virtue of the man.

He has remains from his youth temperate and very restraint, more than anyone. He tormented his body so that he wounded his body terrifically. But the Holy Oldman prayer to God and Abba was healed, and after that the Holy Oldman commanded Abba Serid to govern his body in the future with right-reckoning, so that to serve his spiritual liturgy, and so him to be able to rule the brothers. He achieved a great obedience, so that he obeyed the same Great Oldman in everything, to his death. This was for, by cutting off his wills as the Oldman himself confessed about him in his "Answers" written before, himself have become obedient. This was for by enduring many [984] God takes care of fulfilling the needs of all the people, but not of their lusts. The needs are those depending on their nature given them by God. The lusts are elicited by the people themselves over the measure of what they need, or the lusts are stirred up by demons.

things from him and even being him beaten and tried in many ways, and through many things being him held in fire as the gold is kept into oven, he reached to be an honored vessel of good use to the Master. This was for he never answered against in anything. Neither did he reckon himself as an Abba, but as a disciple of the Oldman and as one owing consummate obedience to the Oldman. That was also a proof of the fullest humble cogitation. That's why the Oldman had him like a son.

And he prayed God to give him the gift of the right-reckoning (discernment), which by being given to him, with the help of the grace from above, him to be able to guide their souls to life, to comfort the troubled, to use the word from the Ghost as a healing medicine, and to crow with peace them who were fighting. This was for by firstly filling himself up with peace, he became cause for peace to others too. It was thus fulfilled the word: "Blessed are the peacemakers, for they will be called as sons of God" (Mt. 5: 9). And he was long-patient and undisturbed and benevolent to them who came to him. And his word was pleasant and full of decency and "seasoned with salt" (Col. 4: 6). He had, as the Scripture asks us, "wisdom and innocence" (Mt. 10: 10). And he was very loved by the brother, and he gladdened their souls with the spiritual word of the advising, and he was urging them to virtue with the good example of his life and of his virtuous doing, and he was teaching the brothers the things he was doing, and he was mixing the gentleness with the fear of God, by "reproaching, rebuking, and urging", according to the word of the Apostle (2 Tim. 4: 2). And he told, to our benefit, that once an illness cam upon him and he was engulfed by fever, but he didn't ask God to heal him but to bestow him patience and gratitude.

It happened once to a pious and useful brother to be disturbed by the devilish work and he wanted to leave. And because, after advising that brother much, he didn't succeed in convincing that brother to stay, he got up from prayer and prostrated in front of that brother. And the brother saw that and he did the same. And then, Abba stood up and sealed the brother's heart with the sign of the cross and told him: "Brother, what do you want to do now?". And the brother was in a state of a peace and answered: "Whatever you want me to do". And he said that brother: "God and work". And that brother followed the usual program and went to work and he lived in peace, obeying into the fear of God.

On some other time, the same Abba needed a place near to the monastery in order him to build a church and a guesthouse. And he begged the landlord to sell him a part of land, but the landlord didn't want. And because Abba was because of being harassed by the brothers and by the loving-of-Christ laymen who were visiting him, him to insist to buy that place and because of no longing being him able to stand their harassment, and because of him not knowing what to do, he let the other Oldman to know about that. And the Oldman told him: "That place must come to us anyway. But it is not the right time yet. But if your thought troubles you, you will tell to your thought: think that this place is appointed to the imperial army and we cannot buy it, and thus your thought will cease". So, on any occasion he was troubled by that thought, he gave that answer and got peace. After a while, the landlord was convinced to sell that place. But in that place was a small hermitage and a brother was dwelling there. And that brother was asked if he would mind if that place was bought and he accepted with joy. And the place was bought. And after finding that out, a layman who loved Christ and the monastery, told Abba that he didn't rejoice so much because he thought that Abba worked without right-reckoning by wanting rather to satisfy one man than so many brothers who needed a church and who were very troubled or not having a church, and rather than the guests who were coming and having no comfort where to be welcomed. And that layman asked Aba for forgiveness, and asked him what was the purpose which Abba did that on, and he confessed his gossip. And Abba smiles at him and told him: "Son, I didn't want to trouble that brother, and that's why I threw all my worries to God" (1 Pt. 5: 7), and I tried to know the will of God through that brother. I believed that if God wanted us to take that place, God would convince that brother not to get upset. And if that brother got upset, it would be shown the will of God as us not to take that place. And, lo, God convinced him and he accepted joyfully and the things was fulfilled with peace. And that layman wondered about Abba's faith and about Abba's steadfast trust in God and of Abba's love for his neighbor and about Aba's dispassion towards the things of the world – for Abba wasn't defeated by the urge and by the pressure of a need – and that layman prostrated himself in front of Abba and he asked for forgiveness for his mistake. And that layman benefiting much of that, he extolled God for the virtue of the Fathers, and he left.

571. Question: A certain loving-of-Christ brother[985], who had much faith in the Holy Fathers, Abba Barsanuphius and Abba John, and for he wanted to be guided by them in his life, he sent to ask Abba John, saying: "Father, I want, by the mercy of God, to withdraw myself into the monastic life. But I am hesitating, if I should reject everything right now and leave, or to set firstly in order my businesses and then to be worriless in my withdrawal. I ask this especially for my old woman and for my children and for the selling of the places from the field. My thought tells me to place my old woman near to her grandsons and to I to give to those grandsons some near places so that they to produce enough food for her and for them. And then I would remain to take care of selling the other places. Tell me how will be the best so I to be able to decide what should I do, for to you God unveiled all the useful things.

The answer of John: Forgive me, gentleman and brother. I am a simple man who doesn't discern between right and left. But the Scripture said: "No one, after grabbing the plow, should look behind, but let him go straight ahead" (Lk. 9: 62). Then, remember the wife of Lot (Lk. 17: 32). And, again, remember that the lion is hold back by a sole hair and the vulture by the tips of his claw. So, place the old woman near to her grandsons[986] [987] and gain for you the lack of worries. And [985] In the French translation is mentioned between parentheses: Elian, the future descendent of Abba Serid.

[986] Asking a spiritual father about your thought it supposes you to know how to expose your thoughts to him. But who can do that? Everybody experiences a big entanglement of contradictory thoughts, but only a few people are able to present their thoughts appropriately. The degree of appropriateness in presenting one's thoughts differs widely. But the most nuances logics remain schematic, it remains abstract from the living reality that is indefinite in its movement and variety. We tell that one plus one equal two. But any one united with another one form another kind of pair. More than that, any one is different from another one. There aren't, in reality, two identical ones, neither among people, nor among animals, neither among trees, nor even among stones. The uniformity can be built only by people, but only on a technical plan. The technique can cut identical stoned, it can build up identical houses, or machineries. But those ones aren't a living reality. They are not a fecund reality either on the physical plan, or on the biological plan, or on the spiritual plan. Thus, there is in reality a rationality, but not an abstract one, or a uniform one, but one united with the indefinitely various life. The reality is in the image of the Holy Trinity, Whom the three Persons aren't identical in, Whom the Logos is united with the God in, and both of Them have Their common spring into the Father.

assess her expenses and the expenses of the children and give them the corresponding places. And they will give her what she will need, out of those places, on the ground of their hope of inheriting some of those fields after the passing away of the old woman, in exchange of them taking care of her. Pray the Holy Oldman if you must stay longer and sell the other places and the Oldman will tell you. And you will be worriless into the Lord. This is for He is not far from us, but He is looking at our heart in order Him to see if our heart is in good order; and he will guide us into the good things, if we too want that. So, by taking the commandment from the Oldman, walk trustfully and unhesitatingly towards the things told you by him. And the Lord will guide you according to your faith.

572. Question of the same one towards the Great Oldman: I know that I asked your Holiness about thoughts which exceed my measure. But by hearing the godlike voice that tells that "Not the healthy ones need the doctor, but the sick ones need the doctor" (Lk. 5: 31) and by seeing myself mastered by the multitude of my evil deeds and thoughts, I have thrown myself in the ocean of your mercies for Him Who said: "Alive I am, says the Lord, and I do not want the death of the sinner, but I want him to turn back and to be alive" (Ezra 18: 23)[988]. And this if for, through you, I too to hear: "Son, forgiven are your many sins" (Lk.

[987] The man can be an ocean of evil thoughts, but also an ocean of mercy, of love, and of wisdom. And no man is identical to another man, for, it that had been the case, no man would have needed anyone else. Each man is indefinite. Each man has an unquenchable thirst for another, and each man can bestow, endlessly, to another, other and other thoughts and comforting, but also torments. And only the person can provide such comforting and torment to another, while the objects cannot. The entire world is used by each man towards other and other thoughts, which he makes whole or he comforts or he torments with, the souly life of others. In the non-uniformity of the persons, in their reciprocal completion, and in the indefinite variety of the entire world's reality, there stays the possibility of the continuous widening of the horizons of the human spirit, which tends, in the same time, towards an absolutely clean love, which only the Person-like reality of God can have it, for God is various in His Trinity.

[988] God is alive, for God is Person, or better said God is Trinity of Persons, infinitely and eternally loving. Being alive, God wants that the human persons too, whom God created out of His love, for Him to love them and for they to love Him, they to be alive, namely non-unitary, non-uniformized in the repetition of a technique, but accomplishing on one another in their infinite variety into God.

7: 47-48)[989]. I know and I believe that God has bestowed you to know, through the Holy Ghost, before I ask, what I want and the thoughts which I want to ask you about[990]. But because I heard the Prophet who says: "You tell first, your sins, in order you to get corrected" (Isa. 43: 26), I too write my ask praying you not to overlook my wickedness, but you to accept this ask from me, because I am a sinner. This is for you have been given power from God, so that you can get me out of corruption and out of the shadow of death, and for you to guide me towards the true light, for you are kind. What do you command me to do? Should I reject suddenly all the things and I to not longer care of anything, or I should, in the first place, to put everything in order, so that I won't be bothered by worries in my withdrawal, and those worries to cause me all sorts of thoughts which to chock up my spiritual thoughts? And if you command me to firstly set everything in order, please tell me if I should take care of selling my small patches of land. And pray God to help me. This is for I do not ask you cogitating daringly that I could be able to guard your commandments, but I am asking you by trusting your prayers, your advice, and your help. So, pray God for me, so that the Lord to guide me towards the good and useful things and for the lord to give me power to guard your guidance. And God won't overlook your ask. This is because only this gives me courage in my weakness.

Answer: Son, it is obvious that the time is bad (Eph. 5: 16). And he who can run away from the world, he will be saved as Lot out of Sodom. "This is for the world lies in evil", as it was written (1 Jn. 5: 19), and the people within world they work doubtlessly, according to themselves. This is because, by being they intertwined with the earthly things, they become earthly, [989] The spiritual son throws himself into the ocean of the mercy of Barsanuphius, for this ocean of mercy I united with but it is not confounded to the ocean of mercy of God, and this ocean becomes a communicating vessel of the forgiveness of his sins. Only by unveiling himself into the indefinite of the love, the man entered in the communication with the infinite of Go's love and mercy, or God entered the communication with the man. And only thus the man becomes communicating vessel of the love and of the mercy of God.

[990] He who loves, he is in a familiar connection with the beloved one, and he can intuit the complexity of his thoughts, even before and more than his less' advances spiritual son is able to express them. It is the Holy Ghost Who penetrated more than the rationalities, or more than the meanings caught by logics. This is for the Ghost penetrates the man's ghost, or the man's spiritual life, out of which there come the ceaseless thoughts come out without ever getting exhausted.

and they who reject those, they will be elevated from the ground. So, they will obviously become heavenly. And we do not understand, we the wicked ones, that even though we do not want to leave these earthly things, we will till leave then unwillingly, at the time of our death. Son, the commandment of God is that the man to immediately break up with everything. This is for, to that one who came to Him, asking and saying: "I will follow You, Lord, but allow me firstly to set in order the things of my house", He answered to that one: "No one, by grabbing the plow and by turning back towards the previous things, is fitted for the Kingdom of Heavens (Lk. 9: 61-62). And to somebody else He told: "Let the dead to bury their dead" (Lk. 9: 60). And again: "He who loves his father or his mother more than Me, he is not worthy of Me" (Mt. 10: 37). And what was the meaning which He told in, that the man must hate even his own soul? (Lk. 14: 26). How can one hate his won soul, except by cutting of his will in everything for the Lord, saying: "Not as I want, but as You want" (Mt. 26: 39)[991]. If you say so with the whole your heart, you will have chosen His will that is us to leave everything and us to surrender ourselves Him. So, what will we do? Will we leave everything? But if, because our helplessness, we haven't reached this level yet, let's bow down our head admitting our helplessness and let's remain to set our businesses in order. And in this case let's not get haughty in our thoughts as one who do the good, as long as we still work the things of the sick. This is for, they who consummately reject the word, they suddenly shake off their own selves[992]. Therefore you, son, as a sick man, and as not fully healthy, organize firstly you to sell so you will be able to assure your old woman.

[991] Hating one's own soul means hating his will, which he thinks that his life depends on. But the life upheld by an own will that is contrary to God, it is a passing and mortal life, and destined to the eternal unhappiness. A life forever broken. This life must be hated, and one must choose the true life upheld by a will that is in communion with God, end therefore with God's life.

[992] They shake off their false self, namely their egotistic self that it locked up within himself, and monotonous, and poor, and broken apart from the communion with God Who is the spring of the infinite and unperishable life; they shake off their sick and helpless self. Only thus they can find their true self, their deeps self that is always new in the spring out of superior, generous, healthy, powerful thoughts, which are lived in the communion with God and open to the endless life which is being overpoured out of God; it is about their loving and communicative self. Still, we often experience how strong and rich is our self when loves and when we feel loved, and how strong and sick is our self when doesn't love and when doesn't feel loved, because of our egotism.

This is because otherwise you will find out a trap in the things. Assure her according to the answer given you by brother John. Regarding the selling of the places from the field, the Lord will take care of that, as the Lord will guide your life too, if you throw your worry upon Him. But remember you to tell Him day and night: "Master, direct my way according to Your will, towards my good and benefit". This is for the Lord know better than any man how to get us out, easily, from the prison of the darkness, namely from the limitation of the things of this vain world[993].

573. The ask of the same one towards the same Great Oldman: Pious Father, I thank God, for you haven't turned your mercy away from me. Consummate your mercy on your servant and pray to Master God for the salvation of my soul, so that I will be delivered from the passions of the evil-forgetfulness, and I to achieve the forgiveness through your holy hands, both in this age and in the age to come; and I to live under your cover until I will leave this body; and, simply, I to become your servant forever, by rejoicing of your grace and of the shelter or your holy living[994].

The answer of Barsanuphius: Son, it is good that you have written me about forgetfulness. This is because, if you didn't forget the things told you by me, you could know out of those that our Merciful Master and fore-knower Lord, He asked me to truly have you as my spiritual son. I have entrusted you with mysteries which I haven't entrusted many other with, as a proof that I have adopted you. This is for whom will the father unveil himself so much if not to his son? But the father does [993] Thew world of the material things close us up any horizon beyond them. And as the material things are perishable, we too are perishable while remaining attached only to them. Perishing is both the life of the world and our life, and vain, and therefore meaningless.

[994] Being in union with a spiritual father means living under his shelter (μονή), as in a protective and familiar house. They who love on one another are in a state of "reciprocal interiority" (Madinier); each one is within another as in his house, as "at home". They who are united by wedding, they "marry one another" (Saint Dumitru created an untranslatable pun, by using the similar sonority created by the Romanian words casă (house) / căsători (marrying), (E. l. t.'s n.)) they form a house. But any sincere friends of your is like a home to you. But that home uniting all of us and which we feel ourselves gathered forever in, it is God and, in a more familiar manner, it is Christ (Jn. 11: 23). IN the future life we will be consummately and eternally each one in every one, as in a home, and all of us in the common home Who is Christ.

that gradually, on the measure of his son's growing up, in order his son to be able to bear and to guard those mysteries. And all the ask towards God for you, and my prayer, are in order God to set you free from all dishonorable passions, among which the forgetfulness is counted too, and I pray God for Him to send you the Ghost Who will teach you about all the things, and for God not to separate you from us neither in the present age nor in the age to come. This is for God sees how much your remembrance has been rooted within my heart[995]. And, believe me, it won't be ever erased. Believe me that God bestowed you to me, even from now, your soul, towards eternal life[996]. But take heed, carefully, at you too not to forget, and you too to keep, doubtlessly, the memory of the things which I have told you and do not disregard them. This is because many, after gaining and sealing the gold within themselves, the behave carelessly and they lost that what they desired so much. This is because if the field is not cultivated and sown by the owner before the rain comes, all that flowing water will be useless for harvest. Take heed not you be indifferent, looking at how another bears your burden while you are idle. This is for he didn't say: "Much can the working prayer of the righteous" (Jas. 5: 16), but "many", namely it can bear many of the entrusted things. Use the whole your power, because many were with Jesus but many estranged themselves form Him. And the Apostle says: "And if the faithless separate himself, let him separate" (1 Cor. 7: 15).

But may God not allow these things to happen to you, but you to be my true and beloved son, born by me in those pains according to Christ[997], and a sheep of the flock of Christ,

[995] The remembrance of the beloved one gets uprooted within the heart of his who loves him, and it gets united with the breathing. You cannot leave without loving Christ and without loving His sones whom He loves. And by remembering those, you will have them present within yourself, but without getting yourself confounded to them. Their remembrance is part of your life.

[996] Barsanuphius connected himself so much, through love, with his spiritual son, so that he believes that he will have him united with himself in the eternal life too. This is for he won't feel himself as whole without his spiritual son. One could say that the whole this book is focused on the idea about the union of those who love on one another and who together believe in Christ. This is the Orthodoxy's ghost of communion. This is an internal union in the image of the Holy Trinity and due to the present of the Holy Trinity, or in the interior of the Holy Trinity.

[997] A spiritual son is born by his spiritual father in the pains of the taking care of him, and of all sorts of commiseration, of the toils for advising him and upholding him in his hardships, in sanctified vessel, and inheritor of the glory; and you, for your living according to Christ, you to achieve the eternal life. Do not shame up my old age. This is for God know how I use the whole my power for your salvation, by praying Him, in order Him to set you for eternity together-inheritor with His saints, of the future goods "which the eye hasn't seen and the hear hasn't heard and at the man's heart they haven't ascended, and which have been prepared to them, by God" (1 Cor. 2: 9). May you too be partakers to these, and you too to be together-inheritor of their, forever and ever. Amen. May this be told also by the Powers from above and by the saints whose till are on earth into body. Amen. Amen. Amen. Be it, be it. And this will be sealed by the Father and by the Son and by the Holy Ghost[998].

574. The ask of the same one towards the other Oldman: After a while, Abba Serid, the abbot of the monastery, he passed away, and he appointed as his inheritors the first among the brothers. But not in order they to lead together, because of being that a cause for disorder, but one at a time, the first one in the first place, and then, after his death, there to come the second brother, and so on, one after another. He appointed Abba Elian as the last one, him to be inheritor if he becomes a monk. But Abba Elian didn't know that. So, after that decision Abba Serid moved to the Lord, the first among the brothers appointed to take the leadership he refused it humbly and modestly. The following ones did the same, following that one's example. Meanwhile, upon this loving-of-Christ brother came, from the devil, a bit sadness for he was thinking at the end of the world and at the troubles which were to engulf him and at the eternal torments. And being him burdened by those thoughts and being him in danger to fall, he sent his question on these to Abba John, and he asked Abba John to pray for him and to give him a word of comforting. And that one sent him the following answer that spoke to him rather about obedience. This was because Abba his efforts for fulfilling the given advices, in the worries the son not to be defeated by the temptations coming upon him etc.

[998] All the angels and all the saints pray in a choir in order they to have each soul partaker to their eternal happiness. And God seals their prayer by fulfilling it, if that soul too he strives to advance towards that happiness into the universal communion. This is for God doesn't work in isolation with each individual soul. But all work together with God, for God loves it so.

John was thinking to command him to take the lead of the monastery, as it was seen after that.

The answer of John: Beloved brother, your faith in God asks that if somebody surrender on himself to God, him no longer will have himself under his own control, but he will obey God to the last of his breath. So, let him accept with gratitude anything coming upon him from God and that means "thanking God in everything" (1 Thes. 5: 18). This is because, if the man doesn't accept the things coming upon him, he won't obey God and he will try to impose his own will. So did the Jews trying to impose their will so that they were unable to obey God's law (Rom. 10: 8). So, the faith is one with the humbleness: "This is for, on them whom He called, He corrected them and he glorified them" (Rom. 8: 29). Therefore, you must cast away form you that sadness that works death[999]. But that sadness according to God, it works the life (2 Cor. 7: 10)[1000]. So, pray for me and do not let yourself discouraged. This is because otherwise you will anger God, by upholding your won will. May our Lord Jesus Christ give you power to do His will, and may you find out mercy in front of Him, for His is due the glory and the mastery forever. Amen.

575. When the brother received this answer, he was immediately liberated from the thought troubling him. But he didn't understand the meaning of the things written to him, and he wondered about the fact that his questions remained unanswered, and he received different answer. After that, the Oldman explained him this thing limpidly, and the Oldman commanded him to take over the administration of the monastery. But the brother wondered about the fact that the [999] That sadness that comes out of our mistrust in God, it will give proportions to the come or to the waited for hardships, and it not only causes a palsy of the souly powers, but it causes even a helplessness to endure the life any longer. In that sadness there is death. He who believes in God he will relativize the hardships of the life. He knows that the life's hardships are passing, and that god will intervene at his ask and God will remove those hardships from him.

[1000] On the opposite, that sadness that is born out of the conscience of not having fulfilled the will of God, namely out of the faith that God intervenes when the man prays Him, it will work the salvation from death. Such a sadness is a discontent for the life that is unpleasant to God, namely a life that hasn't fulfilled God's will. That is a sadness that kills the sadness, and that brings the man to the true life, to his life into God.

Oldman thought this about him, because he reckoned himself as unworthy of such a thing. But the brother didn't dare to resist the Oldman and therefore the brother wrote to the Oldman the followings: "Abba, I do not know myself better than the Ghost of God Who lives within you knows me. But I am scared and I treble for the danger of this responsibility. If you know that I can find mercy in this, by having our shelter into Christ[1001], I won't resist it. This is for you have mastery upon me and I am in God's hands in in your hands".

So, the Oldman write him the following answer: Lord and brother, God is witness to me that I truly love my brother. And my prayer if for your soul not to be harmed in any regard. So, by trusting your obedience, and by taking care of your salvation, I have been collaborating with you in that what is good[1002]. The hidden things of the man are shown to God. Do you see, my brother, that there are many things and exceedingly difficult. But believe that everywhere in the monastery, even the ground belongs to God. And Him Who has united the earthly things to the heavenly things, He has sanctified everything with His presence[1003]. Therefore, it depends on you the together-working and the together-suffering of yours, so that you to be partaker to those souls who are saved[1004]. This is for the Apostle said: "Bear your burdens to [1001] The shelter of the saint is fortified within him by the shelter from Christ. The help provided by the saints it absorbs its power from the help form Christ. The saint is united into Christ in all the good he does to others. That's why he can do that good. Christ won't remain separated from them who believe strongly in Him. Christ is present within them and in their powers which irradiate out of them.

[1002] The active intertwining among them who believe in Christ finds diverse ways or expression: "I trust your obedience" is one of these ways. I do not simply trust you, but I trust you for you trust me. I trust you as a disciple that you will obey me as your spiritual father. I give you my hand but you must let your hand into my hand; do not retracts your hand forcedly.

[1003] The Father gives existence to all realities. The Son gives them their meanings. The Holy Ghost sanctified them, and He gives them their urge towards holiness. And there where the Son if there will be the Fathers and the Holy Ghost too, and there where the Holy Ghost is there will be the Father and the Son too. All realities received only from God their existence, and their meaning, and their movement towards their consummation. This movement towards holiness is the sign of the active presence of God, in continuation, in the created realities; it is the sign that God is not separated from them.

[1004] The partaking of the communion doesn't' consist of a passive interpenetration, but it consists of a together-working of the good, and in a together-suffering of the hardships. I help my fellow human, I suffer together with him, I participate to his life, and we urge on one another to advance in the good things. This is for Christ does so. And that's why Christ gives one another and so you will fulfill the law of Christ" (Gal. 6: 2). And he told again: "Let yourself descended to the humble ones" (Rom. 12: 16). And the Lord said: "He who obeys you, he obeys Me, and he who disregards you, he disregards Me" (Lk. 10: 16)[1005]. This is for anything (good, that we ought to do) it belongs to God, so that you cannot refuse to do it. That's why, it there is sone human thing[1006], I am letting you know that we appoint you to take care of it, for God Who has no other care except for the salvation fo the souls. This is for the Scripture says: "He who turns a sinner back from his strayed way, he will save a soul from death and he will cover a multitude of sins" (Jas. 4: 20). Encourage yourself into the Lord and believe to Jesus and he will guard you against the evil one. This was asked for by Him from His Father, for His Apostles. Do not hesitate, therefore, but pour your heart in God and in our Lord Jesus Christ and in the Ghost of the truth[1007]. And by this I

Himself to us always in state of sacrifice, because He commiserates together with us, and He wants us to become together-suffering with Him of others' passions. Christ is the central heart beating for us, and He communicated to our hearts their beatings for other hearts. This is, in the same time, our full healing from the passions of our egotism. We are saved, thus, together, by getting us rid of our sad egotism, for we advance and enter the infinite broadness of God, and into one another.

[1005] "If you are united with Me when you speak, whosoever listens to you he will listen to Me" etc. But we must speak as one who are united through faith with Christ, by feeling that ourselves speak out of His commandment and out of His power which is within us.

[1006] If there is a thing beneficial to the man, a thing helping the man to become even more human, and that help even yourself, namely that thing helps you to be saved, that thing becomes a task of each anyone of you. This is also for the salvation is the sole care of God for us.

[1007] You can pour your heart into God, for you heart I made for living into the endlessness of God's life, thought thing won't mean losing your conscience while united with the conscience of God. But God too can pour Himself within your heart, for your hearts is made so that it can always get broader, in order your heart to comprise evermore the infinity of God's love and life, and you will have God without your heart as Another Subject of your heart, together with yourself. This is for them who pour themselves one within another, they know that they still are two persons, who want to bestow themselves to one another with everything they have, but they still remaining distinct hypostases rejoicing for one another, but being they able to withdraw their life from another, at any time. The heart of the loving-of-God man is poured into the God of the love, and God too pour Himself within that heart. This is for God lives in Himself His love ads an eternal overpouring of each Person within the Other Two Persons. You overpour your heart into God more when you are in state of prayer. God accepts your heart in this state, for only thus your heat can get softened and becomes capable of overpouring itself into God. If you heart gets callous because of your pride, your heart won't be able to get out of itself and to enter another, in the last instance in God too.

believe that you will find mercy from the chair of God[1008]. "May the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ and the impartation with the Holy Ghost ne with you" (2 Cor. 13: 13). Amen.

*575. bis. Hearing these things, the brother let the Oldman know that: "Behold, your servant, be it to me according to your word" (LK. 1: 38). And out of the commandment of the Fathers he was worthy of the monastic schism. And everybody sent a request to the bishop and he was ordained presbyter and then he was appointed hegumen of the monastery. And, in the first place, he was worthy to come a visit Abba John and the Oldman welcomed him as his most honorable Abba. This is for the humbleness of the Oldman was great. And he told him: "Bless me, Abba". And that one was petrified, and he didn't dare to bless the Oldman. And for the Oldman asked for the blessing for the second time, in order not to resist the request, he blessed the Oldman. And being invited he sat. And the Oldman told him: *

"Brother, the Great Oldman foretold me about you that you will be a monk and hegumen of the monastery. And behold, this has been accomplished by the benevolence of God. Take heed at yourself and may your heart be strengthened into the Lord Who empowers you. Amen.

576. Then he asked the Oldman saying: Forgive my daring, Father, for I pray you to explain me about what I want to ask you: why the firstly appointed brothers rejected to take over the leadership of the monastery? And why you allowed them to do so, while knowing their virtue and their obedience and knowing that the order of the succession gave them primacy; and to me, the unworthy one, who have had no work fulfilled in the monastic life, you have commanded me to take over this leadership which they deserved more than me?

[1008] He who hides his thought, he shelters and protects the evil and the lie within himself. He locks up into himself, and he continues to plot against others. He loses the communion with other, the communion that provides joy and that brings the encouragement and the life. By locking yourself up towards others, you won't be able to open yourself to God either, and vice versa. By telling to your confessor your thought, you tell God that you do not detach yourself from Him. This is for you reject your egotism and you enter the communion with God and with your fellow humans.

Answer: The brothers refused due to their deep humbleness. This is for, by having by the will of God the empowerment to take over the leadership, according to the order established through testament, they didn't rush to take it over, but they loved the obedience more. And they have chosen you with the whole their heart, towards the rebuking od them who search for inheritances and for presents, and to them who have the worldly thought of the love for money and who cherish the earthly things more than the Kingdom of Heavens. Rejoicing us due to their humbleness, we have forgiven their withdrawal. But we have commanded you to accept due to the call from God, for God manages everything towards the benefit of each one, according to His prescience. Do not reckon that that has been done because their disobedience. This is for Moses too, when receiving from God the commandment to lead the people, he answered: "I am weak and I stutter" (Exod. 4: 10). And God forgave him because he didn't say that resisting but out of deep humbleness. This was done also by Prophet Jeremiah, saying: "Lord God, behold I don't know how to speak, for I am young" (Jer. 1: 6). And that wasn't counted him as resistance. So did the centurion saying to our Savior: "I am not worthy for you to enter under my roof" (Mt. 8: 8). And the Lord wondered about the centurion's faith that what united with the humbleness. But why Joshua Navi[1009] didn't reject the leadership (The Second Law 31: 7-8) and why the Apostle didn't reject the preaching? Didn't they have humbleness? But both they who accepted and they who rejected had humbleness. This is because one cannot be separated from another. And all those things are being done in order to be fulfilled the judgment of God related to us and in order to be shown, in many ways the virtues of the saints. Therefore, you must believe that all the things from God are fulfilled appropriately and you should not spy any further. May the Lord make you wise and enlighten the eyes of your understanding through the prayers of the saints. Amen.

577. Hearing these things, he praised the God and he told to the Oldman:" "Father, because of being I a beginner and because I do not know what to tell to the brothers, what do you command me to tell them?

Answer: Tell them these: "Lord Jesus Christ takes care of us". This is for He told us: "I won't let you orphans, for I will come to you" (Jn. 14: 18). That's why take heed at yourself with the whole your humble cogitation and love for God. And God will bless you and He will be shelter and guide to you". And tell them also these: "Let not somebody hide his thought, because the joy of the ghost is this: somebody to hide his thoughts so that his soul to be lost". And if somebody tell you his thought, you will say within yourself: "Lord, give me to tell him everything You reckon as beneficial to the salvation of his soul; I to say Your word and not mine. This is for it was written: If somebody mistakes, let his word be like God's" (1 Pt. 4: 11)[1010].

578. Question: When I bless the brothers, should I give them my hand, or not? My thought tells me to pet their heads too; would that be good?

Answer: When you bless them, you give them your hand telling them: "Reckon that God will do to you according to your faith and not according to what is pleasant to the man. This is for Himself our Lord said: "he who receives me as prophet in name of a prophet, he will take prophet payment; and he who receives me as righteous in a righteous name, he will receive the payment of a righteous" (Mt. 10: 41). Nd if somebody is prophet and righteous, he who doesn't receive him as prophet and as righteous, he won't take payment. But if he isn't prophet or righteous, but he is received as prophet and a righteous, he who received him will take payment of prophet and righteous[1011]. But you must not kiss their heads because that [1010] You must speak while being aware of the fact that you are fulfilling a commandment of God. This is for, this makes you feel a responsibility for that what you say. You will speak in the fear of God, as from God. And God won't allow you to tell except that what is pleasant to Him and that what is towards the benefit of them whom you are talking to.

[1011] Your will be honored according to the honor which you receive somebody with, in the name of God. You can receive somebody else with a sincere honoring only in the name of God.

deed has in itself a hypocrisy by searching for being pleasant to the people.

579. Question: How should I behave to my brothers?

Reckon yourself as inferior to everybody. But reckon yourself also as their ruler, by guarding the appointment received by you to be merciful to all of them, as the Apostle said: "Bear the burdens to one another" (Gal. 6: 2) or: "Rebuke the disordered ones, encourage the weak ones" (1 Thes. 5: 14). And if somebody doesn't obey you, you will draw his attention. The same Apostle will teach you out of the few words I have told you.

580. Question: How must behave the keeper of the order (the chief-singer) and the administrator, towards the brothers?

Answer: With long-patience, in order they to bear their weaknesses.

581. Question: If a brother mistakes, how will I rebuke him? Apart, or in front of the brothers?

Answer: If the mistake is a big one, you will rebuke him in the presence of the brothers. But he should be told in advance: "If you do not correct yourself, I will talk about you in the presence of the brothers, for the Lord commanded us so: "Reproach him between you and hi, and if he turns himself, you will have gained your brother. And if not, take together with you one or two more" (Mt. 18: 14-16). And if his mistake is a small one, reproach him and punish him apart".

582. Question: If somebody endures into monastery, which will be the way he will be saved in? And what does he have more, him who lives in a place where there live the Holy Fathers too?

Answer: He who dies into monastery in humbleness and in obedience, he will be saved through Christ. This is for Lord Jesus gives word for him. And him who does his will, while only pretending to be obedient and humble, he will stay under the judgment of God. And him who behaves according to his will for the resting of his body and not for the benefit of his soul, he must be reproached from time to time, because "Him Who wants that all the people to be saved and to come to the knowledge of the truth" (1 Tim. 2: 4). And if he persists in that, you will suffer him until he will correct himself, or until he will leave by his own. But if he caused harm to the brothers, tell him that if he persists in that behavior he will no longer be allowed to live there with the brothers. This is for one cannot be endured him to do his pleasure while others get harmed.

And he who persevere in the good and according to God faith, into monastery, he will receive the protection from God and he will get built up. And by dying in that living, he will find his resting.

And the plus had by him who dwells in that place where the Holy Fathers are, it if that he has his faith united with the good doing and he believed in the power of the Fathers. This is for "Much can the working prayer of the righteous" (Jas. 5: 16). That is something that somebody cannot be found regardless where to. This is for our Lord said about Apostles: "When I were with them, I were guarding them. But not I am coming to You. Guard them in Your name" (Jn. 17) 11-13). For Yours is the glory forever. Amen.

583. Ask towards the same Oldman: Deign to tell to the brothers some words about patience and obedience. This is for they will accept your word. And the Oldman told them the followings.

Answer: Brothers, you haven't come to resting but to trouble. This is for our Lord commanded to the Apostle so: "On earth you will have troubles and sadness; you will have, and the world will rejoice" (Jn. 16: 33). If you follow our Lord Jesus, Him to will be together with you. And if you reject Him, He too will eject you. So, he who wants to find blessing from God, let him obey Him Who said: "he who keeps My word, he won't eve die" (Jn. 8: 51). So, he who searches for eternal life, let him keep His word in cutting his own will, all the way to the shedding of his blood[1012]. And he who searches for accomplishing his will that is unpleasant to God, he won't be partaker to Christ. Take heed at yourself into the fear of God, and our Lord will protect you through the prayers of the saints. Amen.

584. Question: Tell me, Father, how must I welcome the visitors, laymen, Fathers, and brothers?

Answer: Waling into wisdom, you will receive all of them without offending them, according to the word of the Apostle who made himself pleasant to Jews and to Hellenes and to the Church of God (1 Cor. 10: 32). For the love for Christ, you will remember the Lord. This is because of the time leaning towards the body's pleasures and towards satiating the belly, which give born to all the passions. Protect yourself against them who come out of different motifs, either laymen, or brothers, or Fathers. If they come, you won't either flatter them or reject them. If there is somebody coming to waste his time, you will cut off that habit of his. You know the behavior of Abba (Serid) with the visitors. It is more beneficial to you to hear that you a cheap, than you to unwillingly be profligate. Receive them with decency, while you searching for motifs to remain unsatiated. And if somebody forces you, tell him that what the Apostle says: "Do not get drunk with wine, that is fornication" (Eph. 5: 18(. The Fathers say: "Urge every man who wants to be saved, to give repentance to God, and to guard himself from the wine that gives birth to all the passions" (Abba Isaiah, Recueil, 16, 116, p. 137). Guard yourself against those who say: "If you do not drink, I won't drink either, and if you do not eat, I won't eat either", and urge them with humble cogitation by telling them what the Apostle said: "Let him who eat not to despise him who doesn't eat, and let him who doesn't eat not to judge him who eats. Because he east and extolls God" (Rom. 14: 3-6)[1013]. So, [1012] The order is kept not only by issuing orders, but also by being fulfilled by him who issued those orders too. Asking the brothers for bearing their burdens to one another, himself so asks for that he must be the first to bear the brother's burdens, as an example.

[1013] He who keeps the word of our Lord, he unites himself with the Lord by will. And united with our Lord, he will have the immortal life together with the Lord. That's why our Lord asks us to keep His word, and not out of a simple lust for us to obey Him. By keeping His word, it is promoted the union among all the things, and between us and all the things. This is both of them are honored by God, for both of them do these things while extolling God[1014]. But out of the love for God, each or us satisfies his need. One will say: "I am weak and I cannot do it, show me your love. For the Apostle said: "The kingdom of heavens isn't food or drink" (Rom. 14: 17), but it is love and clean heart and the followings".

Therefore, discern among visitors, in order you to have the understand and the wisdom to see what they have come to you for: for God, or for foods. And as much as you can, do not lower yourself to the wisdom of the bodily words, with them who come, if it is not necessary to them to listen to the word of God. This is for God gives you wisdom, in order you to talk to them about the "Lives of the Saints", about Gospel, or about Apostles and Prophets. And to not give them occasion for telling some worldly thing, because otherwise the food and all the other things will become bodily too. Snd the things said you by me do not belong to the bodily wisdom. Do not utter the things which are uttered by the worldly things, for they are bodily wisdom. But say: "The Lord said: Give Caesar what belongs to Caesar, and give God what belongs to God" (Mt. 22: 21). And if you have come for God, we will be able to speak about the things belonging to God. "The world lives that what it belongs to it" (Jn. 15: 19). But the world doesn't speak together with the harmony of God. Let's take heed to us not to be punished because of together-speaking contrary to the will of God. This is for the Apostle said: "The body's thought is enemy to god for nobody has a true life in isolation. There is not where one who is alone. And when one wants to be alone, he will bring disorder among other people and among other things, and he will bring the sufferance within himself. This happens when the man affirms his own will. Then he fights to exit the reality, that is a reality of the many and a reality consummated into The One from Trinity. Any commandment of God is given towards our union with everybody and with all the things.

But our union in will doesn't mean us to be confounded to Him. Saint Maximos the Confessor and the Ecumenical Synod VI defended the human will in Christ in its harmony with His godlike will. Not affirming your won will means wanting what God too wants, it means wanting together with God. We meet everywhere the mystery of the variety in unity. What joy would Christ had if His will was done with us without us too willing that? How could we love Him? How could we obey Him if that was the case? And if we will that what God wills, we will impropriate all the things depending on Him. We will receive within us all the things done by God, for God does those things in the benefit of all of us.

[1014] Not only him who doesn't eat extolls God, but also him who eats and gives thanks to God for the food. Of course, that this brings a certain restraint as well.

because of not obeying the will of God, because neither it can" (Rom. 8: 7)[1015].

585. Question: Tell me, Father, what it consists of a bodily question and how one should answer it?

Answer: Suppose that some people came to us asking about the fighting of a war and we answered them that such a thing is an injustice, and God doesn't help the injustice. And if somebody asks about bodily things, give him a true answer and not a avoidant answer, namely that answer according to god and not a bodily answer.

586. Ask: Master, I ask your mercy you to pray together with the Holy Oldman (Barsanuphius) in order I to be delivered form the haughty cogitation and I to give each one the answer with a humble heart and with the fear of God as you have prayed for the one among saints my Father (Serid[1016]).

Answer: Blesse is God. Be it to you according to your will. And may God Who plentifully bestows all the things to give you through the prayers of the Holy Oldman to live into the Holy Ghost and fearing Him; and may you bestow to everyone, with humble cogitation and with worthiness the necessary answer. Anywhere you reach to be, ask in your thought for the help of the Holy Father: "Abba, what should I say?"[1017]. And to not be [1015] Neither the food must remain a purely bodily deed. Make it occasion to thank God, and make it occasion for other useful thoughts and dialogues. The food is also a gif from God, and its components are concretized rationalities, not to say also about the body that is upheld in its life by the soul, so that the body is a concretized rationality intertwined with many concretized rationalities and united with the rationality of the soul. The body isn't separated from the soul, the foods aren't prepared without the human rationality or inappropriate to the rationality concretized into body. That's why the foods have the purpose of maintaining the whole body and through body the whole man.

[1016] The "body's thought", on one hand it doesn't want to obey the will of God, but on the other hand neither it can, because of representing a weakness of the man; it is a weakness that seems a power to the man. It is "the thought of a body" that wants itself to be separated form its soul.

[1017] The Old John had so much respect for the Great Oldman Barsanuphius that he recommended to abbot Alian to ask the Great Oldman in thought: "Father, what should I speak?". The Old John saw a connection being established between Elian and Barsanuphius worries about that what you will speak[1018], according to our Lord's word: "Do not worry about what you will speak, for are not you the ones who speak but the Ghost of your Fathers Who is in heavens is Him Who speaks within you" (Mt. 10: 20).

587. Question: How must he practice the love for guests and the love for poor? And should we receive all the visitors immediately? And when the burden us by asking us to give them clothes, even if we have clothes to spare, should we give them? And how?

Answer: You ought to practice the love for guests and for poor on the measure of your power of endurance. Even if you have more than you need, you will give that with measure in order you not to be take into mastery by the habituation, neither they to ask you equally much when you have nothing more to give. Examine, why the visitor has come? And if the visitor id a thief, give him a small help and let him go. And because there are some ones coming here to burden, do not encourage them. This is for they come out of their avarice, and not because they really need something. And do not give anybody clothes haphazardly, but only to him who much fears God and he is ashamed to ask for clothes. Try to find the truth, and if there is somebody totally poor and needy out of the will of God and not because of himself wasting, you will show him compassion.

588. Question: Why must not be accepted into monastery the vagabond monks?

Answer: Because of them entering the monastery and causing troubled in it. That's why give them a small help and let them go away.

even through the thinking of Barsanuphius. He was giving this sup[port to Elian because he knew that Barsanuphius was not to communicate with anyone after his death.

[1018] In the footnote to Volos Edition, it is issued the opinion the one within holiness Father was called Elians' predecessor Serid, and through the Holy Oldman was called Barsanuphius (p. 278).

589. Question: If somebody insists to enter, should we let his in, or not?

Answer; Him who you must not receive, you won't receive him even if he insists for being received, as the Fathers said. But if it is necessary, you will give him something more and you will let him go away. This is for this is appropriate.

590. Question: If we do not know somebody at all, and we do not know who he is, should we let him enter or not?

Answer: You receive the unknown one for the first time and see what that man is like. But do not receive one, suddenly, to sleep in the monastery, in order not to raise out of that a trial and to bring you trouble because of not being you able to endure him.

591. A certain hieromonk who occasionally comes to the monastery, he harms the brothers, by speaking and by doing offensive things. And he wants to live close to the monastery as to two miles distance from the way which the brothers walk on. What do you command me? Should we let him enter the monastery and dwell nearby, at the mentioned place, or not?

Answer: Forbid him to enter the monastery by telling him: "Mister Abba, you have offended the brothers and you should not enter here, in order not to offend them even more. Please do not think that we reject you because of hating you: "This is for him who hates his brother, he is man killer" (1 Jn. 3: 15). But we do than because of offense. And you neither can live nearby because of offending the brothers". Tell those things yourself, in order you not to shame him up through somebody else. For he is a cleric.

592. Question: Some other one coming to monastery did something cunning and inappropriate. This was for that man took some things in the name of the blessed Abba (Serid) without him known about that. And Abba found out about that and he commanded him to no longer enter the monastery. That one heard that, but he still entered through somewhere else. And the gateman saw him and he announced Abba. And this one told him: "Get him out and banish him away from here, for good". If that one comes again, will him let him enter, or not?

Answer: You ought not to receive him, for that won't be beneficial to you. But tell him through somebody else, when he comes: "You cannot enter here". This is for that is not towards the benefit of the soul.

593. Question: Another brother who was dwelling yore into monastery, because of not being useful to the brothers he left. And after a while he wanted to turn back. But Abba didn't receive him, by telling him: "Eve if I wanted, I couldn't offend the brothers' conscience. This is for they will get upset if I received you, and I accept do that". Because he exited, but now he wants to be received back, why do you command me to do?

Answer: Tell him: "You spoke about this yore, to Abba (Serid) and he answered you that this was impossible. So, do not expect now, after a while, to dwell here". And let him go. And if he comes again, you will receive him again, with simplicity, as on a brother. And if he keeps coming, continuously, tell him: "Doesn't your conscience reproach you?".

594. Question: If somebody bring us something, but he expects to receive more from us, what should I do? Should I receive him or not? This is for it happens sometimes that I need that thing.

Answer: If you don't need that, you won't take it. If you need that, you will tell him: "If I take that, I will pay you its price". And strive yourself to give him something equal in return.

595. Question: It happens sometimes us to be visited by pious women and by mothers of some brothers from us. And we deceive them in the outer monastic cell that has windows towards monastery. Must I talk to them through those windows, or not? And because my wide didn't want to dwell with my grandsons and she bestowed me all her belongings, do you command me that when she comes once, I to give her what she needs? Or, what should I do? How the things should go?

Answer: If there occurs the occasion for women to come to you for God, and not for seeing the place, neither for doing their will, but especially for hearing the word of God, or for bringing something to the monastery, and if you should talk to them, you will talk. But force yourself to guard your eyes, for "him who looks at a woman and lust her, he has already fornicated with her in his heart" (Mt. 4: 28). And everything done for Gud will be covered by God. So, direct your thought to God, in order you not to work for being pleasant to people, either you to search for praise, but out of a clean heart. And if the mother of some brother comes because she needs something, you must not talk to her. This is for her son can assure her that you help her with what she needs. And you are debtor to your wife for the rest of her life, to talk to her from time to time and to give her what she needs, either she wants to life in the city or in her village. And you smut not allow your children to accomplish their wills until you will have set them on the good road of the life, so that you must advise them in the fear of God, feeding them and clothing them up, protecting them against wasting and against being despised by others, as also against searching for unnecessary things, by reproaching them and by telling them: "Takle heed at yourselves for you are not slaves, but free. Aren't you worriless and don't you have more resting than them who have riches?". And after your wife dies, liberate them and give them the necessary thing measuredly, either in their village, or wherever you want to. This is for there is not a law in this regard. If you set then far, they will get estranged and they will no longer reckon themselves among yours.

596. If a thought come to me to change something from the order instated by the blesses Abba (Serid), or to correct something in monastery, do you command me to do that or not?

Answer: If it seems to you that it is necessary to change something, in the fear of God, you won't hesitate. But to not change to much, only as much as the need requires. And even with some restraint, as in a foreign house. This is for the things of this century are like a tent[1019]. When you see your thought trying to change something, you tell your thought: "What do you want that for?". And if that thing is absolutely necessary, you will let that to be done. And if that change is unnecessary, you will tell to your thought: "What is it this good for?". And it that thought it a bodily thought, you will despise it. And if that thought harasses you much, you won't answer it, but you will run to God.

598. Ask: For you have announced us, Master, for several times, about your end, and that's why I am mastered by fear and by sadness, lest for my unworthiness we to be forsaken by God, please give me an assurance that as we are helped during your life so will we be helped also about your departure to God; and for God to help us in everything with His mercies.

Answer: God said once and for all: "I won't let you, neither I will forsake you" (Joshua Navi 1: 5[1020]). And we believe to God that God will do that more than when I have been with you. Either you as for that, or you don't. God will help you more than you ask for, as the Apostle said: "Because we do not know how to pray appropriately" (Rom. 8: 26)[1021]. Our Lord Jesus Christ Who descended Himself from on His parental throne, for our salvation[1022], Himself to save you and to restore you and to [1021] We do not know how to express even that what we feel in our discussion. All the less we know to express ourselves when we have to express much deeper and more subtle thoughts and asks, in front of God. The prayer should be a supreme poetry, for only thus the prayer could come close to the so complex reality which we owe top live it especially on those moments.

[1022] Jesus Who descended to us, by making Himself man, He will always remain descended through His humanity, but after His crucifixion His humanity is a humanity that has crossed through the hardest of our suffering: through death, and after resurrection, it is a humanity that guard you against the evil one, by us[1023] working together with you through the prayers of the saints[1024]. Amen.

599. Question: Some old men from the monastery asked the same Oldman: We you to tell us, Master, for you have promised us that you have persuaded Master God to allow the blessed Abba (Serid) to leave after you will have left, why God took Abba before time, Him Who always has mercy of the will of them who fear him? And teach us more. Father, why God sometimes hides some things to the Saints, as in case of Prophet Elisha? And why Abba got ill with red swelling when he was about to die?

Answer: As it was said to Abba Anthony: "These are the judgments of God and you cannot know them (Paterikon, Anthony: 2). Regarding the red swellings and about his illness, they came to Abba because he took once glory for people overmeasure; namely, for the people not to deify him. Actually, he was partaker to the Holy Ghost and to consummation. That's why God covered, through this appearance, the man's glory, in order to be even more abundant within him the glory of God. This is for he reached such a measure that he was unable to take care of the earthly thing anymore. And while being him among people, he was no longer able to enjoy a consummate freedom and that's why God took him to Himself[1025]. Regarding us, we have been waiting to happen as we reckoned but it has has also the supreme strength gathered within it by defeating our weaknesses and our death as endured by Him.

[1023] He restores us outside the evil we have been into, or outside the sin we have fallen into. One can that here isn't about the Origenistic apocatastasis.

[1024] It is a together-working of us with Him, but a work helped by the prayers of the saints too who irradiated their feeling of love for us not only towards Lord Jesus but also towards us, united with the love of Christ. This power of Christ's love which is present in an which stimulates the prayers of the saints, it sets in motion and it frames into itself our work too. The spiritual reality as life it is complex, it is intertwined of indefinite components, which cannot be understood by the rationality because the rationality separates in order to be able to understand.

[1025] He who has reached the consummation, he has reached the capacity of such a freedom which he cannot practice while being narrowed by his body. That's why his end comes, in order him to exit to the consummate freedom (of affects) and for the glory of God to be shows as overwhelming the man's glory. Even the illness of the man who has reached the holiness, it shows that the glory in the mortal body is nothing in comparison to the glory of God promised to the man through the glory shown to him on earth.

happened as according to the will of God Who is above us in the care for our salvation. This is because it doesn't belong to the man to research the non-comprised realities, but the man must attribute the whole understanding and the whole good deed to Him Who has power, in order those to be done according to Hi will. May Lord Jesus Christ bestow you the trust and may Him get far from you all your doubt and all the evilness of the cunningness. I pray for you to be fortified into the Lord. Amen. Pray for me, so that I to find mercy and I to be saved from the liar knowledge and from insanity, into Christ Jesus our Lord Whom it is due the glory forever. Amen.

599. Bis. (V. 224). The same Abba John dwelled in first monastic cell that belonged to the Great Oldman, a monastic cell that was build to that one outside the monastery; and where the Great Oldman lived in withdrawal for 18 years, until his death foretold by him thus: "I will die seven days after Abba Serid". And for we begged him not to let us orphans, he told us: "If Abba Serid remained five more years, I too would remain five more years, but because God took him against my desire, I too am no longer staying". Then Abba Elian who were recently tonsured into monasticism and who, at Abba's recommendation was appointed hegumen of the monastery, he disturbed Abba Barsanuphius once more, begging him a lot and with many tears, to bestow Abba John to them, because Abba Barsanuphius were no longer sending letters. By knowing Abba John that into ghost, the next day when they came to beg again the Great Oldman, Abba John told Abba Elian: "Why do you disturb the Great Oldman for me? Do not be upset anymore, for I am no longer staying". Then, while we were in tears and we fell at his feet, Abba Elian told him: "bestow me at least two more weeks, so that I could ask you about monastery and about leading it". And Abba John being persuaded by the Holy Ghost Who was dwelling within him, he said: "Behold me, you will have me for those two more weeks". Abba Elian didn't stop during all that time to ask him about everything regarding the leading of the monastery. And after the two weeks passed, he commanded us not to unveil his death until that day was to come. And he called at him all the brothers and all of those who were into monastery, he embraces each of them, and he let them go. Then he surrendered himself to the Holy Ghost, in peace.

600. A brother asked the Great Oldman, Abba Barsanuphius, saying: "I do not know how have I come across the books of Origen and Didymus and the "Gnostic Heads" of Evagrius and of his disciples. And they say that the people's souls didn't appear together with the people's bodies, but the souls existed before as clean minds, namely non-embodied. Likewise, the angels too were clean minds, as the devils too. And the people, because of their mistake, they have been condemned to live into this body. And the angels by preserving themselves they reached to be angels. And they tell several other things like these. They also say that the future punishment will come to an end, and the people and the angels and the devils will come back to the state of clean mings, as they were before. They call this "restoration" (apocatastasis).

Because my soul has fallen into doubt and I am tormented, I pray you, Master, teach me if those are true or not; teach me the truth, so that I to keep this truth and I not to get lost. Actually, none of these is told in the godlike Scripture. But even Origen himself told in his explanation given to the "Epistle towards Titus", that isn't a teaching of the Apostles neither of the Church that the soul is older than the body, and he called heretic him who says that. And even Evagrius confesses in his "Gnostic Heads" that nobody heralded that neither the Ghost instilled those to somebody. Lo what Evagrius says in the head no. 64 of the second hundred of "Gnostic Heads": "And about the first ones nobody has let us know. About the second ones explained him from Horeb (Moses)"[1026]. And in the head no. 69 of the same [1026] This work of Evagrius was published in Syriac language and with a German translation, by W. Frankenberg, Evagrius Politicus, Berling, 1912. Frankenberg tells us in the Preface: "In his thinking that was totally depending on Origen and on Origen's school, Evagrius gives to dogmatic reflections of Origen a note of practical ascesis and of monastic mystique, that was very important during the following time, even for the Church who erased the name but not also the influence of Evagrius" (pg. 1). The text of Evagrius is accompanied by the commentary done by Toman of Marga (Batai) from the Century IX, published by Frankenberg in Syriac and in German translation.

Actually, Evagrius told in the head no. 64 that in the revelation of the Holy Ghost "isn't said anything about the mode of the coming to existence of the rational beings", so that it is affirmed their existence from eternity. And in the head no. 62 Evagrius said: "When the minds of the saints will receive their sight (theoria), then the thickness of their body will be removed" (according to Regnault, the first text is given according to Patr. Orient, 28, p. 87, hundred, he told that "The holy Ghost didn't tell us the prime difference of the spiritual beings, neither the first essence of the bodies". The fact that there is no apocatastasis but there is endless punishment, it was told us by Lord Jesus Himself in the Gospel, by saying: "They will go to the eternal damnation" (Mt. 27: 46), and: "Their worm won't die, neither their fire will be quenched" (Mt. 9: 48). So, Mater, where they get this out from, while neither the Apostles taught us that, nor the Holy Ghost explained us that? How could they confess that against the Gospels? Have mercy on me, Father, and explain me what these teachings are?

Answer: Brother, woe to us because of what misfortune our nation has fallen into! Where have we reached at and what do we occupy ourselves with? What are we striving to an what are we reckoning? We have left the straight ways and we want to walk on the meandrous ways. It is being fulfilled with us the word of the Scripture: "Woe to them who leave the straight ways and they walk on meandrous ways" (Sir[1027]. 2: 16). Verily, brother, I have stopped crying for me in order I to cry for you because of where have you fallen into. I have left my crying for my sins and I am crying for you, my child. The heavens tremble because of seeing the people's spying. The earth is shaken because of seeing the people wanting to examine the non-comprisable things. These are dogmas of the Hellenes[1028]. These

[1027] In the KJB this book, called The Wisdom of Joshua the Son of Sirach (The Ecclesiastes) is not present, but it is given in the ROB. The interested reader can find this book in an English translation on www.academia.edu, together with the other thirteen books not given in the KJB, under the title: Bible Missing Texts. (E. l. t.'s n.)

[1028] The Origenistic and Evagrius' theories are actually the pantheism of the Hellene philosophy dressed up in Christian words: God Who the pure minds (the spirits) fall off from, He is not an infinite God, once the spirits can become bored while contemplating God; such a God isn't a Person-like God, once they do not think that God is capable of being a partner for an endless love. Such a God would be an essence that wouldn't be but the object of a finite contemplation, so that God Himself would be finite as such. Such a God would be an eternal but finite nature, emanating finite minds from eternity, and having from eternity finite mind in His finite possibilities, finite minds which get bored by their finite contemplation, due to the contemplated subject and to the subjects contemplating Him. (…) And a Spirit capable only of a finite contemplation, He won't actually be a Subject. The finite essence and the spirit contemplating it are both submitted to a limited law of the repetition. It that was the case, neither that what we call God wouldn't be a Person-like and free Subject, nor the mind that contemplated would be so. They would be of the same essence and locked up within some ones are vain frivolous speaking of the people, who imagine that there is something in those. These ones are words of the lazy people. These ones are contrivances or the straying, for he says: "Saying that they are wisemen they have gone insane" (Rom. 1: 22). And if you want to learn, you will take heed at what our Lord and Luminous Light and Emperor Jesus Christ says[1029]; out of their fruits you will know them" (Mt. 7: 16). So, what sort of fruits do they bring forth? The haughtiness, the despise, the corruption, the indifference, the offense, the estrangement from the law, of better said from the Give of the law Who is God[1030]; they are dwelling place of the devils and of their master, the devil. Such teachings do not bring towards the light on him who believes them, but their lead him to darkness. These teachings do not urge us to the fear of God[1031], but these teaching rather lead to advance rather to the devil. These teaching do not get somebody out of marsh, but they rather sunk everybody into the marsh. These ones are the tares sown by the devil in the field of the Master. These teachings are thorns sprouted out in the land cursed by Master God (after the falling of the people). All these teachings are darkness, all of them are straying, all of them are estrangement from God. Run away from them, brother, in order they word not to get strengthened within your heart. These teachings dry the tears out, they bling the heart out, and, simply, the lose the people who take heed at them[1032]. Do not remain in those teachings, dop not cogitate at them, for laws of the repetition. Consequently, those minds fall into bodies which they will not longer contemplate the essence within, because of being they desiring something contrary, but then the desire for contemplations comes to them again, and this repetition would continue eternally. This is the eternal monotonous repetition of the nature.

[1029] Jesus if the Person-like Light, by excellence; Hs is the eternal spring of the light. Consequently, He cannot be exhausted by any contemplation. Likewise, as Emperor by excellence, He is superior to any law, He is not partaker on the same plan as we are, and He is not a non-free nature.

[1030] The haughty, the corrupted, the helpless, the lazy, by reckoning that they can reach and know everything that one can know, but without deeds of love, they actually remain into a fatal and eternal spiritual poverty, because of not striving to consummate themselves an all plans, including on the plan of their body.

[1031] These if because of remaining those within finite, in this world as ultimate essence, because of not being in connection with God Who is above any law, namely in connection with God Who is the Giver of the laws.

[1032] The haughtiness, the reckoning that you can now by comfortable contemplation everything which one can know, for you are of the same essence with the whole, it will dry your tears up so that you can no longer cry for an admitted mistake of yours, in front of the Master Who is infinite in power and Who has an infinite love.

they are full of bitterness and their final fruit will be your death. And regarding the knowledge of the future things, do not go astray. That what you sow here, you will reap there. After the end of the life from here nobody will advance anymore[1033], and God doesn't get exhausted from creating the man and his soul in the same time[1034]. Regarding the heavenly groups, the godlike Scripture shouts up the mouth of every man, by telling us that: "He said and it was done, he commanded and it was built, he established them for eternity and forever and ever" (Ps. 148: 5-6[1035]). And the things made permanent by God won't change[1036]. This is for, according to the Scripture, there is no

[1033] The Origenistic theory affirms that here within body you cannot really achieve any progress in knowing God. You will achieve that progress only when no longer being into body. But the Christian teaching affirms that that what you haven't sown here you won't reap there beyond. If you haven't been fighting here for good and for knowing God, here within body, you won't have the consummation there beyond. The life from here isn't vain, it isn't a simple punishment. Through body we can make efforts for good, and for knowing our relationship with God. Through body we know the humbleness, the value of enduring the hardships, and the cross.

But in the Origenistic theory the mind cannot progress endlessly neither after getting separated from the body, because of reaching again a state of boredom, of that what the mind knows, so that the mind desires again to leave from there by descending again into a new falling.

[1034] It is not too tiring to God to create in the same time the whole man: with body and with soul. The Origenistic cannot see a necessary unity between soul and body. The Origenism estranged too much the soul from the body. The man wasn't reckoned as a whole. The man's soul didn't have the destination of transfiguring the body, and it left the body into the marsh of the passions; or it reckoned that the body can escape from that marsh but not through a positive transfiguration, but through the violent liberation from that what is characteristic to the body (castration of Origen). And a real progress of the soul into cleanness, through the transfiguration of the body, it wasn't reckoned as possible by Origen. The Origenistic contemplation is a simple theory, as the subtlety of the devils is, skillful in nuancedly expressing the perverse complexity that doesn't reach to the new horizons of the spiritualized life, because of not transfiguring anything. The dualistic separation between soul and body have been manifested in the western painting, or in the Origenistic iconoclasm. Only the Orthodox icon bears witness about the body's "transfiguration". The Orthodox ascesis is something else than the destructive-of-body ascesis of the Origenism, because of being an ascesis that transfigures the body.

[1035] In KJB we have: Ps. 148: 5-6: "Let them praise the name of the Lord: for he commanded, and they were created. // He hath also stablished them for ever and ever: he hath made a decree which shall not pass."; in ROB we have: Ps. 148: 5-6: "Let them praise the name of the Lord, for He said and they were made, and He commanded and they were built. // You placed them for eternity and for ever and ever; He set them law and they won't transgress it." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[1036] The Origenism affirms that all the spirits were equal and as they fell, they descended on diverse levels: some of them on an angelic level, other on the human level, and others on the devilish level. But the Scripture tells us that the angels were created as angels and they remained so. God created steadfast beings who do not change.

change at God (Mat. 3: 6)[1037]. Where did you find out that the striving of this angel leads him to a progress[1038]? Brother, if you want to be saved, you won't throw yourself into these teachings. Otherwise, I testify you in front of God that you will fall into the precipice of the devil[1039] and in the ultimate death. Part your self with these teachings and step on the trace of the Fathers. Earn your humbleness and your obedience and your crying and your ascesis and your poverty and the being unnoticed by others, and all the other good things written in the "Words" and in the "Lived of the Fathers". Bring fort fruits worthy of repentance, and do not look at me because I speak without doing. But pray for me so that I to come somewhen to the knowledge of the truth, to the glory of the Holy trinity, now and forever. Amen.

601. The same brother asked the same question to the other Oldman: Abba John.

Answer: "This wisdom is not from above but it is bodily and devilish" (Jas. 3: 16). This teaching is from the devil. This teaching brings them who adopt it to the eternal torments. He who tarries in it he will become a heretic. He who believes it, he will have deviated from the truth. He who attaches himself to it he will be stranger to God. The workers of Chrit didn't teach these things. They who receive the word of the truth they won't receive these things. Get yourself quickly far from those, brother. Do not burn your heart into the fire of the devil. Do not sow in your field brambles instead of wheat, in order you not to take death instead of life. And, briefly: Do not receive the devil instead of Christ. Do not tarry into these things ands you will [1037] If the realities created by God got transformed, that means that God Himself would get transformed. But everything changes only in nature. The nature is submitted to a law of the evolution. That's why the forms occurred in nature they get changed. But at God there is no change. This is for God cannot advance to a higher consummation, neither can God decrease in His consummation. By and large, the person can progress infinitely, without getting transformed.

[1038] It is here being denied a change, or a progress, that would change somehow the degree of the angels' essence, and it is not denied a possible of the angels to progress in knowing God. Such a progress can take place within man too, and it is reflected in the man's body's "transfiguration", and not in the body's melting down or transformation.

be saved as Lot from Sodom, through the prayers of the saints. Amen.

602. The question of the same one: So, must we not read the writings of Evagrius?

The answer of John: We do not accept such teachings. Read from among his writings, if you wish, those which h are beneficial to the soul, according to the parables from the Gospel, about the net in which it is written that "the good things he placed them in vessels, and the bad things he threw outside" (Mt. 13: 38). Do the same.

603. The same brother after asking those questions was restless in himself by thinking and by saying: "And because some of the Fathers accept these teachings, should we still reckon them as good monks who take heed at themselves?". And after several days it happened that the same brother went to ask to the Great Oldman to pray for him. And then the Great Oldman talked to him about that thought from within his heart, so that the brother wondered and was amazed. And the answer of the Great Oldman was this:

Answer: Because you are telling me and you have thought: "Why some of the Fathers accept the gnostic heads of Evagrius? Well, they accept those by reckoning themselves as gnostic (knowers) through themselves and they haven't prayed to God in order they to find out if those heads are true or not. And God left them into their knowledge regarding those gnostic heads. But regardless, neither us nor you are allowed to research these things. But the time given to us is for us to examine our passions and for crying and for weeping.

604. The question of the same one and of other brothers towards the same Great Oldman: Father, they who cogitate these things about the preexistence of the souls, they do not avoid to talk about the Saint Gregory the Theologian that he too speaks about preexistence in his writings, as for instance in those "About Lord's Birth" and in that one "About the Easter Day". They paraphrase some of the sayings of that one according to their heart and the overlook the things said limpidly there about the creation of the first man, about his soul and body, according to the tradition of the Church. This is because lo what he says: "The Craftsman wanting to show the Word, by raising the man as a creature composed of two parts; of the unseen and of the seen natures. And by taking the body out of previously created matter, He sown within the body the breath from Himself, that what the Scripture knows as understanding soul and as image of God" (Gen. 1: 27; G.P.[1040] 37: 632 B). And in the following one can find out many other things said limpidly and doubtlessly by him about the man, as composed out of the previously created matter and out of the soul given by God. In these he prays much the man's nature and he calls the salvation of the body and of the soul as a gift worthy of God. He doesn't say as these ones say, that the soul has been dressed up into body through damnation, because of being punished for the previously committed sins. But also, in other diverse writings of his, he shows this purpose of his of keeping the dogma clean.

They boast with Saint Gregory too, the brother of Saint Basil, that he too spoke about preexistence, because they misinterpret some of his sayings. But that one fight limpidly and powerfully, in the chapter 300 of the writing "About the Creation of the Man" against this theory of the preexistence, and he topple it over, as the blessed David and those from around Saint John and Athanasius and all the other enlighteners and teachers of the Church did too (G.P. 44: 229 B).

Regarding the apocatastasis, it is true that the same Saint Gregory of Nyssa speaks limpidly about it, but not as these ones say that by ceasing the torments the man will be restored in that what the man was in the beginning, namely as pure mind. But he only says simply that the torments will cease and they will have an end[1041].

[1041] L. Regnault places between parentheses, in the French translation: G.P. 64: 110 E. But Saint Gregory of Nyssa speaks about apocatastasis only as about an eventuality. And only in his early writings (See the Romanian translation of some of his writings, in the collection Părinți și Scriitori Bisericești (Churchly Fathers and Writers), no. 29. The writings from this volume were translated by Fr. D. Stăniloae, except The Life of Moses, revised after a translation done by Fr. I. Buga). The term of apocatastasis at Saint Gregory of Nyssa can mean also the restoration of the human nature in the state liberated from the consequences of the ancestral sin, namely: the mortality, the hunger, the thirst, the sickness etc. as the human being was before Adam's falling. This state if brought back through the resurrection of the

Tell me, therefore, Father, why such a man doesn't speak rightly, as it is due to a holy man, who have been found worthy of speaking out of the power of the Holy Ghost? Actually, also about ourselves, some of the Fathers and teachers speak by not calling this one as sensitive but thought (spiritual). And regarding other things from the Scripture one can see that sometimes these Fathers and teachers are in disaccord with one another. We pray you, Master, explain this to us, for us to be enlightened by you and so us to extoll God and us not to doubt our holy Fathers.

The answer of Barsanuphius: "Blessed is God and the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ Who has blessed us with the whole our spiritual blessing into the heavenly ones into Christ. Amen." (Eph. 1: 3).

Brothers, it is the right time for us to say as the Apostle did: "I have made myself insane, but you have forced me to" (2 Cor. 12: 11). I actually force myself for you, in order I to researching and to speak things over my measure, which are not quite beneficial to the soul, or they even wound the soul. We have left Paul the Apostle who says: "Let be removed from you all the anger and the wrath and the blasphemy, together with all the evilness" (Eph. 4: 31). And I am adding here: "Together with the covetousness of the belly, with the debauchery, with the love for silver, and all the other passions, for which we mut weep and cry ceaselessly, so that through the multitude of our tears the defilement of our passions to be washed away. And us to become clean out of defiled, righteous out of sinners, alive out of dead; and us to think that even for a sole word we are going to be held accountable (Mt. 12: 36). This is for it was said: "You will reward each one according to his deeds (Ps. 61: 11[1042]). And again: "We will have to present ourselves in front of the judgment chair of Christ, bringing each of us the things he did through body, either good of bad" (2 Cor. 2: 10). We must body, though the resurrection will elevate the man on a higher state. Anyway, the apocatastasis at Saint Gregory isn't the bringing back of the man, as embodied soul, to the state of a pure mind, without body, as Origen said, according to whom the man bearing a body was constituted only through a falling of the previously pure mind.

[1042] In KJB we have: Ps. 62: 11-12: "God hath spoken once; twice have I heard this; that power belongeth unto God. // Also unto thee, O Lord, belongeth mercy: for thou renderest to every man according to his work."; in ROB we have" Ps. 61: 11: "Once spoke God, and I heard these two things: that the power belong to God and Yours, Lord, it is the mercy; that You will rewards to each one according to his deeds." (E. l. t.'s n.)

strive ourselves to do these things with our Fathers too strived themselves with, our Fathers who lived around Abba Poemen, and those who lived after that. Let's strive not to be noticed, not to praise ourselves, and in reckoning ourselves as dust and ashes. Opposite to this it is the endeavor to reckon ourselves as knowers (gnostics[1043]), and to progress in our pride, and to cherish ourselves and to praise ourselves for anything, and to get far from the humble cogitation. Forgive me! Haven't you reach into these because of being you unworking? If it is so, descend to the marketplace where the Master will come and take you to work His vineyard. If there was within your heart the thorn regarding that fearsome answer, you wouldn't think at these things[1044]. "The prophet forgot about eating his bread" (Ps. 101: 5[1045]), and we live carelessly and with indifference and out of those we fall into other things. God doesn't ask from us these things, but He asks us for: holiness, cleanness, silence, and humbleness[1046].

So, for I haven't wanted to let you into such thoughts, and on the other hand because it was a torment to me to pray God to enlighten me in this regard[1047], because of being I caught between these two needs, I have better chosen this torment in order I to get you rid of this torment, by recalling him who said: "Bear your burdens to one another" (Gal. 6: 2). So, listen to what God gave me to know three days before you writing me your question. All the Fathers, the saints and the [1043] The entire mentioned writing of Evagrius sees the salvation only as "knowledge" (gnosis), for the spirit fallen into body through punishment has not the mission of transfiguring the body or the matter. Even when he speaks about the cleaning of passions and about love, he reckons those only as means for reaching the direct knowledge of God without a mediation of the body.

[1044] If one will get appeased by the fact that the evils done by him on earth aren't eternal, he will no longer fight those evil and his indifference.

[1045] In KJB we have: Ps. 102: 4: "My heart is smitten, and withered like grass; so that I forget to eat my bread."; in ROB we have: Ps. 101: 5: Wounded is my heart and it has withered as the grass; for I have forgotten to eat my bread." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[1046] These ones are the paths towards the endless consummation into God, ways which cannot be practiced without a body. The things opposite to those will lock us up into the finite monotony, by conceiving the salvation as a simple exterior forgiveness. Everything becomes, in the Origenistic-Evagrius' conception an eternal superficiality.

[1047] Barsanuphius reckons that he mustn't occupy himself with such theoretical questions, but he must take care of his cleanness of passions. Even asking God for being enlightened regarding such questions was a torment for him, because by asking God for that he feels that he somehow upsets God, by showing himself more preoccupied with the theory than with the practice of cleaning himself up.

righteous and the true servants of God, who were well-pleasant to God, let them pray for me! But you must not reckon that, being they saints, they were truly able to comprise the deeps of God. This is for the Apostle says: "We know and prophesize partially" (1 Cor. 13: 9), and again: "One is given by the Ghost something, another is given something else, and to somebody else those things, but all of them are worked by One and the Same Ghost" (1 Cor. 12: 4-11). And the Apostle by knowing that the realities of God are non-comprisable, he shouted out saying: "Oh, the deep of the richness and of the wisdom and of the knowledge of God! How unsearched are His judgments and how unfollowed are His ways! This is because who knew the mind of the Lord? Or who has become His servant?" (Rom. 11: 33-34). So, by striving themselves to become teachers, or because of being forced by people to become teachers, they advanced very much become even superior to their teachers and they composed by being inspired from above, new teachings. But they preserved, in the same time, the teaching of their teachers, namely also teachings which were right. And after that, by advancing and by reaching to be spiritual teachers, they didn't' ask God regarding their teachers to show them if their teachings were told through the Holy Ghost. But by reckoning themselves as wise and knowers, they didn't discern among the things they argued. And so, their teachings have been mixed with the teaching of their teachers. And sometimes they spoke out of the teaching found by them at their teachers, while some other times they spoke out of the understanding of their mind. And so, those words were written in their name. This is because, by taking one from others and by progressing and by improving the taken things, they spoke from the Holy Ghost that what they were taught by Him. But they also spoke out of the teachings received by them from their teachers, and they didn't differentiate their words from those ones' words, or they didn't think that they must take assurance from God through asking and prayer, whether their sayings were true or not. And thus, the teachings got mixed. And because they were the ones uttering those teachings, those teachings signed by them[1048].

[1048] Barsanuphius tries on this way to explain some of the remnants of the theories issued by Origen in the writings of Saint Gregory of Nyssa and of Saint Gregory of Nazianzus. They respected Origen as they did to any teacher whom they learnt many things form. Due to the things learnt by them from that one, they were able to advance in their cogitation and so they were able to correct most of his teachings, by being they guided to do that especially by the

When you hear someone of them that he heard from the Holy Ghost that what he speaks, that is an assurance which we must believe it. But when he utters those words[1049], you don't hear him saying that. This is because of that not being out of the inspiration from the Holy Ghost, but out of the teaching of his teachers from before. And out of respect for their knowledge and wisdom, he didn't ask God about those whether those were true or not.

Lo, you have heard the entire my stupidity. Get appeased now, occupy yourselves with God and stop the vain-speaking. Take heed at your passions, which you will be held accountable for, on the day of the judgment; while about these things you won't be held accountable of that what you didn't know of you didn't hear about. So, cry and weep. Walk on the traces of your Fathers, Poemen and those following him, and "run and grab" (1 Cor. 9: 34), into Christ Jesus our Lord Whom it is due the glory, forever. Amen.

605. Question: Father, you truly are guide to the blind and light into Christ to the darkened ones. And through you the truth has been shown to us. Actually, we find out in the "Books of the Ole Men" that there was a certain Great Oldman who, in his simplicity, he was saying that the bread which we are imparted with, it is not the actual body of Christ but it is the antitype (the image) of Him. And until he didn't' pray, firstly, to God, he didn't know the truth (Paterikon, Daniel 7). And the Old one, great too, he reckoned that Christ is Melchisedec, and when he prayer to God the truth was unveiled to him (Daniel 9).

And forgive me, Father, for the lord, because of daring I to ask you things above my measure. This is for our God

Holy Ghost. But small remnants form the wrong multitude of the Origenistic teachings persisted to them too. This was because they didn't' always pray God to tell them whether those small remnants were true or not. In essence, Barsanuphius operated a distinction between the own teachings of Saint Gregory of Nazianzus and of Saint Gregory of Nyssa, and words taken from Origen, which he reckons as impropriated by the two saints from Origen. He declared that the right things said by those that they had those things from the Holy Ghost. But he didn't say that about the wrong thins remaining from Origen. Anyway, Barsanuphius taught, clearly, the eternity of the torment (Answer 607).

Saint Maximos was to show in his "Ambigua" that even in those remnants seeming Origenistic teachings at Saint Gregory of Nazianzus, they are rather influences of language, inconsistently maintained from Origen, rather than content remnants.

enlightened to us, through your holiness, the non-strayed way of the truth, so I pray you to fully enlighten us int this regard too, for our heart and mind to be cleaned up of the spying on those things. Why did God allow such men to go astray, even if they didn't' pray to Him? Why didn't the truth be show to them in grace, in order the later readers not to be harmed? This is because, even if they weren't impeded by the right-faith or by virtue, but those weak and lazy as I am by accepting the things written by those Fathers as worthy of faith, we are easily harmed by those, because of not knowing that what you have said, neither the fact that not even the saints were able to understand all the mysteries; and the fact that those Fathers didn't pray to god for Him to let them know whether the things written by them were true or not. Explain to me, therefore, you merciful Father, this too, by being you lenient to my weakness.

Answer: Son, not God was the One Who allowed these men to go astray. This is because him who allows somebody to go astray is him who have been asked about the straight way but he doesn't tell the true. But they didn't ask God about that in order they to receive from God the truth[1050]. And if you ask why God didn't impede those by grace (from mistaking) so that that to be beneficial to those who would read those later on, you can ask this about any sinner: "Why God, despite He knowing that the sinner will sin and so the sinner will be example to many, why God didn't impede the sinner by grace so that many not to be harmed too? But by that the people's life would be submitted to a forcing. And why would impede God from saving thus all the people? Aren't there into Scripture too words which are offensive to them who are untaught and non-knower of their spiritual meaning? This forces us to ask: Why God didn't' show [1050] We are noticing here how much Barsanuphius made the finding out of the truth in uncertain things, as depending on the prayer to God. Only in the responsibility lived in front of God through prayer, God understood as infinite Person, the man will me shunned from the haughtiness that makes him affirming or taking wrong affirmations as true. Right in the prayer is manifested the faith into the Christian and Person-like, and loving-of-people God. Right the prayer shuns you from falling into mistakes having pantheistic implications, as the Origenistic ones were too, as result of rather philosophical-theoretical preoccupations than of the care for salvation. The pantheistic philosophies are wrong systems because their authors do not build them up out of responsibility in front of God as live in prayer. And, actually, the supreme reality, namely the true reality, it cannot be an impersonal essence manipulated by the, man's thinking, but it is the Person-like-God Who is his fullness like Person He must be Trinitarian and loving.

clearly the spiritual meaning of the Scripture, in order the people not to be harmed, but God let to the saints from diverse times the effort to interpret the asked questions? That's why there are teachers and interpreters (exegetes), as the Apostle says (1 Cor. 13: 28)[1051]. So, do not go yourself astray regarding the men whom you have asked me about. This is for if they asked those form God, they would receive those. This is for he says: "Everyone who asks for, he will receive, and he who searches for, he will find" (Mt. 7: 8)[1052]. God unveiled the way of life through prophets and apostles, but in such a manner that they spoke individually. That's why there wasn't only one to speak about it. And that what one left (untold), another said it by the will of God.

So did God with the saints after that too. And that what some of the saints say without sufficient clarity, they from later told it differently, for all the time to be God extolled through His saints. This is for The Same One is the God of the first one and of the ones following after those. To Him is due the glory forever. Amen.

606. Question of the same one towards the same one: Forgive me, Father, you loving-of-people one, for the lord, for I am very tormented. This is because of reading I some things in a book of Dogmatics and I see my heart disturbed. And I avoid talking about that. But I neither am able to keep mu silence because of my thoughts. Why do you command me to do, Holy Father?

[1051] The prayer as means for finding out the truth it doesn't exclude the effort of the research. And this toiling brings also an increase in the spiritual understand of the man, and that understanding, at its turn, it will urge the man to prayer and it will open the man to the loving light coming from God through it. So, the discovery of the true and deeper meanings of the Scripture it depends on the man's growth through his progress in time, but it also depends also on the succession of generations of researchers who unveiled new questions to their descendants and they offered their descendants the possibility to find new and truer meanings of the Scripture through the answers given to those questions. That's why, some mistakes which we found at the old teachers, they were due also to the fact that they hurried themselves to give answers to questions when the time wasn't ripe for true answers.

[1052] Here, the asking from God and the mind's searching are intertwined. The searching is too, one could say, a prayer, when it is done with the responsibility in front of God; the prayer too is a searching. This is for through both of them the man deepens himself into the spring of all realities Who is God. But it is necessary for the man to understand his search as his prayer and his prayer as effort for getting closer, through understanding, to the godlike and mysterious spring of all the realities.

Answer: Because the devil wants to throw you in a useless occupation, tell me what you wish. And may God not give him room.

607. The question of the same one towards the same one: "Tel me about the resurrection of the bodies of the saints if they rise in the present boy which we are not in, and which has vessels and nerves, or they will rise in an aerial and round body[1053]. This is for some people say that the Lord's body too, it will be like that at the future resurrection, because they do not think at the fact that He resurrected from dead into our body, which He took it out of the Holy Birth-Giver of God and Forever Virgin May, for our salvation. They say and hold that what the Apostle says too: "Whi will transform the body of our humbleness to be alike the body of His glory" (Phil. 3: 21). And they again found themselves on the fact that the Apostle said: "body and blood won't inherit the Kingdom of God" (1 Cor. 15: 50). So, they say, this body won't enter the eternity, because of subsisting on food and in the future age there won't eat of drink. And they also say that the Apostle says about our Lord Jesus Christ that "After all the things will have been submitted to Him, for Him to be God in all the things" (1 Cor. 15: 28). And they also invoke that what is said in Ecclesiastes that "it was in the ages which were before us" (Eccl. 1: 10), in order they to ague, on this ground, the "preexistence". Likewise, by bringing that what is said into the Gospel that "I won't exit from there until you will pay even the last penny" (Mt. 5: 26), and so they hold that we will have an end of the torments. So, clarify me this, Master, in order the enemy

[1053] This too was a teaching influenced by Origen. An aerial and round body will not longer be a body composed or organs which are prolonged within the feelings having their roots into the soul. Such a body would be somehow close in itself. This is the same conception about the absence of an intimate connection between soul and body, as between two parts of a unity. The Origenism refers to the state form after resurrection, which the body won't preserve in its organs full of spiritual feelings, which start to be like that, to some of the saints, even while on earth. He doesn't affirm the absence of the body without organ only in the provisory state form before resurrection, when the soul actually doesn't have a body, but the feeling manifested through the body's organs have remained rooted into the soul. To Origenism there isn't actually a properly-said resurrection of the bodies as a full reactivation in a spiritualized manner of the feelings into the resurrected body. The bodies' thinning up to become an aerial form it is conceived as a physical transformation and not as an overwhelming of the body through spiritualized feelings shown in "transfiguration".

not to stray me away, and I to fall, because of my nescience, in all the enemy's traps. This is for a wobble to all direction because of my stupidity, for I haven't guarded your holy words for refraining myself from these things form the beginning, because of they containing a great danger for the soul. And pray for me, you the good Father, in order I to watch from now on, and I to take care of my crying for my sins. And forgive me because I have dared to ask you about these things. But as one who knows everything, you allowed me to tell you about those things[1054].

Answer: Brother, I wrote you before that the devil sown within you an occupation not required by the body. This is because the body had by you it requires you to cry and to weep for your sins. Still, in order I not to let you into these thoughts, if you want to find out about resurrection and if you believe the prophets, God showed us what the resurrection would be like, through Ezekiel the Prophet. There were gathered bone to bone, joint to joint, veins and skin and nerves and so the dead ones resurrected (Ezek. 37: 7-8). And the Apostle knowing that we will resurrect into bodies, he taught us saying: "This is because this corruptible ought to be dresses up into incorruptibility and this mortal to be dressed up into immortality" (1 Cor. 15: 53). Do not go astray! The bodies will resurrect with bones and with nerves and with pores. And so will the bodies be forever. But the bodies will be more luminous and more glorious, according to the word of the Lord Who says: "Then" (Mt. 13: 43)[1055]. He [1054] Here are being exposed the main Origenistic errors. The Origenistic logics deduced out of the fact that the bodies weren't united in the beginning with the souls, that the soul neither will remain united with the bodies forever. The souls existed from ever and they will continue existing for eternity, according to this theory. So, the souls participate to the divine eternity. And the soul won't endure an eternal punishment because the punishment is related to the body. The soul as pure mind doesn't feel pain (what a gross understanding the pain!). The mission of the soul doesn't consist of growing up into consummation, a consummation that to be shown into the body's transfiguration as well, but it consists of motionlessly contemplating God. But a motionless contemplation is almost something lacking the life, it is some sort of confounding into the fundamental essence. But them how does the motion start out of that state of unity with the contemplated essence? Here one must resort to a law interior to the essence, which gathers into itself, and which unfold itself endlessly. This means an evolutionist and involutional pantheism. Origen is a precursor to Hegel.

will add glory to the bodies. For instance, when the ordinary soldier[1056] when he reached near to the emperor and the emperor makes him general and he fills him up with glory, won't him be the same? Has his body been transformed? Or, as a deacon who is ordained suddenly into bishop, he will immediately be full of glory, so it is here too. Or, as there are now too people who reach to bear God within their bodies. This is for, how did Moses see the Lord? Or before Moses, Abraham and Jacob, and then Stephan in the deeds of the Apostles? Were they without bodies? So, they will be at resurrection in the same bodies, but their bodies will be incorruptible, immortal, and more glorious. That's why the Apostle says about the human body: "it is sown into dishonor, it rises into glory; it is sown souly body, it rises spiritual body" (1 Cor. 15: 43). He teel these things for many of the saints are not shown to the people, but they rather are lacking any honor in the people's eyes. Sand when they will receive there the glory, like an ordination, it will be shown to everybody as spiritual[1057]. That's why we say: "It is sown souly body, it rises spiritual body", a glorified body, and everyone will wonder about that. And when the Apostle says: "Who will transform the body of our humbleness in order our body to be alike to the body of His glory", it means that He makes the bodied luminous as His body is, as Apostle John said: "When He will show Himself, we will be like Him" (1 Jn. 3: 2). This is for the Son of God is the light, and these ones being together with Him "sons of God", the righteous ones will shine like the son in the Kingdom fo Heavens, and the too will be sons of the light (Eph. 5: 8; Exod. 5: 5)[1058]. And this is the meaning of: "He transforms them".

the loving God. The matter's rationality makes possible this transparence of its, for the consummate soul of whose rationality elevated into God it depends the kindness too.

[1056] απλός στρατιώτης, the ordinary soldier, as the villager is. Or it may be about the mercenaries recruited into the Byzantine army from pagans.

[1057] The light of the face, the glory of the body, it is the spiritual state reflected in the face, penetrated into the body, and shown as through a display.

[1058] God made His Son man, in order to make us too as His sons. But if God is luminous light, by becoming us sons of God, by that we become also sons of light. And that will be shown not only in our soul, but in our body too. This is for the Son of God, by embodying Himself, He has made Himself our brother not only according to the soul, but according to the body as well. The godlike light is spiritual, it is understanding, and it is supreme kindness. This is shown into us too, when we become the brothers of Christ. And it will be reflected into body too.

Regarding the saying: “When all the things will have been told to Him, and the Son Himself will submit Himself to Him Who submitted everything to the Son”, you should find out, in the first place, whom these things were written to? To the Corinthians. And at theme there were still flourishing the Hellenism. And some of the Hellenes had this custom: When the son of a king of theirs reached the maturity, he rose and killed hi father. And let, by receiving the preaching of the Apostle, they to cogitate the same thing about the Son of God, he banished away from them this sharing of custom, by telling them: “When all the things will have been submitted to Him, then He will obey Him Who submitted to Him all the things”[1059]. So, when His enemies will be brought, tied, to His feet - by this one understands the devil and his powers and those who follow the devil’s wills. That’s why the Apostle said: “we do not see yet all the things submitted to Him” (Hebr. 2: 8). Until when? Until the angels of God will bring the disobedient to God and the Father Who said: “Sit on My right hand until I will lay your enemies as footstool to Your feet”. These enemies will be brought by the Father, through angels, to the judgment of the Son[1060]. This is for our Lord said: “The Father doesn’t judge anybody, but He has given all the judgment to the Son” (Jn. 5: 22)

And in order you to understand how (the Son) surrenders the Kingdom of God and the Father, listen to these: The embodied Son of God came to call and to sanctify through His Blood “a holy nation, a chosen people who craves for good deeds, an imperial priesthood” (1 Pt. 2: 9; Tit. 2: 14). So, your must understand: “After His enemies will be submitted to Him [1059] Barsanuphius shows by this too, the love reigning among the Persons of the Holy Trinity. Sadly, among people and even within the same family the love doesn’t always reign thus way. By this explanation Barsanuphius removes a conclusion implied into Origenism: that not only the human persons, but the godlike Persons too, they will merge, as God Himself will merge with all the realities, being thus put an end to the individual shapes appeared out of essence. Actually, it is about a presence of the will of the Father in all the realities, through the work of the Son Who removed form people that will that was opposing to the Father. This is for the Son was the first to submit Himself like man, fully, to the Father, on the cross. But after that, He will work in order to submit everyone, as on Himself, to the Father, but this work proceeds from the Father. That’s why it is not only the Son submitting the enemies to the Father, but also the Father submits them to the Son. Each of them fills up the believers with the love for another. But the devil and his followers will be submitted in another manner: by the fact that they will no longer have any power over those who have been gained by Christ on behalf of the Father and by the Father on behalf of the Son.

and He will judge them, at His turn He will submit, as example of obedience, the Kingdom gained by the holy people, to God and the Father, saying: "Behold, I and the children given to Me by You" (Isa. 8: 18; Hebr. 2: 12). Notice the equality: The Father gave all the judgment to the Son and the Son gave to the Father all the people called by Him. And thus it is fulfilled the word: "When all the things will have been submitted to Him, then the Sn too will submit Himself to Him Who has submitted all the things to the Son".

Regarding the ages which the Ecclesiastes speaks about, you must know that the time of a man it is his century. That's why he didn't say: "that he was in the ages from before this world", but "in the ages from before us" (of this world). And if you want to see that the untaught and the unbased corrupt the Scriptures and the misinterpret the Scriptures according to the devil's teachings, the Apostle says: "The food is for the belly and the belly is for the food; but God will abolish both these and those" (1 Cor. 6: 13). He speaks about the covetousness of the belly, about fearlessness, and about gorging. In this meaning he abolished the food and the belly for the saints. The Apostle s who said these things, by knowing that he said these things regarding the passions and that the passions have been abolished by the Lord at Himself, and at those alike Him, the Apostle said also: "Neither if we eat will we be condemned, nor if we do not eat will us justify ourselves" (1 Cor. 8: 8). This is the meaning of that word. And regarding the future age, God said that the people will be alike to the angels (Lk. 20: 36), neither eating nor drinking, nor lusting for (Num. 24: 30). This is for nothing is impossible to God (Gen. 18: 14). God proved this through Moses who spent thus forty days and forty nights. He Who did this (with Moses), He can make the man live like this for all the years of his century[1061]. And if somebody is delirious and says that he (Moses) ate later on, as also the Savior did after His resurrection, he did that in order to give us a partial proof about the resurrection to the future life[1062]. That's why [1061] If God can help the man to survive without food during the man's earthly existence, all the more can God do that in the man's future life. It is not about a power exercised by God over man from outside, but it is about God being within man. On the measure of the man's consummation, the man will no longer need food.

[1062] In the Volos Edition, cited page, at footnote, it is said that the present objection refers to Christ Who ate after resurrection as well. But Christ did that in order to show that his body was seen and it wasn't an apparent image. But He didn't eat because he needed that. Just by ate, at their turn, also they who were resurrected form dead, as proof for they were resurrected. He showed us also through Apostles that there will be a resurrection[1063]. Even though those resurrected people died later on, we must not reject the faith into resurrection. In addition to that he says: "Not only with bread will live the am, but with any word coming out of God's mouth" (Mt. 4: 4). What more will one be able to say regarding this, if he doesn't want to misinterpret this word or the words from the Scriptures. Regarding the word: "Body and blood won't inherit the Kingdom of God, neither the corruption will inherit the incorruptibility" (1 Cor. 15: 50), through body and blood he calls here the uncleanness and the evilness and the own wills.

But, do you want to know if, while still being into body, can people become spiritual? Listen to our Lord Who says to Nicodemus: "You must be reborn from above", and then He adds: "out of water and Ghost" (Jn. 3: 3-5). And those born out of Ghost, they are spiritual. And He says again: "They haven't been born out of blood, nor out of the will of the man, neither out of the will of the body, but out of God" (Jn. 1: 13). So, if they become spiritual while still being here, by being they born out of God, won't be God able to make them spiritual there too? And the word: "He won't get out from there until he will pay back even the last penny", He told that about the eternal torments. This is for, where could they pay back from? If a poor debtor is thrown into prison and the judge tell him that he won't get out until he will have paid the entire sum of money he owes, can one tall that that debtor will ever get out? No, one cannot. Do not go astray like a crazy man. Nobody advances there[1064]. And eating He gave us a proof about resurrection, namely about the continuation of the life after resurrection, even though that was an inadequate proof.

[1063] The resurrections committed by Apostles were too a proof about the possibility that a resurrection of the bodied will take place.

[1064] One could pay if in hell one could work for correcting himself. But that would mean one to do something for others. But working for them who are in heavens it is not necessary. And if they from heel could work for one another, the hell wouldn't be hell. And they would even have God within themselves because one cannot do anything good without God. Or, if those form hell were in a persevering repentance, they would be like some monks in a monastery. Actually, the hell is the petrifaction in a helplessness to ever become kind, after one has accustomed himself for the whole his live here on earth, to that state of evilness. Actually, the people form hell are no longer able to work one for another even in the provisory state form after resurrection. And this is not because they will no longer have a body, for the roots of the senses and of the active organs remain within the rationalities of the soul so that they can somehow express themselves to others, but because they got petrified in an egotism, in a spiritual helplessness for willing communication, or better said an impossibility of loving one will have anything from here, either good, or evil, or pleasant. So, leave these stupid frivolities and do not walk on the grace of the devils and of their teaching. This is because the devils grab you suddenly and they suddenly throw you down. Humble yourself in front of God, by crying for your sins and by weeping for your passions. Remember the Scripture that says: "And now Israel" (The Second Law 10: 12); and again: "And now I have started" (Ps. 76: 10[1065]). Take heed at yourself. May God forgive you. See what your heart leans towards at, by spying.

608. Question: Another brother asked the same Great Oldman, saying: Tell me, Father, if I see somebody doing something and I talk about that to somebody else, and I tell to myself that I do not condemn the doer, but we only talk about him, will that still be slander in my thought?

Answer: If there is in talking a passionate impulse, then it will be slander. But if the talking is free of passion, it won't be slander. You must tall only in order not to increase the evil.

609. Question: What does it mean: "With the stubborn one, you will turn yourself" (Ps. 17: 29[1066])?

Answer: The Lord said: "If someone smite you over your right cheek, you will turn your other cheek too" (Mt. 5: 39). So, you must turn yourself to the stubborn one.

610. Question: What does it mean: "Be wise like the snakes and innocent like the pigeons"? (Mt. 10: 16).

communication, because an unwilling communication of their enmity will still be possible to them.

[1065] In KJB we have" Ps. 77: 10: "And I said, This is my infirmity: but I will remember the years of the right hand of the most High."; in ROB we have" Ps. 76: 10: "And I said: Now I have started to understand; this is the change of the right hand of the All-High." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[1066] In KJB we have: Ps. 18: 29: "With the pure thou wilt shew thyself pure; and with the froward thou wilt shew thyself froward."; in ROB we have" Ps. 17: 29: "And with the chose one, you will be chosen; and with the stubborn one, You will be stubborn." (E. l. t.'s n.)

Answer: He who has a wisdom like the snake had regarding the evil, and he has also a innocence as the pigeon has regarding the good, ne won't allow him wisdom to become cunning, neither will he allow his innocence (simplicity) to become mindless.

611. Question: Who are they who do the evil willingly, and who are they who do the evil unwillingly?

Answer: They who do the evil willingly are those who surrender their will to evilness and they get sweeten by doing the evil; and they make friends with the evilness. These ones have peace with satan and they do not war him in their thoughts. And they who do the evil unwillingly, are them who have within their limbs a power that fights, according to the Apostle, against their mind (Rom. 7: 23), as a misty power or as a wave, but in their thoughts they do not dialogue with it, neither they get sweetened by it, nor they obey it, but they resist it, they work against it, they counterattack it, and they get angry with themselves. These ones are much better to God that those who surrender their free choice willingly to the evilness, and they get sweetened by it.

612. Question: What does it mean that what our Lord told to the Samaritan woman: "You have had five men ands he whom you have now is not your husband" (Jn. 4: 18)?

Answer: The word is limpid. According to an old law, all the women separated from their husbands by death, and who had no children, they could marry other five more men. But if one married after the fifth marriage, with a sixth man, that one would not be her husband, but she lives with him in fornication, the union with him being illegitimate. That is what happened to that woman too.

And if one wants to find out a more mysterious interpretation, the five legitimate men are the five natural senses: the sight, the smell, the hear, the taste, and the touch, which we know through all the things which we come in contact with. And the sixth sense is the faithlessness, which that woman united herself with, because of her nescience and contrary to nature. So, Christ told her: "Verily you said, for you had five husbands". This is for you had as husbands your five senses, which mastered you and which drove you according to their will. Namely, you have satiated your lusts which enter through the five natural senses. You have lost those because of the helplessness of your old body. And that one which you have it now, namely the faithlessness, it is not your husband, namely it doesn't master you in a natural manner, but it does that from outside.

613. And urge of the holy and Great Oldman Barsanuphius towards a beginner who got sick and who was unable to bear the upset caused him by his illness.

Answer: Brother, when the workers asked the master of the vineyard for a payment, they didn't brag themselves except with one thing: "We have endured the heat of the day and its trouble" (Mt. 20: 12). Let's endure, therefore, son, with thankfulness, the trouble, in order us to be plentifully imparted with the mercy of God, and let's not get discouraged and so to fall into the slavery to idleness. Remember, son, that "he who will endure to the end, he will be saved" (Mt. 10: 22). Son, there is also an illness towards temptation, and the temptation is towards rebuking, for "the non-tempted man is inexperienced" (Reseh. Agrapha, no. 90, pp. 130-132). And him who is tempted into dangers, he is proven like the gold in fire. And getting prove bring the man to hope, and "the hope won't get shamed" (Rom. 5: 4-5). So, do not allow the enemy to weaken your decision according to God and so the enemy to shake your faith into the Holy Trinity. Tell me, what has happened to you that you have become so drowsy? Remember what the Apostle says: "You haven't resisted yet all the way to the blood fighting the sin and you have forgotten that urge that speaks to you like to some sons: Son, do not get discouraged by the rebuking from the Lord, neither get weaken because of being reproached by Him. This is for him who is loved by God he will be rebuked and the Lord beats every man who received Him. If you endure the rebuking, God will be near to you like to some sons of His. This is for, who is that son whom his father doesn't rebuke? And if you are without the rebuking which all other have been made partakers to, you are stepsons and not sons" (Hebr. 12: 4-8).

If you endure the trouble with thankfulness, you will reach to be a son. And if you show yourself as drowsy, you will become a stepson[1067]. I prayer you, sons, I the Oldman pray you the young one; I who are old in monastic clothes, even if I haven't benefited anything of, I pray you who have recently been tonsured[1068]. And may this not be vain, Lord Jesus Christ! Take vigil, wake up from the drunkenness of the too heavy sleeping[1069]. Get up like Peter and the other Apostles, shouting out towards Christ Who is the Savior of everybody, with a loud voice: "Master, have mercy on us, because we are perishing" (Lk. 8: 24; Mt. 8: 25). And the Master is going to surely come to you and he will rebuke the winds and the sea and He will remove the storm form your ship, namely the blizzard from within your heart, and He will snatch you away from the bloody lion, and He will snatch away your pigeon for the belly of the dragon. He will defend you crop against the hails and He will defend you oil against the worms and your trees against the frost, in order they to bring their fruits forth at their time. And the seed of your earth will yield ripe fruits according to the word of the Lord, one a hundred, one sixty, and one thirty. Think, brother, that you endure for the name of God. The Apostle mentioned these troubles after he said that "nothing will separate us from the love of Christ: neither the trouble, not the tribulation, neither the hunger, nor the persecution, neither the lack of clothing, nor than danger, neither the sword" (Rom. 8: 35). And then, will we allow a small sickness to shake out mind off God? Let that not be! But strengthen yourself, son, and think at the help coming from God. This is because this is the first temptation. If you overcome this one, it will not longer [1067] God doesn't want to have except powerful sons, who show themselves above the hardships they endure, and stronger than the temptations. The strong God doesn't want to have as His sons some crying rugs. But they are strong in their patience and in their kindness.

The desire for seeing him saved, the pity for the perdition wanting for his young spiritual son, make the Oldman to use even the prayer in order to give to that sone strength and courage. So prays the strong one to the weak one. The Son of God descends to us so, crying for us. There is a continuous descent by the sacrifice He is bringing for us, through His state of sacrifice which He bestows Himself in, to us. This is the strength of him who is truly strong: the strength of the humbleness.

master you. But if you allow yourself to be defeated now, it will drive you to slavery. So, you must stay strong and endure it. This is for, if you stay strong, you will see which the mercy of God will be. And let you love be assured that I do not stop night and day from praying to God, for you to be saved, and God to guard us all against the cunning one. And my endeavor is for you to inherit, together with the saints, as some children of theirs, "the things with the eye hasn't seen and the ear hasn't heard and at the man's heart they haven't ascended, which God has prepared to them who love Him" (1 Cor. 2: 9). Accept these and you will be happy into Christ.

614. A brother mistook and by hearing from Abba, for several times, "Say only forgive me", that brother got callous and he didn't say that. And only after Abba prayed him and kneeled in front of that brother for three times, he barely convinced the brother to say "Forgive me". And the brother left for his monastic cell, Abba told him: Brother, examine your heart by sitting alone within your monastic cell and you will find out where the callousness of your heart has come to you from". By doing so, the brother fell to the ground and he confesses himself to Abba and prayed Abba to talk about that to the Great Oldman Barsanuphius, and to ask him to pray for that brother. And the Saint answered him the following things[1070]:

The answer of Barsanuphius: Brother, take heed at yourself. You have asked to sow your field. Nobody forced you. Take heed at not to allow to be sown among your wheat the tares form the devil, namely the food of the fire. You have asked me about your thoughts. The Fathers says: If somebody asks, he must guard all the way to his death (that what he was told to). And if he doesn't guard that, that will be to him a road to perdition. You have allowed evil and awful thought to nest within your heart. Why do you reckon as briner of death thought which are not so, while him who make your light as darkness and who makes the darkness as light to you, and who shows you the bitter things as sweet and the sweet things as bitter, he is the devil, who makes you see the life as death and the death as life[1071]? This is for the enemy goes around you raging like a lion and trying to swallow you alive (1 Pt. 5: 8)[1072], and you do not understand that if the hand of God and the prayers of the saints didn't protect you[1073], you would fall into the devil's perdition and straying. You reject the words of God uttered you by your Abba, and you reject the salvation of your soul, so that you will never come to the knowledge of the life. How many efforts makes you Abba for you as for his own soul, by asking the saints to pray equally much for you, so that you to escape the traps of the devil and of the death, and you to be saved into the nest of the Lord. Your Abba toils for you so. And you do not feel yourself debtor to guard his words as the apple of your eye and to reckon him above your soul? You have become naughty by getting bored of the good living with him, which you should never had enough of, and which you should pray God to make you worthy of it, and in order not to be to you towards judgment the ceaseless living with him and you to fulfill that what he command you, zealously and with great fear and tremble, so that to come upon you the blessing from God and you to be delivered form the deceit of the enemy. In order not to be fulfilled with you too, the word: "Jacbo ate and he got satiated and the beloved one got satiated" (The Second Law 32: 14); neither the word: "Woe to you, Chorazin, woe to you Betsaida, because if had been done in Tyr and Sidon the wonders which have been done within you, they will have repented long time ago with sack and ashes" (Mt. 11: 31). And you too not to hear: "Yu have hated the rebuking and you have turn you back to My words" (Ps. 49: 18[1074]). Why do you often [1071] The evil consists of a toppling over of the values, one covered by lie. The good is represented as evil, and the evil is dressed up in the shiny coat of the good, the decomposing of life passions are represented as producing of life, and the virtue which enrich the man are seen as impoverishing him, and the strength of self-control is seen as weakness, while letting oneself prey to his anger is seen as strength. He lives a lie. That's why, the live provided by him is a lie too, it is a string of spasms of the pleasure and the continuity of a torment.

[1072] Though dead, or into a bi void, he will let you forever alive, in order you to get tormented. This is satan's pleasure. Besides, satan cannot destroy the life totally, for the life is given by God. That's why satan uses the appearance of the life as the ultimate rest of good, in order to deceive you.

[1073] In the prayer of the saints irradiates the power of their love, strengthened by the power of the love from God. The true power is the love. God cannot be but love.

[1074] In KJB we have: Ps. 50: 17: "Seeing thou hatest instruction, and castest my words behind thee."; in ROB we have: Ps. 49: 18: "You hated My teaching and you have rejected MY word behind you." (E. l. t.'s n.)

temp yourself by addressing evil words to others but you cannot endure that what they say to you? Your heart gets bling because of your envy and slander and you case disturbance to yourself[1075]. You have often cut off and broken your sight, and your brass mind doesn't get ashamed, and you head doesn't bow down, as also brother John told you[1076]. But who received these and got saved? Cail received them from the beginning and he has received the curse from God (Gen. 6-7); and after him the giants, and they got drown in the water of the flood (Gen. 6-7); Ham and Essau, and they were deprived of the holy blessings (Gen. 9 and 27). Pharaoh got callous and the water of the Red Sea covered him and his men (Exod. 14: 16-18). Those who were around Datan rebelled against Moses and the earth swallowed them and their houses (Num. 16). And if the priest who opposes is swallowed by the earth, according to the Scripture, how dared you to oppose him who told you to say: "Forgive me" and you didn't say it? And by that you have estranged yourself from that humbleness from God and from "The Words of the Fathers" who tell us that "in everything we need humbleness, so that we must say, in everything, the word: forgive me" (Abbe Isaïe, Recueil, 3: 1; p. 48). And you heard it for so many times and you didn't say it. And even when you told it, at the end, you didn't say it truly. This is because of you saying it forcedly and not with repentance and with the pricking of the heart. How much longer will you remain with your head upraised and with your heart not circumcised? Look and see that nobody around is callous. Why do you give to the devil your hand and power towards the perdition of your soul?

Be awake, my brother, take vigil, wake up form your deep sleep and from the drunkenness without wine that masters you[1077]. He who obeys, he obeys in everything. One like that no longer worries about his salvation, for another will answer for his salvation: him whom he obeyed and entrusted himself to[1078]. If you want you to be saved and you to live in heavens and on earth, you will guard these. And I will answer for you, brother. And if you disregard these, you will see[1079]. But do not cut off your hope, because hopelessness is the joy of the devil[1080]. I have convinced Abba to receive you to his bosom so as you are. This is because Abba got far from you because of your disobedience and non-submission. I have convinced him to receive you into the fear of God, as a true and not illegitimate son. But you too must trust him, with the fear of God, in everything. And witnesses are to me the Father and the Son and the Holy Ghost for I am bearing the whole care for you in front of God. And God will ask for your blood from me, if you do not disregard my words[1081]. So, set a new beginning today, helped by the hand of God[1082]. Behold, you have been renewed; guard yourself and no longer remain yourself attached to useless chatter. May the Lord give you understanding in order you to obey and to fulfill. And in everything you want to ask me, from time to time, I won't feel myself burdened to answer you that what God will give my mouth to say, and I will let your heart [1078] You untie yourself from your responsibility for yourself and for others, for the whole your earthly life, meaning that you untie yourself also from the act of the supreme answer at the final judgment, for you are preparing yourself by answering on earth for you and for others. But the heroism of this renunciation to the responsibility for yourself is compensated by the heroism of surrendering your fate only him whom you reckon as more capable than you are of answering for yourself. You have chosen your path also in this your total trust to another, by an act of total responsibility. Ou have tied the responsibility for yourself to the responsibility of another for yourself. You are continuously placing the responsibility for yourself in his responsibility.

[1079] Letting your salvation in the care of another, by cutting off your will, it doesn't mean resting yourself into indifference. But it means always fulfilling, responsibly, the things told you by your spiritual father, things which are not easy to do. It means taking care of those things. Youa re not saved as a wood log, but you are required for that the biggest efforts which you are capable of. You are required: the responsibility for fulfilling the things commanded to you as yourself would have chosen to fulfil those.

[1080] The desperation is the joy of the devil, that stops you from any effort to do something for your salvation. It paralyzes you. In this state was Judah. You no longer believe neither in yourself nor in the help from God.

[1081] To him who parts with his spiritual father, by not fulfilling that one's commandments, the spiritual father too will no longer be responsible for this spiritual son of his. This is for the spiritual father won't present himself at the gate of the eternal life as united with this spiritual son. The separated spiritual son has taken upon himself the whole responsibility. The blood of this brother is his life, because in that blood have been imprinted and through that blood have take power all the man's good of bad thoughts and feelings.

know what you have to utter for the salvation of your soul, into Christ Jesus. Amen.

615. The same brother, by not obeying his Aba, he asked the Great Oldman if it is useful to guard some things said under oath in a moment of furry of his; or if he must repent and not to fulfill his oaths.

The Oldman told his these:

Answer: The Lord told Moses: "Go down quickly. Because the people whom you have brought out from the land of Egypt have committed lawlessness. They deviated from the way commanded them by Me. And behold, they forget a calf and they worship that idol" (Exod. 32: 7-8).

How have you gone so quickly astray, you miserable, from obedience? Has the devil who wants you estrange you, started furiously upon you? Isn't this that what I told you that you are mindless and uncircumcised to your heat? Where have you thrown my words? Why do you hurry yourself to fall into the devil's pit? Why do you allow the enemy whom your have heard about, to blind you up? Haven't you received the commandment to surrender yourself into the hands of God and of your Abba? Haven't you heard that Abba wants your soul to be saved as your soul himself wants it? You shouldn't have transgressed the obedience to him whatever he had asked for the benefit of the brothers, because of satan making you to lose that by self-justification, so that both you and another not to benefit anything through you. This is because, by doing so, you show that you want to come upon you that "Woe" told to Pharisees, and the sword harbingered by Ezekiel (Ezek. 33: 1-6). Well! You are incapable of being beneficial to somebody. But why do you say no to him who is able to? Why have you made yourself "as a dog who comes back to his vomit" (Ps. 26: 11; 2 Pt. 2: 22) and "as a pig wallowing into mud, remaining unpersuaded in the callousness of his heart" (2 Pt. 2: 22)? Abba has commanded to you to tell him everything that happens, even thought something has taken place because of his mistake, but you still make him angry as the people did to Moses. Get ashamed now, reject the habit you have had until now, and come back. And the Lord will receive you, for He is merciful. Do not search for the things pleasant to people, because otherwise you will be lost and you won't be the servant of God. Take heed at yourself, you miserable, and fear God.

And regarding the things said by you under your oath because of the wrath of your anger, it is not useful to you to keep those, because if you keep those you will transgress the commandment of the Lord Who says: "You shall not kill!" (Exod. 20: 13). This is for it is a better thing to repent in front of God for that what you have said in your oath, and you not to fulfill your oath, that to fall into the damnation of Herod who, in order to keep his ungodly oath, he cut off the head of John the Forerunner (Mt. 14: 7-10) and he fell off the eternal life and he was surrendered to the bitter and endless torments. It is more useful to you to repent and to ask for forgiveness from God Who can forgive you. This is because even Herod would have been happy if he had done this. But because he didn't do it, he has become threefold wicked and forever cursed. And Peter, the coryphée of the Apostles, on the opposite, after he sworn for three times and gave himself to anathema affirming that he doesn't know who the Savior was, he repented for that and he cried bitterly and with true repentance, and his sin was erased and he was received by the loving-of-people Master and Savior Christ. And he not only that was found worthy of hearing that word said by angels to the women: "Tell disciples and Peter" (Mk. 16: 7), but the Lord Himself asked Peter, in exchange for the three rejections, for three time: "Do you love me, Peter?" (Jn. 21: 15-17), showing that through the good repentance Peter was healed of the sin of his threefold denial. So, you will no longer swear yourself because that leads you to transgress God's commandment. And if you commit this sin, do not hesitate to repent. This is for Peter too, if he had kept his oath that he didn't know the Master, Peter would have remained stranger from Him and from His glory.

616. A brother who found out about these, he asked the same Great Oldman: You love said that the sinner can be liberated of her sins through repentance. But doesn't the sin need also the prayers of the saints too, or it is sufficient to him that what he does? And if he doesn't show a true repentance, but the saints pray for him, will his sins be erased?

Answer: If the man doesn't' do everything he can and if he doesn't unite that with the prayers of the saints, he won't benefit anything form the saints' prayer done for him. This is for if the saints restrain themselves and they pray for him, while he indulges himself to pleasures and to idleness, what benefit will those prayers bring to him? Then it is fulfilled that what was said: "One builds up and other tears down. What do they have more than the efforts?" (Sirach[1083] 34: 28). This is because, if it had been possible that him whom the saints are praying for, him to be saved without taking a little heed, there wouldn't have been any impediment for the saints to do that for all the sinners of the world. And even though the sinner makes some efforts, he still needs the prayers of the righteous. This is for the Apostle says: "The working prayer of the righteous can do much" (Jas. 5: 16). Therefore, when the saint and the righteous pray, the sinner must collaborate as well, according to his power, for his repentance, with the prayer of the saints, because of not being himself able to pay for his debts by himself. He brings a little form his part, and the prayer of the saints will bring much. This is for, as one having to carry ten measures of wheat, he cannot carry even two, but he finds a man who fears God and who ca carry nine measures, and so he will carry only one measure of wheat and so he will be saved and he won't be robbed by thieves on the road; it is likewise here too[1084]. The sinner resembles also to the man who owes one hundred (gold) coins and who, because of being him announced by his creditors that he smut pay his debt, he goes to a believer and rich man and pray that man to give him, out of love for people, as much ,money as that one could, and the rich man by seeing the trouble of the debtor, he has mercy on him and he tells him: "Brother, everything I have in my hands I will give it for you. Liberate yourself of that contract". So, the debtor must force himself to give the little he has, in order him to be liberated of many. This is because, if that merciful man doesn't see the [1084] The prayer of him who wobbles on his feet because of his sins, it doesn't reach God powerfully, but it remains hesitating, unlike the prayer of him who has got fortified in cleanness and in love for God and for people. The sinner still thinks at the pleasure provided him by his sins, as at egotism. He doesn't' entirely communicate with God.

debtor bringing at least the ten gold coins he has, the rich will see that vainly will himself give his ninety gold coins, because that debt of a hundred gold coins still won't be erased.

617. Question: A layman who loved Christ, he asked the other Oldman: I pray you, Father, please explain to me in this thing, so that I will leave with joy. For my thought insists to do good out of my wealth, what will be more useful: to give away small amounts, or to give it away at once?

Answer: Brother, despite I am not able to answer you that appropriately, but you have the urge of the Scripture saying: "Dop not say: Go away and come back tomorrow and I will give you, when you could do a good, because we do not know what tomorrow till bring" (Prov. 3: 28). On the other hand, there are measures, and each one does his measure. There is one who can give a little out of his revenues. And there is another who gives the tenth part of his products, and another gives the fourth part, and another gives half. Each one gives according to his measure. And him who wants to reach the consummate measure, let him not ask me because of being I the last one among men, but let him ask our Teacher and Doctor of our souls, our Lord Jesus Who told to the rich one: "If you want to be consummate, sell all your wealth and share it to the poor, and you will have a treasure in heavens, and come and follow Me" (Mt. 19: 21). The presence of the death next to us let it uphold your thoughts. This is for it is hidden from anyone. So, let's strive to do good before being us taken away from here. This is because of not knowing us when the call will be made. Let's not allow ourselves, by any means, unprepared, so that we will be together with the five insane virgins who didn't put oil in their candles (Mt. 25: 1-12). Let's do everything we can, according to our helplessness, and good is the Lord of all people Who takes us together with the five wise virgins in His wedding room and to the untold Joy, together with Christ. Amen.

618. Question: A brother asked the same Oldman if he should receive from some people and then to share to the poor, because of being there some people who pray him to do that.

Answer; For it is about alms, not everybody can bear the told things, but only them who have reached the quietude and who can cry for their sins. This is because some brothers surrendered themselves to this serving and God knows what to do with them regarding that. This is for, how will they try to administrate foreign goods, once they have rejected their own goods? This was done also by the pious among saints Illarion. This is because he was prayed by somebody to receive a lot of money, but he answered that one: "You due to give away your goods, for you cross through cities and you know the villages. And I, because of leaving all my good, how will I be able to give away foreign goods?" (Blessed Jeronimus, The Life of Saint Illarion, 18; L.P.[1085] 21: 36).

619. Question: If one insists, saying: "If you do not accept you to share the goods, I won't give away anything", should I let the poor tormented by hunger?

Answer: As I told to our love before, there are some people who have surrendered themselves to this serving. But if you want to cry for your sins, do won't take heed at this thing, even if you see somebody dying in front of your monastic cell. Do not start sharing foreign goods and thus to top yourself from crying for your sins. And the owner of those goods, if he doesn't find somebody to do that service for him, then he will do it by himself, in order not to impede his own will.

620. Question: A loving-of-Christ layman asked the same Oldman: If somebody asks someone to bestow him something, and he who has been asked for that something he doesn't have that, should him borrow that thing in order him to be able to bestow it?

Answer: If somebody is asked for giving away that what he doesn't have, he won't be condemned. This is for Apostle Peter, when asked by somebody to give him some alms, he answered: "Silver and gold I do not have" (Acts 3: 6). And he didn't borrow in order him to be able to give. And if somebody has only that much as he needs, neither then must he spend that what he has, haphazardly, in order not to lack that and so him to get troubled because of missing that thing. And if him who is asked for, he tell him who asks him: "Forgive me, I do not have anything to give you", and that's not a lie, for he who has only that much as he needs, he doesn't have what to give to somebody else. But let him tall to that one who asks from him: "Forgive me, for I have only that much as I need". Think at the five virgins who were begged by the other five virgins to give them oil for their candles, but they answered: "Lest us too to run out of oil" (Mt. 25: 9). From his part, Apostle Paul tells to Corinthians: "Let your abundance to fulfill the lack of others" (2 Cor. 8: 14), but he also said: "But not so that to be relief to others and trouble to yourself" (Ibid 13).

621. Question: Explain me, Father, that what you said: "If one has only that much as he needs, he must not give that away haphazardly, lest himself will end into trouble". How can one reach into trouble for doing something willingly?

Answer: Everything must be done with right-reckoning. And the right-reckoning consists of somebody working according to his measure. This also assures him that he won't be bothered later by his thoughts. But working over his own power means lack of right-reckoning, either in doing the good, or in something else. And that will bring him, later on, to disturbance and to upset. It is good and it is very good that the widow gave him who needed (3 Kings[1086] 17: 10-12). This isn't a bad thing. But when the man does something over his measure, he won't be able to bear that. And God doesn't ask us things which are above our measure.

622. So, if one is rich and he has over that what he needs, won't he need right-reckoning?

Answer: He too needs the right-reckoning, lest he will do something over the power of his thought and so he will be sorry about that. That's why Paul too said: "Neither with sadness nor forcedly, for God love him who bestows joyfully" (2 Cor. 9: 7). The consummate things belong to consummated ones, and the small things belong to the tiny. He who is consummate he manly endures his poverty and he despises the whole richness and he endures everything without disturbance, according to the Apostle who says: "I can do everything into Him Who strengthens me, Christ" (Phil. 4: 13), and: "The world has been crucified to me" (Gal. 6: 14).

623. Question: He who doesn't give with pleasure, what whoudl him do in order him to get accustomed to give with pleasure?

Answer: He must remember the reward from God given to them who give away, and let them start with the small things, while always thinking at that that him who gives a few things, he will be given a few things, but him who given many things he will be given many things, according to what was written: "he who sows with avarice, with avarice he will reap, and he who sows abundantly, abundantly he will reap" (2 Cor. 9: 6). And, gradually, hit thought will desire for getting the abundant reward, and so he will ever advance towards consummation. And he may reach thus to consummate measures and he can deprive on himself of earthly things and he can live into ghost, with the heavenly realities.

624. Question: If somebody bewitched by the start of doing the good recklessly spends even the things he needs for himself, and then he will feel sorry about that, how must he comfort himself, in order him not to be overwhelmed by the devilish sadness?

Answer: He will despise himself firstly for his lack of right-reckoning, and then he will raise his thought out of sadness, by saying: "Now after I have spent for a deed, powerful is the loving-of-people God so that Him to take care of me too".

625: Question: If there are two poor and I do not have enough to give to both of them, which one will I chose?

Answer: It must be chosen the more helpless one.

626. Question: If I was to give away, but my thought makes me hesitate, what will I do?

Answer: Examine and find out and if that is because of your avarice, you will give even something more that you owe to give. For instance, add there a small sum of money, and you will find mercy[1087].

627. Question: Please explain me this too, Master Abba. He who doesn't have anything to give away, how will him be partaker to the blessed announced by our Savior to them who will be on the right hand: "Come, you the blessed of My Father, and inherit the Kingdom prepared for you since the foundation of the world. For I has hungry and you gave Me to eat" etc. (Mt. 25: 34)?

Answer: Brother, because the Apostles did not have money, aren't they partakers to this blessing? There are groups (level) and groups. And God spoke towards each one according to the group which that one belongs to. This is for God showed, through Blessings, the differences among them who are saved. From the realties submitted to the senses one can understand the spiritual realities as well. Suppose that there is a man who has fresh vegetables and he sell those for a dinar. And among craftsmanships it is likewise. One is a carpenter and he takes five dinars per day. Another is mason and he takes the same payment. Another has a different craftsmanship and he take the same payment. The craftsmanships differ, the products differ as well. But the honor and the market are the same. Apply these to the salvation of the soul of them wo have money and they share to the poor without searching for vain-glory. To all of them it is said: "Come, you the blessed ones of My Father, and inherit the Kingdom prepared for you since the foundation of the world"

[1087] In all these measures are described the ways which the man ca liberate himself in, from the chains of his egotism, and which the man can enter in communion through, with God and with the people.

(Mt. 5: 3). And again: "Blesse are the persecuted for righteousness, for the Kingdom of Heavens is theirs" (Mt. 5: 10). And the other ones who are blessed, despite differing in blessings, they won't be strangers to the Kingdom of Heavens. So, if you have nothing to give away as alms, you will make yourself poor in spirit, in order you to inherit the Kingdom of Heavens together with the saints[1088]; cry for your sins from this world in order you to be comforted by the things said into Gospel; hunger and thirst for justice, in order you to be satiated by it; be clean in your heart, in order you to see God into His glory; make yourself a peacemaker within your heart, in order you to be called as son of God; prepare yourself through good deeds in order you to be banished, for righteousness, from city to city, namely, because of the evil thought form the devil into the good thought from God, in order you to be gladdened by inheriting the Kingdom of heavens. Endure the condemnation of the persecution and the liar defamation, for the Lord, in order you to rejoice into gladness, by discovering in front of you your abundant rewards into heavens.

628. Question of the same one towards the same one: For each Blessing requires a virtue, will that be enough, Father, a sole virtue, for one to be saved?

Answer: Like the body is one, but it has many limbs, and if the body misses one of its limbs it won't be a complete body, you smut understand likewise the inward man. The inwards man has the virtues as several limbs, and if he misses even one, he won't have been reached his consummation. And like the craftsman who knows hie craftsmanship, he is experienced in other craftsmanships as well, likewise here, the man possessing all virtues he is not know and he is not called but according to that one which the grace of the Ghost sines within him more into[1089].

[1088] IN order you to enter the Kingdom of the consummate communion.

[1089] Out of each one shines especially a certain virtue. But connected to that virtue, there are all the other virtues. A gentle man cannot be stingy, though he is mainly characterized by his gentleness.

629. Question: Another layman who was loving-of Christ, he gave somebody some goods in order to be shared to the poor, by trusting that man. And he told him: "Takle and you will be held accountable to God". But that one didn't' understand that he placed upon that one a huge burden. And he reckoned that even he wasn't told that, once he accepted to do that, he will be held accountable to God. the same Oldman was asked about that and he answered:

Answer; he who accepted got deceived, for he dared to believe that he can be accountable to God about everything. But who dares to tell about himself that he has a clean heart? Such a thing belongs to the consummate Fathers. He should have told him who gave him those goods: "I am not worthy to receive this in order to give account to God. For I am a sinner. I will strive to collaborate with the whole my power to this deed, but it belongs to God to help me to collaborate according to His will". And if he said so, that would have been reckoned him as humbleness and God wouldn't have condemned him because he had believed in his power. But because he accepted this thing with confidence in himself, it will be asked by God him to give account exactly[1090]. But neither him who has should ask the brother for such a reckoning. This is because by that, despite he seemed to trust the brother, he actually reckoned the brother, without realizing it, as unworthy of being trusted. He should, once he trusted that brother, to let the thing on God's responsibility and not to doubt that brother. This is because him who doubt about somebody, he must not trust that somebody.

630. There are some people who accept to be imparted publicly with the shared things. But others could feel ashamed of publicly being given those things, because of their rank. And then, there are also those who are sick and who stay within their houses. Should one give the mercy to some people in special ways, or everyone should be given the same way?

[1090] If he hadn't trusted himself that he had been able to give account to God, he would have reckoned, with humbleness, that only God could have helped him, and God wouldn't have held him accountable for an exact reckoning, but God would have placed on the scale favorable to that man also his humbleness.

Answer: Place all of them who receive, openly, in the same group, except those having some weakness or sickness. To these ones you should give a little more. And place them who feel ashamed and who lie down because of their sickness into another group, and give them small plus according to their needs and according to what you have and what you like.

631. Question: If him who gave money to somebody in order to share either to the Fathers, or to the poor, he tells that one to share those money in an open place, and nearby there are some very needy people, won't that be appropriate to give something to those people as well?

Question: It won't be inappropriate, if they are very needy, they to be given something too. This is for, by not knowing that one that others need too, he didn't tell him to give something to those too. But if he commanded him not to give in another place, but only in that place alone, let him not transgress that commandment. So, he must ask, previously, and then him to do whatever he is told to. And so, he will be worriless.

632. Question: If this job needs together-workers, if I summon some people whom I trust, can I entrust this job to them unhesitatingly?

Answer: If you have reached to trust them, you won't hesitate to entrust them such a job. This is for all the things are uncovered to God. And God will know our inward things, and God will give to everybody according to their deed. (Ps. 88: 31[1091]). And if they keep something for themselves, they will see.

[1091] In KJB we have: Ps. 89: 31-32: "If they break my statutes, and keep not my commandments; // Then will I visit their transgression with the rod, and their iniquity with stripes."; in ROB we have: Ps. 88: 31-32: "If they disregard My righteousness and if My commandments they do not observe, // I will examine with a staff their lawlessness and with beatings their sins." (E. l. t.'s n.)

633. Question: If I find out that somebody among them has kept something for himself, what will I do? Will if reproach him and will I take that form him?

Answer: If you surely find out that he touched something, you will first examine if his thought can accept to be reproached. And if yet, you will tell him about that thing, gently and advising him, according to God. And take that away from him. But if he doesn't accept to be reproached, you won't harm his conscience, lets him will reach, because of his shame, into an even worse state. And let him have that what he has taken. This is for he has taken from the things of God. And God knows better if that one has taken because he needed, and God know hos wo judge that one's deed.

634. Question: Should I trust again one like this, in the future?

Answer: If you find out that he did that on other occasions too, and that he uses to behave like that, you won't trust him again. But of he has always been good but now he has been kidnapped by the devil, or if he took that because he needed that, it won't be inappropriate you to trust him again. This is for he will surely correct himself. Take care only not to offend him.

635. What should I give to the poor who come through houses?

Answer: Whatever you have at hand, either a little food of drink, either two pennies or one penny. And you only should give without getting yourself upset, but in the fear of God, for through that is served God[1092].

[1092] Any giving of alms must be reckoned as being directed towards God. By that it is highlighted the value of the man whom you give alms to, regardless hos poor he was. The mercy doesn't despise him, but the mercy cherished the poor, by seeing the poor tied to God and as an environment transparent to God, through whom God tests him who gives alms.

636. Question: It happens to me to have a thing which is utterly necessary to me and there are also other things not so necessary as either wine of bread. And my thought tells me to give to the poor out of what is utterly necessary to me. But it is difficult to me, namely to give them the better things, and to keep for myself the inferior things. But when Fathers visit me, I reckon to honor them more than I do to the poor, and I try hosting the Fathers the better I can.

Answer: Regarding the poor, for we haven't reached yet to reckon them as our equals, neither have we reached to love our neighbor as ourselves, do according to your power, while knowing your weakness. Give them the second quality goods. Regarding the Fathers, you should honor them more, for they are the servants of God. This is for it was written: "To him with the honor, honor" (Rom. 13: 7). This is for God too has honored them more.

637. Question: Another layman who was loving-of Christ, he asked the same Oldman John, if he was to live or to die. Ane the Oldman answered him thus:

If I told you that you were to die, you would work for your salvation forcedly. This is because, by seeing yourself into the mouth of the death, you will throw away your things as being forced to. But if you expect to live for a lone time, and you feel the desire for being you saved, you will direct your thought towards good in an unforced manner. And then, even if you died soon, you would work for your salvation feely, and nor forcedly.

638. Question: But how? If somebody does something good because of fearing his death, won't be that reckoned him towards salvation?

Answer: Are not the same that salvation worked forcedly and the salvation worked freely. But that too is better than doing nothing. This is because doing nothing is towards the perdition of the soul, as long as we are master upon ourselves[1093]. So, by knowing that both of them are possible, you will use your deeds as a sapient man, and like the insane virgins did, and who were locked outside the wedding room, because they didn't' have the fruit of the giving alms and of doing the good.

639. Question: If somebody keeps in his soul the thought of death, and because of that he does the good, doesn't he prepare to himself a willing reward?

Answer: Keeping the memory of the death is good. This is for by doing that one thinks that he is mortal and the mortal is not eternal. And he who knows that he is not eternal, he will willingly leave the things of this age. Out of ceaselessly thinking at death, he will learn how to do the good in a free manner. But he who sees his death in front of his eyes and he does the good because of that, he isn't the same in his deed. The good done by this one was done because of fearing his death and that is forcedly.

640. Tell me, Father, what benefit has the soul out of the good he did willingly, and what is the benefit out of the unwilling good?

Answer: The willing good guards the soul against death, consummately, while the unwilling good brings a diminution to this grace and it is lower.

[1093] When we work because of fearing our close death, we show ourselves incapable of liberating ourselves from being mastered by our passions because of being us habituated to them.

In all these questions and answers it is shown how the detachment from our egotistic self means detaching ourselves from the material things, it means relativizing the material things, in comparison to the unparallelly higher value of the soul. The egotism doesn't part with the good, but he grabs them. But by doing so he forgets about himself, thought he seems to be interested in himself. But he is not interested in his true self, but he is interested in the external and perishing things. Only him who gladly separate himself from these goods, only him enters the communion with God and with his fellow humans, and by that he will discover his true self.

641. If somebody lives in indifference, but he sees himself about to die, and he promises to God that if he lives longer, he will strive to be pleasant to God, will him be bestowed a prolongation of his life?

Answer: God is the One Who knows the heart and He looks at the righteousness of the heart. So, if God see that one truly repenting and with the whole his soul, God will give him an add to his live. This is for he says: "May God give you according to your heart" (Ps. 19: 5[1094])[1095]. And the will of God is our salvation. This is for Himself said: "Alive I am and I do not want the death of the sinner but to turn back and to be alive" (Hek. 18: 23). Therefore, let's direct our heart towards Him and let's throw all our worries upon Him" (1 Pt. 5: 7). And God will lead our life towards the things beneficial to our salvation.

642. Tell me, Father, has there been established a term for the end of the world?

Answer: Without any doubt, there will be an end of the world. But God, by seeing us fulfilling the things pleasant to Him, He prolongs the time. This is for it was said: "The righteousness adds days, and the years of the sinners will be diminished" (Prov. 10: 27). This is for the commandment of God establishes the border of the human life. This is for at the question asked by Apostles, the Lord answered: "It doesn't belong to you to know the times established by God with His power" (Acts 1: 7).

643. Another loving-of Christ layman, falling sick and being engulfed by fever, he asked the Great Oldman to pray for him for his pain to be alleviated. And he even sent to the Great

[1094] In KJB we have: Ps. 20: 5: "We will rejoice in thy salvation, and in the name of our God we will set up our banners: the Lord fulfil all thy petitions."; in ROB we have: Ps. 19: 5: "We will rejoice of your salvation and into the name of our God we will be glorified. May the Lord fulfill all your asks." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[1095] God sees beyond that what we promise at the surface because of a passing sentiment of fear. And on the basis of what God sees, He know whether we are going to fulfil our promises or not. On this knowledge of our deep self, it is based God's prescience and His decision whether He will fulfill of not that what we ask Him.

Oldman some water to be blessed and then him to drink that water. This was because he couldn't endure that fever. And the Great Oldman prayer, and that one drank the blessed water, and his fever and his pain ceased immediately. And the brother wondered and extolled God for that, and he told some people about the work committed through the Great Oldman. But later on, his fever tuned back powerfully. And he sent a message to the Great Oldman praying him to have again mercy on him. And the Great Oldman answered him:

Answer: This has happened to you in order to stop your much-speaking. And he was fully alleviated through the prayer of the Great Oldman. But since then, he was afraid to let anyone know about his healing, and about other benefactions he received from the Saint.

644. Question: The same brother, by seeing Abba telling to the coming brothers about the wonders of the Holy Oldman, he asked the other Oldman John about that. And he learnt from him what the purpose of Abba was, so that he told nothing more. But the same brother asked again the same Oldman: How comes, Father John, that I see Abba speaking for hours about the virtues of the Great Oldman and I am gladdened by his words, as being towards building. But on some other occasions, it seems to me that his words do not build but they rather offend, for he praises his Fathers and that upsets me. I suffer this also relatedly to other Fathers from the world because if seems to me that they speak vainly. I pray you, therefore, Father, tell me about this and pray for me so that I could be delivered of these and of the evil thought.

The answer of John: Brother, may God give you to hear and to understand and to go to deeds the things spoken to you. That what you are telling me it is self-justification and condemnation. It is self-justification because you reckon yourself worthy of telling stories. And it is condemnation because it says: "And what are you telling these for? Don't you remember that the Ghost blows wherever He wants?" (Jn. 3: 8). Can you tell me why the Lord after healing some people He commanded them not to tell anybody what happened (Mk. 7: 6)? And to another He told: "God and show yourself to the priest and bring the due things for your cleanness", and He added: "to bear witness to them" (Mt. 8: 4; Lk. 5: 14); and: "Talk about all the things God did to you" (Lk. 8: 39). The things uttered by Abba are towards the benefit of them who listen to those with fear; and those things are towards condemnation to them who do not receive those with faith. And those things haven't been understood by you until now, because until now your hart has been changing. This is for the Apostle says: "We are good fragrance to God to them who are saved and to them who perish; to some of them we are smell of death towards death, to other we are fragrance of life towards life. But who is capable of that? For we are not as the many who sell the word of God" (2 Cor. 2: 15-17). So, if you doubt about the Oldman because he rebuked you for speaking and he didn't rebuke Abba, you must not judge because there is something in the middle. But you must humble yourself in your heart, saying: The Great Oldman rebuked me for I am unworthy, while he allowed Abba to talk about those things for the benefit of the listeners. Let's understand how the Great Oldman brings us on all the ways towards humbleness, in order us to diminish ourselves and us to reckon ourselves as unworthy. And we do not want to bow down our neck. Let's, therefore, come to humbleness, and God will unveil His mysteries, as for instance when we must keep our silence and when we must speak, so that both of these to be towards the benefit of ours and of the listeners. Let's, therefore, do not judge and do not despise the listeners, in order not to be ourselves condemned instead of being us built up. This is because if we ask our thought, saying: "Do we know what he speaks like, him who speaks? Does he do that by the work of the Ghost?", we will surely find out that we do not know that. So, let's think at the good things and not at the bad things. This is because the evil one thinks at the evil things, and the good one thinks at the good things into Christ Jesus our Lord Whom it is due the glory forever. Amen.

645. Question: Another loving-of Christ layman who had an illness in his body, he sent to be asked the same Oldman John to pry for him, in order him to achieve his healing. And the Oldman answered him: The Lord is going to heal you soon. But that one still remained ill. But he trusted the Oldman so that he wondered, saying: "What could be in the middle? This is for the Oldman doesn't lie. For God speaks within him, but I still haven't been healed". And he came and asked the Great Oldman about that.

The answer of Barsanuphius: If we believe that God doesn't lie (Tit. 1: 2) and that "to him who believes all the things are possible" (Mt. 9: 23), how comes that you haven't received that what you have desired? Hasn't that been because of dwelling within you, unnoticed by you, your faithlessness? I truly believe that everything told you by God through brother John, you are going to receive. But I pray your love for Jesus not to attract me to the horse races, for I am old. And I am telling you these things showing the unity of soul that you told you have it with us. This is for nobody divides his soul in two parts, in order to work different things. Still, find out that I am praying to God until God will bring you to His gates for confession and in Hid courtyards in songs of praise (Ps. 99: 3-4[1096])[1097].

Hearting these words the brother wondered hos the Oldman knew about his addiction to the horse races, and he glorified God. And since then, he avoided that evil game.

646. The question of the same one towards the same Great Oldman: I have a brother united in soul with me and we lived thus as brothers, by having everything in common. But not I took a wife, and we have remained the same further on. And I am

[1096] In KJB we have: Ps. 100: 4: "Enter into his gates with thanksgiving, and into his courts with praise: be thankful unto him, and bless his name."; in ROB we have: Ps. 99: 3-4: "And we are His people and the sheep of His pasture. Enter His gates with praise and in His courtyards with praise Him with songs of praise. // Sing His name!" (E. l. t.'s n.)

[1097] As a half of the soul of the other souly father, he is restless for him, but on the other hand he prays for that one too to be brought, together with himself, to the gates of the Lord where he to confess his sins, at the "doors of the repentance" and then, consequently to his confession those gates to be open and they both to enter the Lord's courtyards, singing together, with you, songs of praise to God. The Oldman wants to impropriate the confession of that one, as they would have sinned together, in order him to produce in that one the urge to confession. Between the souls who love on one another there no longer is a total separation, as there no longer is such a separation between Christ and us. That's why Christ remain in state of sacrifice and of sufferance for us, until the end of the world. And that's why we too are imparted with His sacrifice "in communion", to that each of us to enter the communion with Christ not isolated by in communion with all the other people.

warred by my thought lets my marriage caused in his heart some doubts about me and so he no longer feels the same for me?

The answer of Barsanuphius: If you want to find out what he has in his heart, you will find that out in this way: Examine your heart to see whether, after you married, you still feel for him the same as before. And if your feeling has remained the same, you will know that his heart is according to your heart, by the help of God[1098].

647. Ask towards the same one: Another loving-of Christ layman sent a request towards the same Great Oldman for the Oldman to pray for him, for God to remember him in His Kingdom.

Answer: Lo, Lord Jesus Christ hasn't ashamed my face, but He bestowed me your soul and He has given me the grace for Him to remember you in His Kingdom[1099]. So, by receiving this grace (gift), let's maintain ourselves full of gratitude, and let's not become like some pigs which cannot discern the precious pearls. You must know that if somebody is honored by somebody else, he must honor himself too. So, by being honored by God without us being worthy of that, let's make ourselves worthy of Him. And let's honor God by keeping His holy commandments[1100]. This is for Himself said: "If I am Father, where is my honoring? And if I am the Lord, where is My glory?" (Mal. 1: 6). May God the All-Keeper help you, son, to listen to and to guard the useful things.

[1098] The soul of one being like a half to the soul of another, the feelings of one cross to another too. That is like a wind that, when blowing upon a side of the man, it blows from the other side too.

[1099] The Oldman reckons himself to tightly united with his spiritual son that he reckons the salvation given to that one by God and his remembrance by God as a gift given him by God Himself. Behold what sentiment the priest must pray with, at the Liturgy, in order the believers who ask for that to be remembered in God's Kingdom: as the priest would pray for himself.

[1100] If God honored us through the embodiment of His Son with the quality as His sons, we too must make ourselves worthy of the worthiness given by Him to us, by bestowing us this quality through Baptism. And let's by this ourselves to honor and to love God Who honored and loved us. And let's honor God and let's love God by fulfilling His commandments with the filial feeling and power given us by Him as Baptism. And by this too, we actualize the worthiness given us by God.

648. Question: A garden that belongs to my grandsons who live far from here it has been asked by some people as place for prayer. My grandsons have given me the task to establish with the prospective buyers the price of that garden. Noy I am caught between two thoughts: one thought tells me that I must show a lower price and so to make of it a gift for the house of the Lord, once that garden is asked for a holy place; the other thought tells me to show faithfulness to them who commanded to establish the right price. And I do not know which thought must I lean on. I fear God, but I also reckon as a sin to inflict loss upon the owners of the garden. What should I do, Father?

Answer: Show them the right price, and urge them by telling them: "You know that all of us are debtors to our masters, the saints. So, if the Lord will let you know that you should reduce the price, it will depend on you to do that". S, you write them that. And it will belong to them to do that or not to do it. And you will have no remorse after the completion of that thing. It won't be a burden or a mistake to be asked that what is right, even if that if for the house of the Lord. But it is useful that if the owner of that place is not pressed by needs, he to reduce the price, as much as he can, for the house of the Lord. This is for he will have a multiplied benefit by doing so. But if that is not possible to him, God won't ask him for that; God only asks for his benevolence.

Hearing those, that brother left rejoicing and praising God.

649. Question: I want to hire some people as my helpers, but I hesitate because I think whether I will truly benefit of that; so, tell me, should I do that or not?

Answer: Know that we too have a Master, and if we obey our Master He will determine dour servants to obey us too[1101]. God and hire them in the name of the Lord.

[1101] If your servant sees you obeying God, he too will obey you, for the Lord, or he will obey the Lord together with you.

650. Question: If the law of God commands me something while the world's law decides against that, what should I do? This is for the live of the society if being ruled by the world's laws and he who transgresses those laws he will work inequity.

Answer: The law of God is more worthy to be obeyed. This is for it speaks about the salvation of the soul. And the law of the world, because of being bodily, it speaks about bodily things.

651. What do mean the words: "Have mercy on the poor at judgment"? (Exod. 23: 3).

Answer: That what that says is this: He who judges some things, let him judge rightly and let him not transgress the righteousness, on the motif of having mercy on the poor. But he doesn't commit any injustice by urging the enemy to have mercy on the poor.

652. Question: If some of the father, whom I trust very much, tells me to do something that seems to me contrary to what it right, why should I do? Will I transgress the commandment given to me?

Answer: The Spiritual Fathers to not say anything in vain, but they say everything for the salvation of the soul. So, you will tell him that what you will think, and then you will do what he will tell you to do. And you will not transgress the commandment. This is for the things which are pleasant to God, they are righteous and useful.

653. Another loving-of Christ layman had a bad servant who ran away and, after a while, that servant turned back to him. And he asked the Oldman John if he should keep that servant or not. And the Oldman John told him to let that servant go, but that servant started to behave well. So, he felt heavy about letting that servant go. And he sent again a question whether he should let that servant go or not.

The answer of John: For the time being, you can keep your servant by teaching him and by teaching you through him[1102]. And if that servant corrects himself, that will be good. And if that servant perseveres in the same behaviors, and you endure him for the Lord, that will be good too, for you will be rewarded for your patience. But if you see that you can't stand him, and you are harmed by that, you will let him go away, by remembering some of the saints who said: "If you see somebody drowning in the river, do not give him your hand to pull you too in, but give him your staff. And if you can escape him through your staff, that will be good. And if not, you will let your staff go so that yourself not to be lost too" (Les Sentences des Pères du désert, Nouveau Recueil, Solesmes, 1970, no. 472, p. 74).

654. After a few days, that servant tempted his master by stealing something. And the Lord covered the master by the prayers of the saints[1103], so that that servant ran away. And the master came and thanked to the Oldman for the protection he received, and the master rebuked himself of not having let that's servant go after he received the first answer. And the Oldman answered him like this:

I didn't tell you to let that servant go in order you to banish him away, but I told you that because of the weakness of your thought, because you couldn't stand to be tempted by that servant. This is for we are sinners and we are not allowed to banish anybody away. This is because, if you were able to suffer his laziness, you would be rewarded for your patience. Actually, some of the Fathers spoke to Abba Poemen about a certain Oldman who couldn't stand his lazy disciple. And Abba Poemen told them: "If I were him, I would place a little pillow under his head". And those ones told him: "And what would you say to God? And he answered: "I would say to God: Lord, you said: "Take firstly, the beam out of your eye and then you will see how to get the stray out of the eye of your brother" (Mt. 7: 5) (Paterikon, Poemen: 131).

[1102] Teach him the good things, but teach yourself the patience by doing that.

[1103] They protected the master from knowing about that theft before the running away of his servant, so that not to rebuke him angrily.

655. Question: So, the old man was right not to rebuke his brother?

Answer: Brother, the old man didn't allow that brother unrebuked without a reason. This is because he rebuked that brother for several times but the brother didn't accept the reproaches. And by seeing that that brother didn't get corrected, the old man left that thing at the judgment of God, saying: "God know what it is useful. This is for my brother is better than I am". This was done by the consummate ones for they didn't dare to judge anyone. They did that in order to shame up them who are nothing but they still judge everybody.

656. Question: When my servant mistakes and I want to reproach him, what purpose should I reproach him on?

Answer: On the purpose of that love according to God, so that by being him corrected through reproaching, he to stop sinning and that to be him towards the salvation of his soul. That's why reproaching must not be done angrily. This is for the good isn't born out of evil. But, if your thought gets angry, you will wait until your thought will be peaceful again. And then you will reproach him kindly, into the fear of God.

657. But when I want to reproach him, my thought tells me: "You rather will commit sin. How can you reproach him while not correcting yourself?". And this stops my rebuking.

Answer: This thought is from the devil, and it aims to allow the brother uncorrected, and so you will be held accountable for his sins. So, you must tell to your thought: "It is obvious that I mistake much, and I admit that. But I don't want to be held accountable both for me and for him. This is for God asks me to correct my brother"[1104]. And after you have [1104] If I reproach him, I will he held accountable only for myself. And it is better to be held accountable for my mistake, than for other's done because I haven't done anything to correct him.

reproached him with sparing and with the fear of God, you will tell to yourself the Apostle's word: "You who teach somebody else, why don't you teach on yourself?" (Rom. 2: 21). And so, you will be correcting that one with humble cogitation.

658. When I see somebody cursing the religion and blaspheming the right-faith, I get angry with him on the motif of my zeal. What is this?

Answer: You have heard that the correction through evil it rather does bad than good. So, you should talk to him who curses, by reproaching him gently and with long-patience into the fear of God. And if you see yourself disturbed, you should say nothing to him.

659. Question: It happens to me that when I meet somebody, I look at him passionately and I am wounded in my soul. And if the need to see him again occurs, I will no longer be able to look at him. And by that I make him suspicious. And it happened to me to even close my eyes, because I cannot stand his look. And I am troubled and I do not what I should do. So, pray for me, master, and send me a word of life and medicines of your love for people.

Answer: You love asked me about the passionate look at somebody who is present in a certain place. This obviously comes from the devil's wars. But from the devil comes also the fact of thinking at these things with the mind. So, you should remember the corruption and the stench of our nature, as we are about to enter our tombs. But why should I speak to you about corruption? Wouldn't be better for you to place in front of your eyes the fearsome judgment of God, that is to come? And what will be the inheritance of them who have done such things? And how will you be able to endure the big shame of being our deeds shown in front of the angels and of the archangels and of all people, in front of the Righteous Judge? And, how it is shot up the mouth of them who did such deeds? (Ps. 62: 12[1105]). Let's fear him who says: "Do not deceive yourself, neither the fornicators, nor them who commit adultery, nor the Malachite, nor the Sodomites, they won't inherit the Kingdom of God (1 Cor. 6: 9-10); and "him who looks at a woman to lust her" etc.; and "if you eye offends you, pluck it out" (Mt. 5: 28-29).

You should remember these things and avoid the often meetings with the people whom you are with in this sort of war. On the other hand, do not show them why do you avoid them, lets you to make them think evil thoughts too. And if you need to talk to them, you will call the name of God to your help, saying: "Lord Jesus, cover me and help my weakness!". And you dare, for the arrow of the enemies will be shattered. This is for His name caused the destruction of the evil. Answer a few things to the many things told to you. And do not give to those things your hearing, or to your thoughts, by restrain yourself into decency and non-disturbance, so that nobody could know what is happening within you. And even if you take power from doing these things, you still won't be confident when it comes about your enemies. This is because of being they shameless, and even if they have been defeated for tens of thousands of times, they will still start the war again. But the bearer of victory is God. God will help the man's humbleness, for He wanted to embody Himself right for that[1106].

660. Question: What does it mean the word: "Take heed not to be you kidnapped by the thought of the fornication"?

Answer: This word matches not only the fornication, but it matches all the sins. This is suffered by the mind because of its scattering. So, the man must know how to gather himself within himself, by saying: "Lord, forgive me for Your holy name, because this thing has happened to me because of my carelessness. And deliver me from scattering and from all the traps of the enemy, for Your is the glory forever. Amen". And the kidnapping is shown like this: If somebody speaks and his mind is scattered, he speaks about something and then his mind is kidnapped by something else. This is the kidnapping. And if somebody works on something and his mind scatters him from that thing, he will break, because of forgetfulness, the thing he works on, or he will produce more than needed. Abd this too is kidnapping.

[1106] God embodied Himself into the human humbleness, in order Him to be close to our humbleness. The Almighty God strengthens the humble one who doesn't lock up himself to God's power through his apparent power.

It happens likewise in the case of the fornication thought. It happens that while the man talks to somebody, the enemy attracts his mind away from God. Then he will be attracted, because of the sharing, to the lust for fornication. This too is kidnapping. This is because not out of thinking to fornication has that happened, but he has been kidnapped because of his forgetfulness. One like this is resembling to a traveler who, because of being inattentive, he leaves the right road and take a wrong road. But he must come to his sense by waking himself up, as it was said. And he must run to the mercy of God. This is for God is merciful and he will receive him as on the profligate son. We know with how much benevolence that one was received (Lk. 15: 20-24). And when this war is sown into thought not by scattering, we will have to remain awake and not to allow ourselves to get sweetened and to tarry in it.

661. Question: If I need to talk to a woman, what should I do? And, how should I behave while discussing? Tell me, if on the ground of faith or of compassion, could I engage in their businesses?

Answer: We reckon that all the talking to women will harm them who do not understand the godlike things. So, you must avoid that as much as you can. And do not indulge yourself to discussions with women. This is because of not being that beneficial to you, even though they have good behaviors. And if the need drives us sometimes to such a discussion, for some bargaining, or for something else, let's place in our mind, previously this comparison: As a man who gets close to a fire in order to satisfy his needs, he takes care of not being him burnt by that fire, let's us too to take care likewise when approaching women as we would approach fire. And let's assure ourselves on all ways and into the fear of God, in order the seemed benefit not to become a great loss to us. And if we want to live totally into God, we will talk to women through the mediation of some other person. Let's not look them in the face, and let's not throw our glance at them. Let's neither tarry in discussions with women. Because out of this it will be born the fire of the lust. But let's strive to get rid of them in a hurry, while praying God to save us at the time of than need, from the trap laid the devil in front of us. And let's ceaselessly remember God. This is for great is His power that covers our weakness into Christ Jesus our Lord Whom to be the glory forever. Amen.

662. Question: Another loving-of Christ layman asked the Great Oldman whether it is beneficial to him to leave his wife in order him to become a monk.

The answer of Barsanuphius: Son, do not leave her because if you do that you will transgress the commandment of the Apostle that says: "You have tied yourself to your woman, do not search for untying" (1 Cor. 7: 27). This is because otherwise, if she commits sins and if she directs herself towards evil, that sin will fall upon you, except whether the separation has been done with agreement and together advising.

663. Question: Another loving-of Christ layman asked the same Great Oldman, saying: What should I do, because of being is quickly engulfed by passions?

Answer: Do not agree your passions and turn your eyes away in order you not to see vanity, and stop your hands from greediness. And God will liberate you from your passions. So, live decently. And to not eat of drink to your satiation. And so you will humiliate your passions and you will find out your resting[1107].

664. Question: Another loving-of Christ layman, who was a professor in the outside sciences, he asked the Great Oldman if it was good him to advance to a superior level.

[1107] There where the passions are absent, there will be resting: there won't be ambitions, or worries, or envy, or anger, or sadness, or disturbance, or agitation.

Answer: "Do not get haughty" (1 Tim. 6: 17), and you will find grace form God and thankfulness from people, and gather many things there where you are.

665. Question: The same one asked the other Oldman about the same thing.

The answer of John: God has chosen the humble things of the world. Keep your humbleness and God will help you in a hurry.

666. Question: The same one asked the same Oldman John to pray for a possessed man.

Answer: Let him refrain himself as much as he can and they who pray for him will be heard. This is for "much can the working prayer of the righteous" (Jas. 5: 16). And the Lord said: "This nation doesn't get out except by fasts and prayers" (Mt. 17: 21; Mk. 9: 29)[1108].

667. Question: Another loving-of Christ layman askes the same Great Oldman, saying: Some thieves broke into our house because of our sins, but they dint' take anything. Should I set in motion the inquiry for they to be captured, or should I pretend that I know nothing about the whole happening?

Answer: If we reckon that the thieves broke in because of our sins, and God, for His love for people, He didn't allow any harm to be done to us, why would we want to avenge ourselves and not to let all the thing to God's care, as He said: "Mine is the avenge, I will reward" (The Second Law 32: 35; Rom. 12: 19)? If we fear God, when we see them suffering something, we must help them according to our power. But because we haven't reach to such a measure, let's not fall into the vainglory, so that let's do them neither harm nor good[1109]. And let's give thanks to Him Who hasn't done to us according to our sins[1110].

[1108] The fasts and the prayers strengthen the will and they appease the man's disturbance that goes all the way to being possesses. The fasts and the prayers direct the man towards overcoming that what troubles him, by making him aware of the relationship with God.

668. Question: But if the thieves have stolen something from us, what will we have to do?

Answer: It is in the power of the consummate ones to despise everything. And them who are on an inferior level, they can take back the stolen things, or they can let the thieves to keep some of the stolen things, by thinking at their poverty. Sometimes this can make somebody to use the laws disregarded by the thieves. But let's know that this thing is the offshoot of the love for money and it harms our soul. And we transgress the commandment that says: "If somebody want to suit you in a justice court and to take away your coat from you, give him your shirt too" (Mt. 5: 40).

669. Question: Does that mean, Father, that if somebody want to take away my coat form me, I should give him my coat immediately? But there are many evil and cunning people who would gladly deprive somebody of all his things, even though that would mean to leave hi naked.

Answer: That is not said for you to simply give your coat to him who wants to take it away from you. But that is said for him who want to file a suit to you in a justice court, and that means mercilessness and processes which harm the soul. In such a case you must despise the bodily things in exchange for the salvation of your soul. This is for he says: "What will the man benefit if he gained the whole world but he has lost his soul?" (Mt. 10: 26).

[1109] If we do good to the thieves who broke into our house, we will get proud, because of not having us reached the high level of commiserating with the thieves for the passion they suffer of. But we must neither harm them, so that us to avoid adding sins to the sins already had by us.

[1110] Let's thank God for the fact that He hasn't allowed the thieves to rob us according to our sins.

670. Question: But there are some people experienced in processes and they do not get harmed as them who are inexperienced. Won't that be good if the last ones entrust the first ones to represent them in court?

Answer: Even thought those ones are experienced in court, we still will be the cause of their souly harm. And by comparing the two evils, this one is not smaller. This is because, if ourselves go to court that will harm our soul. But if those ones are harmed like we are, we will ourselves be the cause of their harm, and they harm turns back to us and we will suffer the same harm. This is because it was written: "The evil must come, but, woe to him whom the evil come through" (Lk. 17: 1). And if, instead of being content for being delivered from such troubles, somebody strive to hurt his enemies and make them suffer, this thing will be worse than anything and it will anger God Who asked us not to payback the evil with evil (Rom. 12: 17); and "forgive and you will be forgiven" (Mt. 6: 14; Lk. 6: 37).

671. Question: When there is the need for one to testify about a real killer, should lie to escape that killer from death?

Answer: If you do not lie for anything, you won't lie for that either. This is for it was written: "Do not have mercy on the poor at the judgment" (Exod. 23: 3). This is for, if it is not the will of God, that killer won't die. And if somebody lies regarding other things too, and if he wants to lie in this case as well, let him do as he used to. This is for it was written: "he who does the sin he does lawlessness too" (1 Jn. 3: 4). I do not want to decide these things. And if you do not need to testify, you need not to say anything. We have regarding this, the saying: "Telling I don't know, it won't throw anybody in jail".

762. (V. 672-673). Question: If somebody has rich debtors, can he ask for interests? And if the debtors are poor, can be ask them to pay back the money he lent them?

Answer: It was written about the righteous one that "he didn't give his silver by asking for interest" (Ps. 14: 5[1111]). And this means that we can ask back the sum of money lent by us. But if some people cannot pay us back the money that they owe to us, about those ones was written: "If your brother is in need, do not burden him with your asks" (Sirach 31: 31[1112]).

673. (V. 674) Question: If my debtor is poor but I too am poor, won't I commit sin asking him for my money because I need that money?

Answer: You won't sin, but, if possible, let one not trouble his brother who is unable to pay him back.

674. (V. 675). Question: When I suffer a loss and my heart doesn't get sad. My thought tells me: "This is callousness; you should get sad, firstly, and then you to thank". Does my thought tall me right?[1113]

Answer: We must not get sad at all for anything belonging to this world, but only for our sins[1114].

[1111] In KJB we have: Ps. 15: 5: "He that putteth not out his money to usury, nor taketh reward against the innocent. He that doeth these things shall never be moved."; in ROB we have: "Ps. 14: 5: "His silver he didn't give it by asking for interest, and he didn't take gifts against the innocent. He who does these, he won't ever wobble." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[1112] In the KJB this book, called The Wisdom of Joshua the Son of Sirach (The Ecclesiastes) is not present, but it is given in the ROB. The interested reader can find this book in an English translation on www.academia.edu, together with the other thirteen books not given in the KJB, under the title: Bible Missing Texts. (E. l. t.'s n.)

[1113] Not getting sad for our loss means making no effort for overcoming a hardship caused to you by that loss, and that means no longer living the weakness of the human. Is that state good? – this is the question asked by that disciple.

[1114] The Oldman answered by showing that the capacity of getting sad it is better us to preserve it, but only regarding our sins. Thus, you can be both strong and human. Christ Himself was sad on occasions. He was sad especially because of the death He was to suffer of our sins which he impropriated, and because of the fact that he ought to die in order Him to escape us from a false life. In the answer given to the following question, the Oldman admitted also our sadness for other people. But that is another kind of sadness that that for our own sins. Jesus was sad mostly for us. Or, for he willingly took our human, the whole His sadness was for us, for others.

675. (V. 676). Question: What does it mean: "Rejoicing together with them who rejoice, and crying together with them who cry" (Rom. 12: 14)?

Answer: Rejoicing together with them who rejoice themselves, it means rejoicing together with them who have achieved that virtue according to God and together with them who rejoice for their hope for the future goods. And crying together with them who cry, it means suffering together with them who have sins, when they repent for their sins.

676. (V. 677). Question: If a friend of mine loses a child or some goods, and he gets sad, should I be sad together with him, as a friend of his?

Answer: You should get sad in those things, together with him, lest him, because of too much sadness, him to cogitate something damaging to his soul, because of not being him able to endure that loss with gratitude.

677. (V. 678). Question: Because it was written: "Blessed are the peacemakers (Mt. 5: 9), would it be good for us to strive for the peace of everybody?

Answer: It will be better if we give peace to our own heart[1115]. This should be done by everybody and blessed is him who does that. And reconciling them who fight one another, it doesn't belong to everyone's power, but only to them who can do that without getting harmed. And the weak one must rejoice of the peace of everybody, but he mustn't mediate for the peace of everybody, except for the peace of them who are loved by him according to God. And he can do that only when no harm comes out of that upon his soul.

[1115] You will have done peace within your heart, if you are no longer reproached by the evils done by you, and if you search for getting reconciled with God and with your fellow humans; and if you no longer feel yourself disturbed by anybody and if you do not want to disturb anybody else; and especially if you are no longer disturbed by any passions of yours.

678. (V. 679). Question: When I do something according to God and I am despised by people, I get sad because I have offended them.

Answer: If you are unjustly despised, you mustn't get sad. That is for the devil envies the good and he moves these thing sin order him impede the good. But in the end the devil will be stopped and God will show the glory of the good thing. But if, because of your mistake, you are rightly despised, it will be you who caused shame to yourself. But if you repent for your mistake, that shame will be turned towards joy.

679. (V. 680). Question: Some other loving-of Christ layman, because of enduring evil form somebody, he told the Oldman about that.

Answer: You do him good.

680 (V. 681). Question: By doing these things, he suffered again evil from that one, and he told to the Oldman about that, saying: Lo, I am doing him good, but he doesn't' stop to do me evil.

Answer: You aren't doing good to him, but to yourself. This is for the Lord said: "Do good to your enemies and pray for them who trouble you" (Lk. 6: 27-28). Each one will take according to his deed (Ps. 61: 11[1116])[1117].

681. (V. 682). Question: Another loving-of Christ laymen, who was hosting Fathers, he asked the same Oldman: What should I do, because I am always troubled, because some of the

[1116] In KJG we have: Ps. 62: 11-12: "God hath spoken once; twice have I heard this; that power belongeth unto God. // Also unto thee, O Lord, belongeth mercy: for thou renderest to every man according to his work."; in ROB we have: Ps. 61: 11: "God spoke once, I hear this two things: that the power belong to God and Yours, Lord, it is the mercy; for You rewards each one according to his deeds." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[1117] You will all the more grow up as you do not receive thanks for recipient of the good done by you. You are twofold victorious: by being a good and by suffering the evil for the good you have done.

Fathers come and I have not the things I need for accommodating them?

Answer: This is a devilish thought. It will suffice to the Fathers the things you have, according to the saying: "Be content with the things you have" (Hebr. 13: 15). And God will make them content by letting them know. This is because, if one complains about the absence of these things, he cannot host anymore, but he prays for nobody to come to visit him. And when you have something that you can place on the table before them, do not do that with avarice, even though you have hosted them previously for thousands of time, their heart will remain, because of being they heralded, discontent, and you can do that only in case you need that for a bigger need, maybe for giving that to some ill people or to some more important persons. This is for one must do everything with right-reckoning. And if you smut go somewhere else, you will not expect to find there a great resting (feast). And do not get disturbed if you do not find that. This is because, if you expect that and you do not find it, you will gossip and the gossiping is the death of the soul. But be grateful in everything. This is for that is the spiritual and beneficial to the soul food and hosting (resting)[1118].

682. (V. 683). Question: But what should I do if the didn't allow me to enter at all and I was tired due to traveling and I need food?

Answer: Think at Who is the One taking care of everyone and Who feeds all the people. That is God. So, if God wanted to feed you, He would urge those to receive you. And if they didn't receive you, it would be obvious that God didn't' want that and they are not guilty for not receiving you. This is for all the things are done towards the proving and the salvation of the man, in order the man to endure that and to condemn on himself in everything as unworthy.

[1118] Towards what gentle relationships these advices lead, and not only externally.

683. (V. 684). Question: Another loving-of Christ layman askes the same Oldman John: I am filled with fear by a thought telling me: The devil makes you to commit sins, even despite you don't want that, for you have made yourself debtor to the devil[1119].

Answer: Do not reckon that the devil has power against somebody. If that had bene the case, the cause of the sin wouldn't have been due to our will, but it would have been due to the force of him who would have received such a power. Like the man is not dragged forcedly to his salvation, likewise he is not dragged forcedly to any sin. Did the devil deceive Eva with his power, not with his advice? There cannot be seen the power anywhere. If the devil had been given the power nobody would have dared to run away from him. So, we are like a fee man who enslaved himself to somebody by his own will, but at a certain time he comes to his senses and he repents. But he that slave doesn't run to somebody who is more powerful that his current master, he cannot gain back his freedom. And if he does that, the current master know that he is not really that slave's master and he won't dare to do any harm to the slave, because he fears that master how is more powerful than he is. Therefore, it is proven that the devil has no power over the man. So, you too should tall to your thought: "Yes, I owe him, but I have run to Him Who ca set me free and He told me: "Come to me all of you who are tired and burdened and I will rest you" (Mt. 11: 28). "And I must always take vigil in order I not to fall again in his hands". And if your thought tells you again: "If he cannot force you to commit sin, behold that since now you no longer will be submitted to the sin" and your thought burden you by telling you that, you will answer your thought like this: "If you tell me that from now on, I will not commit sins, I won't believe you until I will enter the stronghold. This is because, even if one traveled the entire road, and only a mile remained, and he fell there, he wound; t benefit anything for that trip. This is because he still is outside the stronghold". So, let's throw our helplessness in front of God and He will stop the plots done against you, through the prayers of the saints. Amen.

[1119] Reckoning that you have received something from the devil. So that you must pay the devil back by committing a sin, even though you do not want to sin. It is here a discouraging fatalism.

684. (V. 685). Question: The locusts destroy my field. If I chase thema way, my neighbors will get angry on me. If I allow them stay, I will loss the harvest. What should I do?

Answer: Take sanctified water and spread your crops with it and if you can banish the locusts away or to destroy them peacefully and without strifing with anybody, that won't be a sin. And if that gives birth to strife, let that thing in the acre of God towards the benefit of your soul. And anything happens, it happened by the will of God.

685. (V. 686(. Question): But, Master, if we must banish the anger of God in all things, won't we anger God by doing that?

Answer: They who are consummate they do not banish away the anger of God. But they fully hope in God. But because we still are bodily and we need the earthly tings, we banish it while condemning ourselves as sinners. And that's why we do that with prayer and by singing of psalms, and praying God to forgive us[1120] and striving ourselves to thank God from now on. This is for the evils won't stop afflicting us without us repenting and being merciful. This is for he says: "Blessed are the merciful, for they will find mercy" (Mt. 5: 7). And you must not say: "Why God Who sends His anger towards our correction, He lets them who don't repent to banish His anger away?". This is for God sends his anger as a menace, in order us to repent. But God allows us to banish His anger away from us for He has long-patience and He waits for us to turn ourselves towards Him. But if we persist in the same evil deeds even after we have banished away His anger, we will fall into giver evils[1121]. And so [1120] God allows the hardships to come upon us for He wants to turn us from evil. But we try to get rid of hardships, and we do that by praying and by repenting. And that helps our urge towards correction, towards turning ourselves to God. Actually, God Himself will deviate the hardships from us, for He knows also that out of the fruits of our field, helped by Him, we will give away alms. If all the things belong to God, they don't belong only to us but they belong to other people as well. This is for God gives the material good for everyone. God doesn't separate Himself for each of us. But the act of communication from ones to others there must be activated the love and the mercy among us, and not our pride.

[1121] The stubbornness into evil with all the hardships coming upon us, it will increase the evil from within us, because of making our being ever more callous. And this is the biggest evil.

is fulfilled with us the prophetical word: "I treated Babylon but it didn't heal" (Jer. 28: 9). And he cannot expect something else but "the eternal torments and the outer darkness[1122] and that worm spitting venom and the gnashing of teeth" (Mt. 8: 12; Mk. 9: 49).

683. (V. 687). Question: Another loving-of Christ layman asked: I want to press in my winepress some grapes for a Jew. Will that be a sin?

Answer: If God giving rain over your field, He wouldn't allow the rain falling upon the Jews field, neither you will press his wine. But if the love of God reaches everyone, and if God sends rain over righteous and over unrighteous, why would we want to be inhuman and not rather merciful, as God Himself says: "Be merciful as your Father form heaven merciful is" (Lk. 6: 36)?

687. V. 688). Question: If somebody entrusts me with a thing, and he asks me not to tell anybody about that, and some other man swears me to tell him about that, why will I do? If I talk about that, I will upset him who has entrusted me with that thing. If I don't talk about that, I will upset him who swears; and I fear his oath.

Answer: If he asks for that by swearing, he will be the one bearing that sin[1123]. So, you must not unveil the secret of your

That will make us lose our habituation oof repenting and of getting softened, despite all the endures evils. This allows us to understand the eternal hell, as it will be said in continuation. Likewise, persevering in good means advancing into good, it means progressing into kindness, it means getting a softened and communicative heart.

[1122] The "eternal torment": you will be tormented in evilness, in pride, without having any chance to get rid of those by repentance. The "outer darkness": the extreme loneliness, outside any communication with the life coming to you out of the connection of love with other people and with God Who is the supreme Person-like water-spring. The "secreting-venom worm": the pride that secretes the venom of the tormenting stubbornness, and that chews you continuously. The "gnashing of teeth": of disgust, but also of void, of boredom, and of stubbornness.

[1123] One can see that back then it was the custom that one not only sworn upon himself, btu also upon another: "I swear you to tell me". And the sworn one feared that oath too. Not admitting that oath meant hiding something. Admitting that oath meant becoming trustless.

brother, by invoking the oath as reason. You tell that one: "If you entrusted me with something, would you like me to unveil that secret to somebody else? So, if you wouldn't like that, neither ask me to tell you the secrets of that brother. This is for it was said: "That what you do not like to be done to you, you to do not done that to your brother" (Thes. 4: 16); and again: "That what you want the people to do to you, you too do them the same" (Mt. 7: 12; Lk. 6: 31).

688. (V. 689). Question: Why should I think? That every man is righteous, or that I am more sinner than everyone? This is for I find it difficult to reckon that any man is righteous[1124].

Reckon yourself the most sinner and the most unimportant of all people and you will have resting.

698. (V. 960). Question: When I talk to somebody about the "Lives of the Fathers" and about their "Answers" (they Apophthegmata: Paterikon), my heart cogitates big things. Tell me, how should I talk with humble cogitation? And whom should I tell those things to? And on what purpose?

Answer: When you talk about the "Lives of the Fathers" and about their "Answers", you must condemn on yourself, saying: "Woe to me because I am talking about the virtues of the Fathers and I haven't gained any of them. I haven't reached any progress and I am sitting on this chain talking to others' benefit. I wonder, it won't be fulfilled with me the saying of the Apostle: "You who teach others, don't you learn yourself" (Rom. 2: 21). And by telling these things to yourself, your heart will be burning and you fill be speaking humbly. But you must take heed at whom you are talking to. If you know that that person will benefit of your teaching, you will talk to him. If not, you won't need to speak. This is because it was written: "Blessed is Only him who gained a proven name as a man who didn't lie, only such a man could escape this requirement from others.

[1124] It is more difficult to reckon anyone righteous than to reckon that there is no man without sin but you are the most sinner among people. The Oldman approves the second thought, but the Oldman asked him, in the same time, not to occupy himself with the thought that everyone is righteous, so that him not to judge the people in any way.

him who talks to the ear of them who listen to him". It is good neither to give the holy things to the dogs nor to throw pearls before the pigs (Mt. 7: 6). May the Lord make you wise, brother, so that you won't lost the way of the humbleness.

690. (V. 691). Question: Two loving-of Christ laymen truly loves one another into the Lord and they were guides through live by the Fathers. One of them, in a discussion, he told a word about somebody else. The other brother, because of devil's kidnapping, he suspected that that brother was referring to him, and he got very upset. The first one, assured him that he wasn't speaking about him, but he didn't let himself persuaded. And from here, because of occurring between them a little strife, they both came to the Fathers and told about that thing to the same Oldman who answered them.

Answer: I am telling you all the truth in front of God, as to ones who are of the same soul. Both of you owe to prostrate in front of God[1125]. But not with indifference, but with the whole your heart, so that God will forgive you with the prayers of your Fathers. You, because of reckoning yourself as defamed, you didn't endure the defamation, so that you to say: "I have mistaken and I am wholly a sin, because my brother got upset because of me". And you, the another, because before taking you hadn't specified that you were not talking about him and that you have nothing to say against him, until your very death. On the other hand, you too haven't patience within you. Still, you are not guilty. But we are the cause of the evils because of not making prayers[1126]. This is because, if we prayed for you, you would be protected against the cunning one who sown the tares between you, in order to tempt you. This is for we usually ask this for you: you to be protected. Fear the judgment of God, [1125] "Prostration" means in Greek both repentance and the bowing down of the man before God and before his fellow humans. Between these two there is a connection. You bow down before somebody, asking for his forgiveness because of some mistake you have done.

[1126] These deep and subtle intertwinings among people cannot be unveiled but into an accentuated spiritual life. They show us that their source cannot be but a supreme intertwining of interpersonal order: the Holy Trinity, which the Three Persons aren't into a motionless uniformity, but in an alive, delicate, and extremely subtle and complex communication. Only this can lead the mankind to the peak of the gentlest relationships. "I am guilty for you because of not praying for you". That goes all the way to a substitution of selves but without merging those selves.

so that the people, not to be offended by you, saying: “Behold that the sons of the Fathers have no patience, but they start one against another”. And if you feel shame to prostrate to one another with a full heart, behold that we will do that for you. This is for this shame touches us. May the Lord forgive you and protect you against the evil one. And may the Lord quickly crush the evil one under your feet. Be you of one soul and of one thinking and of one faith into the Lord. May the Lor4d support you so that you to remain steadfastly into His fear. Amen.

691. (V. 692). Question: Another loving-of Christ layman who was hosting the Fathers, he sent a letter to the same Oldman asking him if it will be useful to him to totally reject the world and to come to the monastic life. And the Oldman wrote him back that the most consummate life is the life into withdrawal, that one reckoned that as a commandment and he got very sad and he thought not to ask the Fathers about anything anymore. The Oldman knew that in his ghost and he asked to be written to that brother the following things:

Answer: Before all, we embrace your love into the Lord. And we urge you to quickly reject your sadness thought and to read and to joyfully understand into the fear of God the things wrote to you in the previous epistle. This is because I didn’t write to you anything as a commandment, because of knowing the word of the Apostle that sys: “I do not mean to set you a trap” (1 Cor. 7: 25). But I showed you what individual benefit has each of the things done by us. It was that what everybody understood the Lord like, for after He says in the Gospels that what is written into the Law: “You shall not commit adultery, you shall not kill etc.” (Mt. 19: 18), and he who was asked he answered: “I have been keeping all of these, what I need more”, the Lord talked to him about consummation: “If you want to be consummate, sell your wealth” and the other things as you know.

But the hater of the good always tries to impede all the good things. This is because, by seeing the benefit of the thing wrote to you by me, even before you knowing the meaning of the written things, the hater of the good disturbed a little your thought. It is amazing what that one cover the man’s mind like, by kidnapping the man's thought, in order the man not to benefit at all. And that one doesn't allow the man to ask on himself why is himself getting upset, and to tell to himself: "Why are you sad, my soul? And why do you trouble me? Hope in God, for I will confess myself to Him" and the other things (Ps. 41: 6[1127]). He does that in order to prove to the man that, if the written things were from holy people, they would bring him help and not disturbance and temptation. But him who is awake in his mind he can see that even the Apostles got disturbed through faithlessness, when they saw their Master and Savior Christ. This is for This One told them: "Why are you troubled? And what the doubts climb into your hearts for?" (Lk. 24: 30). And the peace immediately followed His words. Us too, if we read the written things into the peace of our heart, we would find out that we are not compelled to produce as it is written, a hundred out of one, or sixty, or at least thirty, as the third one (Mt. 13: 8). We would find out that the written things are all of them beneficial to us. This is because, by not being us able to fulfill that what is consummate, we strive in the present time because we only fulfill the deed of the hosting, in order us not to get haughty in our thought that we do some big thing, by seeing that we haven't reached to do that what is consummate. But not in order to reject the things you are doing now, I wrote the things comprised in the previous epistle, but in order you to come to what is bigger or, by remaining into that what you are, I to make you use for that the humbling into thought. Do not wander yourself about temptations either. This is for we have been commanded: "Rejoice when you reach into many sorts of temptations" (Jas. 1: 2). One among the Holy Fathers was asked once about a certain brother: "What is this, Abba, that every time I want to go to bed and I tire up myself by praying, and I seal myself[1128], in that night I dream fornication thoughts. And if I do not pray neither seal myself, I won't dream". And the Oldman answered him, saying: "This is done by the devils, out of their cunningness, in order to make you renounce to prayer and to sealing. This is for the devils know that out of prayer and sealing there comes help to the man". You too, if you ask the [1127] In KJB we have: Ps. 42: 5: "Why art thou cast down, O my soul? and why art thou disquieted in me?"; in ROB we have" Ps. 41: 6: "What are you sad for, my soul, and what are you trouble me for?" (E. l. t.'s n.)

Fathers and for a short while you are troubled by the devils for the words of the Fathers, do not avoid asking the Fathers back about their words told to you. The Fathers do not command anything harming or difficult. This is for the Fathers are the disciples of Him Who said: "My yoke is gentle and my burden is light" (Mt. 11: 30). And in the end, we are going to find out the fruit of their benefit. And then we are going to shout out, together with the Psalmist: "You have turned my pain into joy" (Ps. 29: 11[1129]).

692. (V. 693). Question: Another loving-of Christ layman asked the same Oldman: I happen to me, when I talk to someone, that I get suddenly scattered, so that it seems to me that I am outside myself and I forget about that what I am speaking; my mind isn't driven towards something else, but it gets out of itself. What is this, Father? For I am very troubled.

Answer: This is a devilish war, one that wants to shame up a man in front of his interlocutors. But if you let your interlocutors openly know about that, by telling them: "Forgive me, because the devil has scattered me", that war will cease and the shame will be turned over the devil himself. And then you will talk with watchfulness. And that what has happened will be reckoned as nothing. But he who doesn't do like that, he will cause much shame to himself[1130]. But the remembrance of the name of God will stop all the evils, and it will strengthen our helplessness. Amen[1131].

693. (V. 694). Question: A loving-of Christ layman, who was very restrained and very careful regarding his soul, he sent to be asked the same Oldman: Is it beneficial to somebody to do that what it seems him as good, or should he ask the Fathers in the first place?

[1129] In KJB we have: Ps. 30: 11: "Thou hast turned for me my mourning into dancing: thou hast put off my sackcloth, and girded me with gladness;"; in ROB we have: Ps. 29: 11: "You have changed my weeping into joy, You have broken apart my sackcloth and You have girdled me with gladness." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[1130] In the Volos Edition: with the sign of the cross.

[1131] So, you can talk to others while you are thinking at God. And thinking at God will keep you awake in the things discussed by you with other people. This happened when you talk about serious things, while you are full of responsibility in front of God.

Answer: If somebody reckoned by himself that a thing is good, and he doesn't ask the Fathers, he will be outside the law and he will have not worked according to the law. And he who does something after asking the Father about it, he fulfills the law and the prophets. This is for asking is the sign of the humbleness. And one who asks is a follower to Christ Who humbled Himself all the way to make Himself a servant (Phil. 2: 6). And the man who has no adviser is a cause of war to himself. This is for he says: "Do everything with counsel" (Ps. 72: 23[1132]). And John Colovos says: "If you see somebody younger ascending to heavens, catch him by his legs and throw him down" (Apophtegmes de la série anonyme su manuscrit Coislin 126, partially published in Revue d'Orient chrétien, 1907-1913, p. 165, no. 111). So, it is more useful one to humbly ask somebody than one to do whatever he wants. This is for, actually God is the One Who puts into the mouth of the asked one what he should answer, for the humbleness of the heart and for the righteousness of him who asks the questions[1133].

694. Question: If I sat together with the Fathers and they talk about faith and they resist to someone among those who doesn't cogitate rightly, should I too resist together with the Fathers, or not? This is for my thought tells me: "If you were silent, you would betray the faith". And if there took place a simple discussion about the dogma, should I tell the things I know about that, or should I keep my silence? And if I were asked, what should I do?

[1132] In KJB we have: Ps. 73: 24: "Thou shalt guide me with thy counsel, and afterward receive me to glory."; in ROB we have: Ps. 72: 23: "You have grabbed me by my right hand. With Your advice You have advised me and with glory You have received me." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[1133] Itself the experience proves us that when somebody humbles himself by asking us for an advice, there is wakened up within us the responsibility for forcing ourselves to cogitate at the best answer we could give him. The openness of that one's hear makes us too to open your heart to him. And in this real encounter between the two persons, through the openness of their hearts, there will be felt and transparent the presence of God. This is for we have surpassed on ourselves and on one another, in front of a forum that is superior to us.

Answer: Do not allow yourself even to be attracted into disputed on the faith. This is for God doesn't ask you for that. But you must believe rightly, as you have received from the Holy Church and at your Baptism and you must fulfill God's commandments. You must keep those and you will be saved. You must not talk about dogmas. This is because of being the dogmas above you. But you must pray God for your sins. Let your mind be occupied with these things. But take heed at not yourself in order you not to condemn them who talk about dogmas. This is because you do not know whether they speak rightly or wrongly, and how God judged that what they say. And if you are asked about something; you will answer: "These things exceed my power. Forgive me, Holy Fathers".

695. (V. 696). Question: But if in that dispute the heretic surrounded the rightly-believer by words, wouldn't that be I to come to help him, the best I could, lest him to be defeated so that he would wobble in his faith?

Answer: If you start to speak in front of God and of the people, that is like a teaching. But if somebody starts teaching someone while not having the needed power, his word will be unconvincing and unfruitful. So, if you do not bring any benefit, it will be useless for you to speak[1134]. But if you want to help at any costs, you will talk to God within your heart, for He know the hidden things and He can do more than we ask Him for, and Hew will do His will with them who are in that dispute, and you will find humbleness out of that thing. Suppose that somebody throws forcedly an innocent man into jail, unjustly, but somebody else who have seen that what has happened, and because he cannot resist that thing to happen or because of not being able to change that what has been done, and he will secretly go and inform a more powerful man and that powerful man will liberate him who has been jailed abusively; he who has abusively thrown that man into jail will get disturbed, but he didn't know who announced that man who is more powerful than he is. It is likewise here. Let's run to God into faith and for our brothers into the prayer of the heart. And Him Who has [1134] Any discussion about God it is like a teaching to the dialogue partner. But if you do not have power to teach others and to convince them, do not talk to them.

sworn into Himself that "He wants all the people to be saved and to come to the knowledge of the life" (1 Tim. 2: 4), He will do with them as He wills.

696. (V. 697). Question: Must I not even examine the established things in order I to know them when I hear an opposition?

Answer: Do not study anything that God doesn't ask from you. Neither utter dangerous words, but be content with confessing the right-faith and do not search for anything more.

697. (V. 698). Question: If the discussion is about texts form the Scripture, will I keep my silence, or will I talk? And if there happened that they were in doubt regarding something, will it be good I to speak up, or not?

Answer: The silence if better. But if the doubt about something and you know that thing, in order you to remove the doubt, you will tell, humbly, that what you know. But if you do not know that thing, do not say anything out of your cogitation. This is because that is insanity.

698. (V. 699). Question: If the discussion is about things which don't harm the soul, will I keep my silence, or will I talk?

Answer: It is not good to speak before you being asked for speaking. And if you are asked for speaking, you will tell that what you know, with humbleness and with fear of God, neither getting haughty of your word will be accepted, nor getting sad if you word won't be accepted. This is for this is the way of God. And in order you not to give the impression of being a taciturn, you will tell from yourself that what you know, by using a few words, and you will be delivered of the much-speaking and of the inappropriate glory.

699. (V. 700). If somebody asked me for I to give Nestorius and the heretics who follow him, to anathema, should I do that or not?

Answer: It is obvious that Nestorius and they who follow him are heretics and they are under anathema. But you must not hurry up in giving somebody to anathema, regardless who he will be. This if for he who reckons himself a sinner he must cry for his sins and nothing more. But you neither should judge them who give somebody to anathema. This is for each one must examine on himself (1 Cor. 11: 28).

700. (V. 701). But if somebody reckoned that I too cogitate as he does, what should I tell him?

Answer: Tell him: "Although it is obvious that those ones are worthy of anathema, I am more sinner than any man; and I fear let by judging another I to condemn myself. This is because even if I gave satan to anathema, because I do his deeds, I will give myself to anathema. This is for our Lord said: "If you love Me, you will keep My commandments" (Jn. 14: 15). And the Apostle says: "If somebody doesn't love the Lord, let him be anathema" (1 Cor. 16: 22). So, he who doesn't fulfill the Lord's commandments, he doesn't love Him. And he who doesn't love Him, he is under anathema. So, how could such a man anathemize another man?"[1135].

Tell him these things and if he insisted in the same request, you would put, for his conscience, the anathema on the heretic.

[1135] This is a tight cogitating; he who reckon himself as a sinner – and who could not to – he must reckon himself as being under anathema, or separated from God. But he who reckons that he is separated from God, how will him be able to declare another as separated from God and how could him judge that one for his separation, as long as himself is separated too? By that he will judge himself. Of, he claims by doing that that he would be united with the Lord, and he reckons another as worse than he is. But he hasn't the right to do that. But the bishops gather din synod they can put anathema on heretics. This is for they do not to that as particular person, but the Church is doing it through them.

701. (V. 702). Question: But if I didn't know if somebody is heretic or not, would I put anathema as I was requested to, or not?

Answer: Tell him: "Brother, I do not know what does think him whom you are telling me about. And putting anathema on somebody whom I do not know, it seems to me as condemning on myself. I am telling you this: I do not know any other faith except that of the 318 Holy Fathers. And he who cogitate a different faith than this, he has thrown himself under anathema".

702. (V. 703). Question: If a persecution tarted, why should I do? Should I stay or should I live?

Answer: Ask your spiritual Fathers and do whatever they will tell you to do. Do not follow your own judgment, in order you not to endanger yourself because of your nescience.

703. (V. 704). Question: And if I couldn't meet the Fathers I trust to ask about that, at the moment of that need, why should I do? Should I stay in order I not to seem that I betrayed the faith, or should I run away because of fearing my defeat?

Answer: Stay at prayer and pray with the whole your heart to the Loving-of-people God, telling Him: "Master, have mercy on me for Your kindness, and do not let me deviate from Your will, neither surrender me to this present trial towards my perdition". And do this for three times, like the Savior did, at the time He was surrendered. And after that, if you see yourself full of assertiveness for staying and for enduring - as strengthened by the grace of God – all the torments coming to you up to your death, you will stay. But if you see the fear within your heart, you will leave and you won't reckon that by doing that you will have betrayed the faith. This is for God doesn't ask somebody that what exceeds that somebody's power. And if you stayed while having the fear within yourself, it could happen that, because of not being you able to endure the coming troubles and torments, you could betray the truth and so you would attract to you the eternal punishment.

704. (V. 705). Question: If I reached unwillingly into a trial, what should I do?

Answer: Throw all your care upon the Loving-of-people God (1 Pt. 5: 7), saying: "Master, I haven't received this circumstance as one who has power, but unwillingly. That's why, for Your kindness, and for the prayers of Your saints, don't allow me to betray the holy faith".

705. (V. 706): What must I pray the Fathers like, for they to forgive my sins: "Forgive me!", or "Ask forgiveness for me!"?

Answer: When we pry them who went to the Lord, we must say: "Forgive me!". And when we ask for that, to them who still are among us, we must say: "Pray for us to be forgiven!"[1136].

706. (V. 706 b). Question: And when I pray the Master Himself, how must I say?

Answer: You must say: "Have mercy on me, Master, for Your Holy Martyrs and for the Holy Fathers, and forgive my sins for their mediations". This is for also the Prophet said: "For Abraham, Your servant" (Dan. 3: 35). And even the Lord Himself said: "I am going to defend this city for Me and for Davind, My servant" (4 Kings[1137] 19: 34; 20: 6)[1138].

[1136] The saints who left us are higher. They have crosses over the helplessness of the temptation. They are definitively strengthened into good. And by that, being them definitively and consummately near to the Lord and united with Him, we can ask for themselves to forgive us. But we must be aware of the fact that the Lord Himself forgives us through them. To them who still, are among us, we only ask them for praying for us, in order the Lord to rejoice of our humbleness and for our love which strengthen the communion among us. But we also can pray them for our forgiveness, for the mistakes we have done to them. But to the saints who passed away from us we pray for a general forgiveness.

[1138] Even when we pray God directly, it is appropriate us to mention also the prayers of the saints for us, namely to bring the saints too as our supporters, aiming to create an atmosphere of general love, and that will be pleasant to God, due to the fact of being shown that that love that spring out of Him it is lives by people in a real manner. The Lord doesn't stay isolated. Neither we must isolate from one another in our relationship with the Lord. This is the

707. Question: I a were among worldly people and they started speaking uselessly, should I stay or should I go?

Answer: If you didn't need to stay, you should go. If you needed to stay, you should move you mind to prayer, but not by condemning those people but by admitting your weakness.

708. Question: And if those were my friends, would you command me to change the subject for another more useful one?

Answer: If you know that they receive with pleasure the word of God, you will speak them out of the "Lives of the Saints" and you will direct the discussion upon the salvation of the soul.

709. Question: Will that be good if somebody calls the name of God during a dialogue?

Answer: One must call upon the name of God both during a dialogue as also before and after that dialogue, and every time and everywhere. This is for it was written; "Pray incessantly" (1 Thes. 5: 17). Thus the temptations will be banished.

710. Question: How can one pray incessantly?

Answer: When somebody is alone, he must sing psalms with his mouth[1139] as well and to pray out of his heart. But if Church; our permanent communion, one that increases as each of us progresses as person, that is actually a heareth of love. This is wanted by the Lord: Him to gather everybody together within Himself through their love among themselves, and Him to surrender them together with Himself through the same love of His and of all the ones gathered within Him, to the Father (Col. 1: 20; Eph. 1: 22; 1 Cor. 15: 28). That's why also Saint Apostle Paul prays for everybody (Eph. 1: 16). Has he ceased after his passing away to continue praying for us? Has he ceased showing his love for us by praying for us?

[1139] The sensing of psalms doesn't necessarily mean singing. But any uttered prayer received a rhythm, an internal harmony, that is like some sort of a singing. Only the hurried prayer doesn't have this order, but it is united with disorder. This elevated the words of the prayer above their limited meaning, and it produces the sentiment that God is a mystery uniting all somebody is in the market place, or accompanied by some other people, he won't need to sing psalms with his mouth, but only in his thought. But he mut guard his eyes not to wander around and not to fall into the enemy's traps.

711. Question: When I pray or when I sing psalms and I do not feel the power of the said things[1140] because of the callousness of my heart, what do I benefit of that?

Answer: If you don't feel that power, the devils will still feel it, so that they will tremble with fear. So, do not cease the singing of psalms and the prayers. And, gradually, your callousness will be softened through God.

712. Question: When I am near to a church and they utter the threefold song, but I sit together with the Fathers and with the laymen, will I utter that too while sitting, or not?

Answer: If there are Fathers, you will do that what they do. And if there are laymen and you know that they will be offended, it is good you to spare their conscience and to do that what they do. But you can utter that song also while sitting together with them. And if something impeded you from uttering it, it will suffice you to think at it. And if there are no people superior to you in rank, you will stand up and utter that song. And it won't be wrong to urge them too to stand up. And they will do whatever they will want.

713. If I am alone and I hold in my hands some things which impede me from standing up, what will I do?

Answer: If you cannot stand up, to not be troubled about it. This is for all the things must be done with judgment and with right-reckoning.

realities in an order. It produces the happy feeling of God's presence and help. Only after gathered into Christ the creation will get rid of disorder.

[1140] The "power" (δύναμη) of the words means in Grek also their meaning. Right the meaning conquers by having a certain power in itself. The words have power over him who utters them or hears them, when that one is aware of their meaning.

714. Question: If I visited some Fathers and they insisted for I to stay longer, but I had a business forcing me to leave, what should I do?

Answer: If they are able to discern the things as God wants to, you will tell them humbly: "Forgive me, but I have a task forcing me to leave". And you will do whatever they will tell you to do, without feeling your souls burdened, and believing that that will be beneficial to you. And if they are not like that, and if your business forces you to leave, you will cut that discussion off, and you will prostrate yourself fin front of them in order you to leave. And if they continue to insist, you will tell them: "Forgive me, but it is impossible to me to stay".

715. Question: If I sat at the table together with some of the Fathers and one of them blessed the food, should I say before start eating: "Bless!" and then I to wait until he blesses again? Or should I be satisfied with the first blessing? This is because of happening him to think at something else and so he could be late in blessing, and I get troubled because of that. Or, it is good that when I stretch my hand to grab some food, I to mark the food with the sign of the cross?

Answer: Once he blessed, it will be superfluous to bless the food again. Regarding the sign of the c ross, that too will be unnecessary. This is for in the blessing there was the sign of the cross as well. And why to elicit him who blessed the food, or to somebody else, the thought that you would not believe his blessing, and by that you to cause offense?

716. Question: If the Father visited by me asked me to bless the food placed on the table, should I accept that or not?

Answer: Do not accept that, but tell them: "I am not a priest, neither I have the monastic schism, but I am a layman and a sinner. And this is above my power. Forgive me, for the Lord".

717. Question: If all of us sitting at the table were laymen, what we should do, once not having anybody to bless the food?

Answer: It is good for the laymen too to bless God when they share themselves with food[1141]. This is for the food is being sanctifies by calling upon the name of God. But this blessing is not like the blessing of the clergy. But this blessing is a doxology and a calling upon the name of God. And it is due to everybody to call upon the name of God and they to extoll God. So, it will be good for the laymen also to do this, if they have not one who can bless the food.

718. Question: If they hesitated regarding who should be the fist to utter the blessing and each one refused to do the blessing himself, what should we do?

Answer: He who invited them to the table, he must ask whomever he wants, and the chosen one should do the blessing. And if nobody accepted to utter the blessing, in order thee not to occur a dispute, he who invited them to sit at the table should himself say: "For the prayer of the Holy Fathers, may the Lord be with us. Amen".

719. Question: You told me that it is good for the laymen too to call upon the name of God before they start eating, so that by calling upon the name of God the food to be sanctified. It is good for the mentioned verse uttered before the bread has been placed on the table?

Answer: It can be uttered that verse. But because somebody tell in prayer: "Bless the food place in front of us!", it is goo and appropriate to be the prayer told when the food have been already placed on the table.

[1141] In the note at Volos Edition: Or to say "Our Father" at lunch, and "The poor will eat" in the evening, or "For the prayer of our Fathers".

720. Question: If the Fathers asked me to judge some things but I didn't trust myself too much, what should I do? Shoulr I accept that, or should I reject it? And should I tell them that what seemed appropriate to me, or should I ask, previously, them who know better and then I would judge?

Answer: For the commandment of the Fathers you should accept and tell them who are sued: "I am going to judge according to what seems to me as right". And take heed to judge righteously and not to lean your heart towards any of those because of your passion, of because of your desire to be you pleasant to him, but you will tell that what seems to you as right. This is for God Who is the only One knowing the truth, He will judge your intention. And if you can ask also somebody who knows better than you, it won't be wrong if you do that too.

721. Question: If that thing needed an oath, should I ask them to swear, nor not?

Answer: Do not ever force anybody to swear. This is because God has forbidden us to swear. But you will tell them: "This thing requires you to take an oath. If you want to do that, it depends on you". But if you have been ordered by the state's authority to judge, you will be forced to ask the sued ones to take an oath. This is for you firstly must carefully establish the circumstances and then you to decide, by not taking in account anything else.

722. Question: If I were next to an older man, or next to a superior who was reading, and he mistook some words or accents, and I knew the correct variant, should I tell him or not?

Answer: If you know that he will listen to you with pleasure, you will tell him. And if not, you won't tell him anything. Take heed at yourself in order you not to be stolen into your thought by vain-glory. This is because of being more profitable to you if you have kept your silence, than to tell him out of your vain-glory.

723. Question: Another loving-of Christ layman asked the same Oldman: If some monk asked me to accompany him to do something that didn't seem to me as being according to the will of God, what should I do?

Answer: If that thing is not according to the will of God, you won't accompany him, but you will stay away from that thing and you will tell him the truth: "As far as I am concerned, this thing doesn't seem right to me". And if that thing is according to God and it doesn't harm your soul in any regard, you will accompany him for you will be rewarded. But if that thing harms you, you will stay away from that thing. This is for God doesn't ask you to do something hurtful to your soul.

724. Question: When I see somebody cursing or doing injustice to a monk, I get disturbed. Do I do rightly or wrongly?

Answer: Nothing that causes disturbance is good, but it is the work of the devil, even though it will be motivated as good. So, if you get disturbed, you won't tell anything, because otherwise you will disturb that one too. And this is because the evil cannot be abolished by evil[1142]. And if you do not allow yourself to be disturbed, tell that one gently: "Don't you fear the sin, by unjustly cursing on Abba (on the monk)? Don't you know that the schism (the monastic clothes) he wears, it belongs to God and God will get angry?". And by talking to him like that you will find yourself speaking according to the will of God. And powerful is God, so that God tames that man as He wills.

725. Question: Another loving-of Christ layman asked the same Oldman: I have a process in court with somebody for something. What do you command me to do? Should I ask for full justice from him or should I not search for that fulness but to end the process as soon as possible?

[1142] The irritation caused in the soul by a passion it extends like a flame within another's soul. Both the evil and the good have a contagious power within them. The good has the power for strengthening us and for making us masters over ourselves, while the evil has the power for weakening us and for disorganizing us. I must not allow myself to be disturbed by evil in order I not to transmit that evil to somebody else.

Answer: Strive, as much as you can, to be delivered as quickly as possible. This is for it is characteristic to the consummate men not to get disturbed when the temptations come. And the weak one, by postponing the reconcilement, he later comes to the sorrow. And because of having to blame on himself, he rather starts the blasphemy towards God and he loses his soul. And it is fulfilled with him the word: "What will benefit the man if he gained the whole world but he has lost his soul?" (Mt. 16: 20).

726. Question: Somebody owes me something and if I don't show a little indifferent, we won't reach the peace. What do you command me to do?

Answer: he who searches for the peace won't be deprived of the peace from God[1143]. This is for "he who is faithful in little, he will be faithful in much too" (LK. 6: 10); and "the merci overcomes the judgment" (Jas. 2: 13). So, if the man doesn't' despise the need for the things from the world, he won't reach the peace of Christ[1144]. And "He Who has started within you the good thing, He will finish it too, until the day of our Lord Jesus Christ" (Phil. 1: 6)[1145]. And our prayer is this: May God give us the peace, in order us to consummate the thing of God[1146]. This [1143] If you strive not to allow to be troubled yourself in the relationships with the people, you will have also from God power for maintaining yourself in the state of peace. That's why in the striving to remain undisturbed, you will be strengthened by thinking at God.

[1144] He who values the world's things to much, he who reckoned the need for the world's things too burdening, he will easily get disturbed when if the loses some of those things, or if he doesn't add something to that what he has. So, he doesn't have the peace that is given by Christ Who didn't look at the perishable thing of the world. The mercy on people had by Christ, a mercy that us too can have it from Him, that mercy makes us despising the juridical processes with the people for the world's things, for that mercy unveils us their relativity in comparison to the absolute value of the soul.

[1145] Christ helped us not to give too much importance to the world's things, out of mercy for people, in order to make the people kind by our kindness, and Christ will bring us to consummation on this line. We do the good for being us attracted by the perspective of our eschatological consummation. The eschatological perspective maintains within us the dynamism of the good and it increases the good within us.

[1146] In the Greek language the word εική has both the meaning as "prayer" and as "desire". The prayer is a desire too. As such, the prayer is directed towards the future and in last analysis the prayer is directed towards the eschatological future and towards the consummate is what it was confessed also by the all-holy waiter of the whole Church[1147].

727. Question: Should I receive any stranger monk who comes at me, without inquiring the aspects related to him? And, if I receive him, hos should I let him go? And should I give him something before he leaves? This is for there are some of them who ask for that too.

Answer: It is written in Proverbs: "Do not introduce any man within your house" (Sirach[1148] 11: 13). So, when a stranger comes to visit you, you firstly pray God and then you will inquire the things related to that stranger: where he is from and where does he go. And if it seems to you that you should receive him, you will receive him and after feeding him you will let him go, by not giving him anything. This is because, if you want to do the good over your powers, you won't be able to do that for a long time.

728. Question: What do you advise me? I have trusted one and I accommodated him for a few days. But I need to go somewhere and I am ashamed to ask him leave, because he could be offended. Or, do I want to tell him go without a reason? What should I do?

Answer: Tell him serenely: "Abba, have you decided to leave now for another place?". And if he says: Yes!", you will tell him: "I too have an urgent business and I want to leave for solving it". And if he says: "No!", you will tell him: "And what do fulfillment of the man. Essentially, we ask God for salvation, and the salvation is the eternal happiness after the end of the time.

[1147] Volos Edition, at note: "Maybe by saying the waiter of the entire Church, the Father means the blessed Paul. This is for Apostle Paul said: "May the Lord Himself always give you peace" (2 Thes. 3: 16). Paul is a great waiter, for Christ entrusted him with the care of our souls, which he fulfills it in his epistles until the end of the world, when the Lord will come for the second time."

you advise me? Because I ought to leave for some place. And here is nobody to serve you". And so, he will leave in peace.

729. Question: Is it good to put the things from the monastic cell at their place, so that not one to be lost, or to let everything in the care of God?

Answer: It is good to put the things at their place and not only those things necessary for accommodating the guests, but also the things you use, after you have finished using them. This is for one must not give occasion for devil's temptation. But if it has happened due to forgetfulness or carelessness something has been lost, you won't be troubled, but you will blame yourself for carelessness and you will ask God for forgiveness. And you should not disregard the good thing of accommodating guests, but persevere as much as you can, but not over your power, and by doing everything with right-reckoning. And take care, from now on, not to give place to temptation.

730. Question: The Lord said: "Blessed are they who cry" (Mt. 5: 5). And the Apostle asks us to be close to one another (Rom. 12: 8). What good deeds having been done by somebody, he must cry; and what deeds he should do in order him to do them joyfully? And how it is possible for one to have both of them concomitantly: the crying and the joy?

Answer: The crying is that sadness according to God, which is born by repentance. Abd the signs of the repentance are: the fasting, the singing of psalms, the prayer, and the thinking at the words of God. And the joy is this: that gladness according to God which is shown in decency of words, and in the deed of them whom we meet with. So, let the heart have the crying, and let the face and the word have a decent gladness. Ad so one can have both of those concomitantly[1149].

[1149] Saint John Climacus spoke about "of-joy-maker crying" (The Ladder, chapter VII). Actually, the true repentance is united with the joy of the detachment from the sin. But this detachment is love for people. And it must be shown in the joy for another.

731. Question: If a friend of mine asked me to guarantee for him, should I do that or not?

Answer: The guarantee leads one to temptation. If you want to get rid of temptation, you won't guarantee for anybody, but you will tell him daringly, saying: "You know the love that I have for you, but I have commandment from the Fathers not to guarantee for somebody, because the Fathers know my weakness and they know in advance and better than I know that what will happen. So, I fear transgressing the commandment and sinning against God". Tell him these things and if he gets sad, you won't worry about that. And if you can get rid of that by invoking some reason, that will be good. This is for it could happen that that one not to accept anymore to ask you to guarantee for him, either because he respects you, or for some other reason. And if that was the case, you wouldn't be the cause and he wouldn't have any reason to get sad. But if you have reached to be a guarantor without realizing it, do not let yourself into a bigger indifference but tell to your thought: "What has been done, it has been done, but the Lord will deliver me and He will protect me against the things to come". And do not cease praying God for that and powerful is Him to work according to His mercy.

732. Question: I have a friend who is in danger of loosing the salvation of his soul, or his things. Do you command me to help him?

Answer: If he is your friend according to God and he is in danger to lose the salvation of his soul, or his things, you strive and help him according to your power, as long as that won't harm your soul. But if some harm comes to your soul out of that, stay away sand let that thing in the care of God and pray God for helping that neighbor of yours. And powerful is God to do with that one what is beneficial to him, as we should do too[1150].

[1150] Engaging yourself for your neighbor to the extent of endangering your life, it will have as effect not only his loss but your loss too. Your love wouldn't be beneficial to him if that was the case, and it would destroy you too to the extent of weakening your love. It is true that

733. Question: I have a friend whom we it has been found out about, that he is a heretic. Should I urge him to come to the right-faith, or not?

Answer: Teach him how to know the right-faith. But do not resist him, neither try to find out what he thinks, because there is the peril of getting yourself contaminated by that poison. And if he wants to benefit and to listen to the truth of the faith of God, bring him to the Holy Fathers who can help him and so you will be helping him according to God, while remaining yourself unharmed. But if after the second and the third advising he still doesn't accept the correction, you will avoid him, according to the Apostle's word (Tit. 3: 10). This is for God doesn't ask somebody to do that what is over his powers, as the Fathers say: "If you see somebody drowning into the river, do not stretch him your hand lest he will draw you in and you will die together with him But you give him your staff and if you can pull him out, it will be good, but if you cannot, let go your staff and save yourself" (Les sentences des Pères du désert, Nouvel recueil, Solesmes, 1976, no. 472).

734. Question: Someone among the Fathers who had some friends into the Lord and who was considered as faithful, he was found out as heretic in his cogitation. After finding that out, his friends left him. Later on, his friends found out that that one wanted to part with the Church, so that they thought at going to prostrate before him and pray him not to do that because of sadness, and to ask for that mistake to be reckoned as theirs. And they came and asked the Oldman about that.

Answer: The passion is passion. Do not show yourself as approving it. So, you won't prostrate before him as one who would have wronged him, but in order to ask him not to part with the Church.

Saint Paul said that he was able to be himself anathema for his nation (Rom. 9: 3). But he wouldn't have reached to be anathema, because he was not in danger of weakening his love for Christ, by being him consummately strengthened through that love.

735. Question: The same ones asked the same Oldman: If he parted with the Church and we met him, should we salute him or not?

Answer: Behave to him as you do with all the people of the same sort, and place him among them.

736. Question: If somebody enters the church during the Liturgy and exists the church before apolis, is that a sin?

Answer: The consummate and pleasant to God thing is that he who enters the church to listen to the Scriptures and to remain to Liturgy until the apolis form the end. He should not leave before apolis without having a blessed motif, because of that meaning despise to Liturgy. But when somebody is forced by a need, he will be forgiven. But neither then must he justify on himself. But he msut ask God for forgiveness, saying: "Master, forgive me because I haven't been able to keep the commandment".

737. Question: Should one talk while in church?

Answer: It is not absolutely necessary for one to talk within the house of God during the Holy Liturgy. But one must surrender himself to the prayer and he must listen, zealously, to the Holy Scriptures. This is for the Holy Scriptures talk about the salvation of our souls. And if there is a need for somebody to talk, let him talk briefly, because of the honor and the fear required by that time. Otherwise, his talking will be reckoned as a condemnable deed[1151].

738. Question: If I didn't want to talk, but some of the fathers started a dialogue with me, what should I do in order not to offend him with my silence because of seeming that I would despise him?

Answer: If those ones start the discussion, you will answer them briefly, and so you will show by that too that that thing is worthy to be despised.

739. Question: My thought tells me that I must not leave the house. But sometimes there are many Liturgies over the week. Should I attend the Liturgies or would be better for me to get busy within the house.

Answer: If you know that the goings out harm you because of encountering people, it will be beneficial to you not to leave the house even invoking the motif of attending the Liturgy, but only from time to time. This is for the quietude (the withdrawal) delivers one from many evils.

740. Question: But if I am forced to go out because of some need of mine or of the Fathers, won't I commit a grave sin by not attending the Liturgy?

Answer: If you are forced by some need or by some commandment of the Fathers, you will strive yourself to do that in the fear of God and do not be troubled because of being absent from the Liturgy. But go inside the house and remember your sins. But if you miss the Liturgy because of your idleness or indifference, it will be more useful to you to go to Liturgy and not to get scattered and to take heed.

741. Question: How is it better: to descend to the church at night, or to do my vigil in my house?

Answer: It is good to take vigil in your house. This is because in the church there occur many discussions.

742. Question: If I wanted to enter a house of martyrs or a church, for I to prostrate before the altar, or before the holy relics, or even for I to be imparted, would I commit a mistake[1152]?

Answer: Entering and prostrating isn't a mistake. But you should be imparted together with all the people[1153]. But guard yourself against entering carelessly to be imparted within altar. If you are called there by the priest, let him call you once and twice and if the priest insists, you will obey him. This is for he knows what he does and if there was a mistake it would be counted to him. But take heed at yourself, lest your vain-glory to sprout out. So, when you enter, you reckon yourself unworthy. This is for actually you are so.

743. Question: Somebody wanting to associate himself with another regarding a certain thing, he asked the Oldman whether that would be a good thing.

Answer: This is not beneficial either to the soul or to the body, but it will rather bring troubles and hardships. And because I am mindless and I do not know the Scripture, I am telling you here a worldly proverb: "You have an associate when you have the Lord". So, do as you wish. This is because we do not give commandment in order not to trouble somebody. Test yourself if you endure the trouble with pleasure or not, May the Lord be with you. Amen.

744. Question: My thought puts in front of me the fewness of the things I need and the fact that I cannot feed me and my household with them. And because of that I get sad. What does this mean?

[1152] The note from Volos Edition: The Canon 69 of the Ecumenical Synod VI, it forbids the layman to enter the holy altar. It seems that the saint allows the layman to enter the altar in order to worships the holy relics. But later on, parts of the relics started to be placed in the church's nave. But the priest who imparts the layman within altar he will commit a sin. Only the bishops and the priest representing the Hierarch Christ Who commits the sacrifice within altar, only they can be imparter within altar.

[1153] It is being affirmed here the need for the communion into Christ with all the believers. This is the purpose of the sacrifice of Christ: getting us out of our egotism and accomplishing as large as possible a communion. This removed the disorder from within creation.

Answer: This sadness is human. But if we trusted God, God would take care of us, as He wills. "Throw upon the Lord you care" (Ps. 54: 25[1154]) and He is powerful to take care of you and of your people, and Him to get you rid of sadness and trouble. And tell to the Lord: "Your will be done" (Mt. 6: 10) and the Lord won't allow you to get sad or troubled. Mat the Lord have mercy on you and his right hand to protect you. Amen.

745. Question: To a loving-of Christ advocate who was also friend of the monastery of the Fathers, Abba asked him an important thing which they needed quickly. This was for that advocate had the custom to fulfill their requests with the whole zeal, for God. But because of the work of the devil, it happened to him not to take care of the requested thing. And Abba got troubled and he asked the same Oldman what should he write to that advocate?

Answer: Write him these things: We know that we cause you trouble and we hinder you with this thing. But you haven't taken care of it and you have troubled us, because of doing nothing. Therefore, tell us plainly if we burden you, and we won't burden you anymore. Couldn't God fulfill this thing without you, through another advocate? Hurry up and tell us and Go will take care of us. And pray for us.

And that one hearing these things, he felt within his heart like a fire. And he put all his zeal for that thing, for their prayers. And he proceeded immediately. And their need was fulfilled. And he came after and prostrated before them and asked for forgiveness. This is the strength of the word starting from the power of the Holy Ghost. He fulfills everything in a short time. This is for, behold that his soul got woke up from idleness, that is the mother of all evils.

[1154] In KJB we have: Ps. 55: 22: "Cast thy burden upon the Lord, and he shall sustain thee: he shall never suffer the righteous to be moved."; in ROB we have: Ps. 54: 25: "Throw towards the Lord your worry and He will feed you; He won't ever allow the righteous to wobble." (E. l. t.'s n.)

746. Question: A brother asked the same Oldman: What is the punishment for that one who despises a thing and that's why he loses or breaks that thing.

Answer: One like that is like a thief or like one who used a thing against the will of God; and he will; be submitted to the same punishment.

747. Question: But he who, because of hurrying, and not because of despising, he unwillingly loses a thing, him too will be condemned?

Answer: He must reproach that to himself and he must ask God for forgiveness, as one who was careless[1155].

748. Question: When one is in a dispute with another, on a thing of God, and he cannot find a solution, for how long must he insist?

If that quarrel bring harm to his soul, he mustn't insist in that. But if it doesn't harm hi soul, let him not get discouraged, neither to worry. Because otherwise he will be condemned for indifference. This is because it was said: "Cursed in him who does the things of the lord carelessly" (Jer. 31: 10). But he must also pray for God to help him to be delivered from that quarrel, as it is beneficial to him.

749. Question: When I do the count with somebody, and my thought whispers me to draw a small plus towards me and to pinch that one, what should I do?

Answer: Force yourself, on the contrary, to give him a small plus that won't burden you: fore instance, a penny, in order you to get rid of your ugly greediness. This is for him who strives to give to another a small plus, he will get far from the desire of taking, cunningly, more than he deserves. And from the very small things the man can advance to the big things, as also out of small passions will be born big passions. May the Lord make you wise into His fear.

[1155] In this is being shown that the things are not form us bur they are gifts from God, and if we despise the things we will despise the bestower. And many of the things bear imprinted in them also the work of our fellow humans, so that we will also despise them and their work when we are careless with the things. Abba Dorotheos, the disciple of Abba Barsanuphius and of Abba John, he too spoke about the care one must have of things (Word II. About Conscience; The Romanian Philokalia, volume IX, p. 511).

750. If, after we did the count, I found out that I pinched the another, unwillingly, what should I do?

Answer: If you took more from him, you should give that back to him; on the contrary, if you took less from him, you should examine your thought and see if you wanted to take more from him. And if you found out that, you should give him even more, and if you didn't' want to take more from him, you should not give him more[1156], except if he is very poor. This is for this plus will make him sensitive. And in this case, you will give him back justly.

751. Is it a sin working on Sunday?

Answer: To them who work according to God, working on Sunday is not a sin. This is for the Apostle said: "Working day and night, in order not to burden somebody" (1 Thes. 2: 9). But to them who work on Sunday with contempt and with greediness and with the desire for ugly earning, it will be a sin to them. Although, it is good on the day of the Resurrection, on the lordly (imperial) feasts, and on the days of remembrance of the Apostles, us to stop working and to go to the churches. This is for this is a tradition from the Holy Apostles.

752. Question: Is it good one to give a blessed gift (eulogia) of the Fathers to somebody of a different faith, or to a poor[1157]?

[1156] If you took more from him, forcedly, you will give that back to him, in order you to heal yourself of the bite of your conscience. If you did that unwillingly, you can not to give that back in order not to stir up within him the suspicion that you have willingly taken advantage of him, and that will weaken his trust in you.

[1157] In the Volos Edition: Ευλογία of the Ftahers was called something received from some Father towards blessing and sanctification, for instance: something to eat, something to drink, or some clothing.

Answer: Do not hesitate to give a blessed gift to the poor, for that is a deed of giving alms. Neither to him of a different faith, for the blessed gift won't be harmed by him of another faith. And it could happen that due to the blessing from within that gift that one of another faith to come to the knowledge of the truth. This is for a certain Philemon, who were a player of flute, wanting to bring sacrifice in the place of the holy martyr Apollonius, he put on the martyr's coat and by the power of that thing he got converted and he became a martyr (Historia monachorum XIX: Festuguiere, Les Moines d'Orient IV/I, pp. 106-108)[1158].

753. Question: My cow is ill. It is forbidden to utter some incantations upon it?

Answer: The incantation is forbidden by God and one mustn't use it at all costs. This is for the transgression of Gods' commandment is towards the perdition of the soul. You should rather use for your cow the other means of the healing from the doctors. This is for this is not a sin. But you can also pour on it some holy water[1159].

754. Question: If my ill servant went to a witch without my permission, would that be reckoned as my sin?

Answer: That won't be your win, but his. But if you find out about that, you will rebuke him and urge him not to repeat that.

[1158] This Philemon wanted to save Apollonius, by claiming that he was actually Apollonius, so that he to bring sacrifices to the idols instead of Apollonius. But his love for Apollonius, and the power of Apollonius's coat that he put it on, they converted him to the Christian faith.

[1159] The incantation, the spell, the witchcraft consists of seeing the nature's powers or the man's powers as godlike, or rather devilish. This is because of invoking them is rather and order and a suggestion than prayer. Those are a practical idolatry. As such, they are contrary to the faith in God Who is above nature. But using the nature's powers as nature's powers place by God within nature, on the basis of knowing those powers as the doctors do, it is not a sin. But it is good to be called also upon the help from God that is added to the nature's powers.

755. Question: If going to a sorcerer is forbidden by God and if I see one going to see a sorcerer, should I tell him not to go?

Answer: If that one is one of your friends into Christ, you owe to tell him: "Brother, that harms you soul and you anger God who forbids you from doing that". And if he doesn't accept your advice, he will see. But if that one is a stranger to you, it won't concern you except whether he asks for your opinion about that. Then you owe to tall him the truth. This is because if you don't tell him the truth, you will be condemned. This is for Saul wanted to go and see a belly-speaker (ventriloquist) he asked his son Jonathan about that, and because his son didn't approve that, he was condemned by Saul (1 Kings[1160] 28). So, if somebody is under your mastery, you owe to advise him and to rebuke him when he transgresses your advice.

756. Question: If somebody buys or sells something, will that be a sin if he accepts a too high or a too law price?

Answer: When that doesn't happen unwillingly, but willingly, it won't be a sin to be given or to be taken the agreed price. But when somebody knows that he has taken more, he owes to give that back at his own initiative. By that he will do a good thing and he will content the another. But when one agrees with one who is under his mastery, he must think at whether that one could agree just because he was under his mastery. This is because, otherwise he will commit a sin. He must assure that one; "Brother, I won't mind if you do not accept my offer, but neither will I give you more. So, do whatever you live and as you wish".

757. Question: It is good as you teach the man to blame on himself in everything. But if somebody blamed me as I did something wrong to him, but I didn't know about me to be guilty of something, why should I do? This is because, If I wanted to condemn myself, I would find him getting strengthened in his upset against me, as my mistake done to him was real. And if, on the contrary, I wanted to defend myself by telling him that the thing is not so, I would find myself justifying me. And then, how could I take the defamation upon myself? Enlighten me, Father what should I do?

Answer: You should firstly rebuke on yourself within your heart and prostrate before that one, telling him: "Forgive me, for the Lord!". Then, with humbleness, and not as if you needed to justify yourself, but in order to heal him and in order to remove from him his suspicion regarding you, you tell him: "Father, I do not know myself as having wanted to upset you in something, or to having committed a mistake against you. Therefore, please not to be upset with me". And if he doesn't get convinced either in that way, then you will tell him: I have mistaken, forgive me!"[1161].

758. Question: But if a mistake against him and he hear that and so he gets upset, will it be good if I hide the truth in order to heal his upset? Or should I confess my mistake to him and ask him for forgiveness?

Answer: If you find out surely and if you know that that thing will come under scrutiny and it will be exposed, you will tell him the truth and you will ask him for forgiveness. This is because if you continue lying, you will make him even angrier. But if he hasn't found that out and if he won't inquire that thing, it won't be wrong if you keep your silence, in order you not to give rood to upset. This is for, when Samuel the Prophet was sent to anoint David as king, he prepared himself through the sacrifice he brought to God, fearing that Sameul could find out about that. And God told him: "Take a heifer with you and if Saul asked you: what are you going to do here?", you should tell him: "I have come to sacrifice to the Lord" (1[1162] Kings 16: 2-3). And so, he hid from the king a thing that could upset the kind, [1161] You can more easily soften somebody's heart regarding you, by admitting yourself as being guilty, even though you aren't. And you will progress by doing that without being yourself guilty. And then you will add to that a good knowledge and the content of seeing that one having a softened heart. The kindness will finally overcome the evilness, as the communion too overcomes the egotistic loneliness.

and he said that thing only the other thing. So, you too should hide the upsetting thing. And in time it will pass.

759. Question: If it is proven that I haven't mistaken to somebody, but he has wronged me, how will I be able to blame myself? For instance, traveling somewhere, somebody who I have never known and without telling me anything, he hits me without reason, how could I blame myself for that?

Answer: You can tell to yourself: "I have been wrong choosing this road. This is because, if I didn't start walking on this road, I wouldn't meet this man and he wouldn't hit me". See that you could blame yourself, even if that was the case?

760. Question: If a do not limpidly see my sin and it seems to me unjust to blame myself, what should I do?

Answer: Say: "I have doubtlessly committed sin. But my sin is hidden from me, for now"[1163]. This still is a self-blaming.

761. Question: Another loving-of Christ layman was regularly coming to the monastery of the Fathers. But once he was late to come. And Abba asked him, jokingly: "Have you still found the way?", and he answered: "Abba, if you prayed for me, I wouldn't be late. But please don't tell this to the Oldman". And the Oldman heard about that and the answered him:

Answer: You have proven us as sleeping and not being able to do anything. But neither have your shown yourself more zealous, so that you to come and wake us up from our sleep[1164], lest you could know that from the disciples of the Lord. Th9is is for they have been engulfed by storm and they came to Him and woke Him up, telling Him: "Master, save us for we are [1163] The memory doesn't retrieve all my deeds and all my thoughts. But they imprint my way of behaving. And sometimes, those ones come back into awareness out of an unconscious that I am bearing with me.

[1164] You haven't come to wake us up with your prayers while you were on the road.

perishing" (Lk. 8: 24; Mt. 8: 25). And he woke up and saved them.

762. Question: That one read the answer and wrote the same things to the Oldman. And the Oldman answered him:

Answer: Forgive me, for in dispute there is no humbleness[1165]. And that one was pricked by that word and left from there taught.

763. Question: A loving-of Christ asked the same Oldman: God created the man a free. But on some other occasion He says: "Without Me you cannot do anything" (Jn. 14: 6). How can be the freedom reconciled with the impossibility of doing something without God?

Answer: God created the man free in order the man to be able to lean himself towards good. But by leaning himself towards good by free will, the man is not capable of going the good without the good being fulfilled by the help from God. This is for it was written: "It is not from hiem who wants, neither it is from him who runs, but it is from God Who has mercy" (Rom. 9: 16). So, if the man leans his heart towards good, and if he calls God to his help, God, by taking heed at the man's good desire, God will bestow to the man power for that work. And so, both these meet together: the man's freedom and the power from God. This is for the good comes from God, but it is fulfilled by His saints. And so is God glorified in everyone and He glorifies them[1166].

[1165] He who contests the received teaching he proves to reckon himself as superior. So, he has not humbleness. But also, he who repeats his teaching, he proves himself as wanting to forcedly impose his advice to that one.

[1166] It is impossible to practically operate a separation between the man's contribution and God's contribution in the committed sin. The synergy is shown as a divine-human whole. One cannot tell who starts first and who gives more. The whole good deed belongs both to God and to the man. It is being told here that the man gives the leaning towards good, and God gives the power for fulfilling that good. But not without the man's contribution. This is because the man's freedom could lean towards evil as well, despite the man being helped by God. And the power which one does the good with, it doesn't belong only to God but it belongs to the man too. Right in the man's power there is the power of God too, and in using the power of God there is the man's effort as well. The good committed through the man it is

764. Question: I have kinships on the plan of the world[1167]: some of them have important ranks and are locals; some others are of a modest state and they live far from here. And it happens that the last one come to visit us. If somebody asked me who they are, would I answer the truth or would I keep my silence? This is because, if I told the truth the relatives living locally would be upset about that and they would blush with shame.

Answer: You should not make that thing public it not needed. Especially if that would elicit the upset of those ones living locally. Ene if you were asked, you should answer wisely, avoiding to unveil that thing. But if nobody got upset or bothered by that, you should not hide the truth, because otherwise you will show yourself as kidnapped by your vain-glory. And all of us are the creatures of God and nobody is more illustrious that another, except him who fulfills the will of God. Only the vain glory brings differences among people. But the conscience of the others must be protected, because of their weakness, when you don't need to make that thing public.

765. Question: I have a servant ill with a contagious disease (lepper). Should I keep that servant inside the house, or not?

Answer: You should not keep that servant inside your house, because not everybody can stand to be together with that servant. If they could stand that, that would be a rightly-believing thing. So, you must not trouble others for him. But you will surrender him to the house of the poor of those ill with such a disease and you will give him the food and the clothing and the bedding he needs, in order that house not to be burdened by anything.

the product of the man imprinted by God, or of the deified man and of God descended on the level of the man and humanized and living the man's effort. The power of God is being glorified by the man's effort; the man's power is being glorified by being strengthened by the power of God.

[1167] It is here about blood-relatives, not spiritual.

766. Question: But whether by receiving the things he needs, as you commanded us, he wants to take his share out of the things brought from outside by other people too, should I let him do that or not?

Answer: You must neither urge him to do that, because that would be burdening to others, not must you impede him in order him not to protest or to blaspheme. But let him do as he wishes. And if the gift comes from you and he wants to take it, you will give that to him.

767. Question: My father according to the body talks to me about material things which bring no benefit to the soul and I am very troubled hearing him. But I neither want to tell him to shut up. What should I do?

Answer: It is good, if you can, to move your mind form the things he told you, either to prayer or to remembrance of the word of God and at the teaching of the Fathers. In this case, let him speak about whatever he wants. But if you cannot do that, you will strive for gently stop him from such a discussion and will urge him to approach a more useful theme, lets by tarrying in the previous discussion there to be in that discussion a trap of the devil. This is because the devil can set his trap unnoticeably, even by a word, only to find something listening to him with pleasure.

768. Question: When us harvesting the grapes see some people coming to take the leaves, will that be inappropriate us to forbid them form touching the grapes? And if I suspect them of having stolen grapes, should I check them physically? And if I find grapes at them, can I take those grapes from them in order to prevent others from doing the same? This is because my thought doubts about these things.

Answer: It won't be inappropriate if you do not allow them to touch the grapes. And if you suspect somebody of having grapes hidden on him, but you are not sure about that, do not check him at all costs, lets you will be ashamed of not finding anything on him. So, if you know that he has grapes hidden on him but you forgive him, it will be good, and if you don't know surely, you will let him go without rebuking him.

769. Question: When I have done injustice and I want to repair that, my thought gets haughty as I would do something good. What should I tell my thought?

Answer: Tell to your thought: "He who does injustice, he will be punished. And he who repairs the injustice, he will escape his punishment and he will have praise". This is because something else if to do the good and something else is to do injustice. The doing of good serves God and it cause the eternal resting[1168]. And the injustice anger God and it causes the eternal punishment. This is what David said: "Deviate from evil and do the good" (Ps. 33: 13[1169]). But without God we cannot do any good[1170]. This is for He said: "Without Me you cannot do anything" (Jn. 15: 5). And the Apostle says: "What do you have and you haven't taken it?". And if you have taken it, why do you brag yourself as you haven't taken it?" (1 Cor. 4: 7). So, if even in working the good we must not get haughty in our thought, hos much less must we do that when we deviate from evil? This is because of being a big insanity reckoning as praise the fact of no longer sinning. Take heed at you, brother, lets the cunning devils will deceive you. And may the Lord make the devils powerless through the prayers of His saints. Amen.

770. Question: I am ill and the doctor asked me to wash myself up. Isn't that a sin? And should I show myself to the doctor?

[1168] The done good elicits your content each time you think at that good, namely for eternity, as Saint Gregory of Nyssa said too.

[1169] In KJB we have: Ps. 34: 14: "Depart from evil, and do good; seek peace, and pursue it."; in ROB we have: Ps. 33: 13: "Shun from evil and do good, search for the peace and follow it." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[1170] That's why we cannot brag about anything good done by us. Even though we do not realize that God gave us the power to do that good, we better know that in order us not to take pride of the good done by us. This is for the pride, regardless how small, it will grow up and it will bring many evils to us and to others.

It hasn't been totally forbidden to the laymen to wash themselves up when needed. So, if somebody is ill and he needs to wash himself up, that won't be a sin. And if somebody is healthy, the bathing will bring him refreshing, resting, but also the numbness of his body. So, you must guard the things we owe to keep, namely the heart and the tongue not to judge and not to despise anyone. This is for the bathing doesn't' bring condemnation to the layman.

Regarding the showing to the doctor, to him who is more consummate it is characteristic him to leave everything in God's hands, even thought that will be difficult to him. And he who is weaker, let him show himself to the doctor. This is for neither this is a sin. But it is a deed of humbleness, for being him weak, he needed to show himself to the doctor. But he must cogitate that without God neither the doctor can do anything, but God gives health to him who suffers, when God wants[1171].

771. Question: Some people are driven by the devil against me, because I am pious, because I do not go often to the marketplace, and because I do not occupy myself with diverse businesses either. And when, from time to time, I need to go the publish baths for washing myself up, I am ashamed, but I also fear not to offend those who are against me, by avoiding to go to the baths for my piousness. What does this mean, Father?

Answer: This is vain-glory. Youa re layman and, as I told you, the layman isn't forbidden from washing himself up when he needs it. And if stan drives some people to think that you are a prophet, in order to deceive your thought to get haughty, and you strengthen that lie about you, these are the things you should feel shame for, and also you must feel shame of the deeds transgressing the commandment of God, as the debauchery, the love for money, and the things alike. This is because these ones truly offend. And the man will be held accountable for those deeds not only for himself but also for [1171] The opinion that the ill man can show himself to the doctor but he must cogitate that without God neither the doctor can bring him health, it frames within the teaching about synergy: the man must do everything he can but in everything there is God collaborating too, if we pray Him, and we cannot know what the man gives and what God gives. The man's effort, the man's skillfulness are filled up by the power of God. God Who created the nature, He can accomplish it through a plus of power.

hurting his neighbor. This is because a sin and a true offense is the bath united with drowsiness, and not the necessary bath. That bath that is now for drowsiness, but for need, it has not offense within. And he who gets offended he will make himself guilty through himself. And getting ashamed for that is out of vain-glory and it comes from the devil.

772. Question: You told me, Father, that true offense causes he who transgresses the commandment of God; and that that one will be submitted to the judgment for harming his neighbor. But then why the Apostle told to that one who was eating meat sacrificed to the idols: "You can eat, for nothing in the world is sacrificed to the idols. But if your brother gets offended by that, do not lose with your food him whom Christ dies for" (1 Cor. 8: 4-11). Behold that he held him guilty because of harming another through a food non-stopped by a commandment of God, but he forgives the another for his weakness.

Answer: First of all, brother, The Apostles commanded and asked that nobody to search for the cause, but everybody to obey his commandment as to the law of God (1 Cor. 11: 16). Besides, I am telling you that what I am thinking. In this case there are two different things: the circumstance and the deed. The first one was the worshipping brought to the idol, as means which the devils were worshipped through; the second one was the meat brought as sacrifice to the devils and which seemed to the weak one as truly sacrificed to the idols. Th weak one, by seeing a believer eating those meats, himself felt urged to eat those meats which were seemingly brought as offerings to the idols. But by that he was defiling his conscience. But the believer didn't reckon those meats as offerings brought to the devils but he reckoned those meats as holy food, created by God, so that he was eating while having a clean conscience and he was doing nothing evil. But because the brother was weaker in his faith and he reckoned that that was meat sacrificed to the idols, the Apostle reproached the believer who ate an unbeneficial food that harmed the neighbor, a fact that is foreign to the love according to God. This was because by eating he wasn't fulfilling a commandment of Christ, and by not eating he didn't transgress any commandment. And the Apostle asked him to rather choose the building up of the neighbor than the food.

Regarding the bathing, washing somebody up isn't inappropriate by itself. Neither it is forbidden. And he who is offended by that he himself takes his condemnation for that. So, if a layman gets ashamed because of washing himself up, especially when he needs that bath, because of the slander coming from the people, it will mean vain-glory. And that harms the man. Therefore, when you need to wash yourself up, do it in the fear of God and not with drowsiness., because the drowsiness is contrary to the will of God and it will harm your soul.

773. Question: Every food contains some sweetness. Doesn't that harm him who eats it?

Answer: He Who has put such sweetness in any food is Master God. So, that won't harm him who shared it with gratitude. But one must guard himself against getting addicted to anything[1172], because the addition harms the soul.

774. Question: Doesn't one due to do everything with the whole cleanness? For instance, the things belonging to the homestead, or others?

Answer: It is not inappropriate to be anything clean and having a good countenance while being used. But one must not get addicted to such an approach. This is for the lord enjoys all cleanness. But if you see yourself getting addicted to some something, you must remember the end of that thing, as it will rot out, and you will take the resting (from the part of the addiction). This is because nothing remains having the same countenance, but everything is corruptible and perishing[1173].

[1172] We see in these advices a remarkable lenience and understanding form the part of the two Old Fathers. The accent is placed on inside and not on the external things. The inside is the one that must be guarded clean.

[1173] Only the soul is unperishing. The soul gets ever more beautiful within the kind ones. All the things are relative; only the soul has an eternal value.

775. Question: Another loving-of Christ layman asked the same Oldman, telling him: If a Jew or a non-Christian invites me to some feast of his, or he sends me some gifts, will I accept that or not?

Answer: Do not accept that, because of being contrary to the canons of the Holy Church and you must not accept that[1174].

776. Question: But if that person is an important one and a friend of mine, and he will get upset if I do not accept those things from him? What should I tell him?

Answer: Tell him: Your love knows that they who fear God must guard all His commands. And you can in the similar thing done by yourself. This is because you wont ever allow your tradition to be transgressed because of my sake. I reckon that thin won't make you not to see my love. This is for ourselves have our tradition too from God and from our teachers, meaning that we are forbidden to accept anything from those having other faiths and feasts. But by that I won't weaken my love for you.

777. Question: There are some non-Christian sellers who sell their merchandise at their feasts. Is that forbidden one to buy form them that what he needs?

Answer: It isn't forbidden. This is for, according to the Apostle, one can buy everything that he can find in a slaughterhouse, without making any differences (1 Cor. 10: 25), as long as ne needs that.

778. a. Question: A loving-of Christ layman who was professor in world's sciences, he had a son who was very ill. And he asked the same Oldman if his son was to live or to die. And the Oldman answered him that his son was to live, And the son lives as the Oldman told. After a while, another son of that man got very ill. And the professor came again and asked the Oldman about his son. And the Oldman told him:

We pray, but it depends on God's will to have mercy on him. Cut off your will and thank God in everything (1 Thes. 5: 18).

b. By hearing those things and because of not understanding the meaning of the word and of the answer, he believed that his son was to live. And when the professor turned back to his son, his son opened his eyes and he saw the Holy Father present there and he told to his father: "Can you see the saints standing near to us?". The father answered that he didn't see anybody, but his son told him: "Lo how they stand here as say: Why you father comes and go hindering us with his request for you to live? Lod, we are praying for you, and God told us: "His time has come for him to leave his body". And then the son told again to his father: "Lo, father, they pluck me away from a Sarazin who was dragging me with him, and they have brought me to a very luminous and indescribable place and there I saw innocent people who told me: "For the request of your father we prayer God for you to be brought in this place". And they officiate the Liturgy (the Synaxis) there and they are being imparted"[1175]. And after that child uttered these words, he started saying the big prayer: Our Father Who are in heavens" and "Glory to the Father and to the Son and to the Holy Ghost". And wo he yielded his ghost. And his father was much comforted, by being entrusted about the salvation of his son's soul. And the father [1175] The father prayed the Holy Father for his son to be healed. The Old Saints pray God, but God wants something else. Then the Old Fathers plucked the son away from a Sarazin that represented the devil, and they brought the son to some innocent children who were officiating the Liturgy. Thos ones told him that the prayer of his father reached them, through the prayers of the Holy Fathers, and they prayer God for the son to be brought to them, for he was innocent as they were too, in order the son to officiate together with them the Holy Liturgy and him too to be imparted with Christ. The prayers of everybody, from on earth and from heavens, all these prayers are intertwined in a common prayer, the desire of some ones being directed and elevated by the desires of others. No prayer and o anyone remains as a lonely ray directed towards God, but that prayer is united with the prayers of others, for a soul loves by all of them. The living one do not get united with the saints who left us more than they do in prayer; this is wanted by God when the people direct their thoughts at Him. By that the order in creation is restored.

came and announced the Oldman about those things and he asked the Oldman to tell him why he didn't tell him openly about the death of his son, as he told him about the other son that that one was to live. And answering him the Oldman said:

I told you to cut off your will for God, and by that I showed you about your son's death. Why didn't I tell you limpidly? You can understand that out of your life. Lo, you are professor in world's sciences and you have disciples. If you dictate a letter to somebody of them, won't that disciple write that what you wish, but will he still write that what he wants? Doubtlessly, he will write the things dictated him by you and not that what he wants. It is likewise in case of the saints: they do not speak from themselves, but God in Who speaks within them, sometimes more shadowed, some other times more limpidly. And in order you to be convinced that it is to, the Lord Himself told His disciples: "Not you are speaking, but the Ghost of your Father is speaking through you" (Mt. 10: 20). So, the saints speak as God wants, and not as themselves want.

c) By hearing these things and being convinced that that was so, the professor said: "But how comes that we find out that to the Old Fathers all their requests were fulfilled?". And the Oldman answered him:

Not al of their requests were fulfilled, but they only wrote down those requests which were fulfilled to them. Be convinced about that by that word that says: "A certain man came to him and told him: My son is badly tormented by a demon. And ai brought him for many times to Your disciples but they couldn't heal him up" (Mt. 17: 14-16). If the Apostles weren't granted the fulfillment of this ask, how could we say that the saints are granted the fulfillment of all their asks? This was because the Apostles themselves wondered about that and they asked Him: "Master, why couldn't we heal him?". And He told them: "This sort gets out only through fasting and prayer" ((Mt. 17: 19, 21; Mk. 9: 28-29).

d) The professor asked the Oldman again: "And why the saints are not granted the fulfillment of all their asks?

And the Oldman answered him: God does all the things for the benefit of the people. And God knows better that what is beneficial to the people, so that God commanded us not to say much word when praying and so us to ask for unbeneficial things, and He told us: "For your heavenly Father knows that what you need even before you asking Him for it" (Mt. 6: 8). As God defends you, He defends His saints too. God defends your against getting yourself haughty by openly receiving the things asked by you. And God defends His saints so that they won't get haughty in the imagination because of the unveilings said through them. This is because of not being they bigger than Apostle Paul, who says: "For the overwhelming greatness of the unveilings, so that I not to get haughty, it has been given top me a pin in my body, an angel of satan, to slap me over my cheek" (2 Cor. 12: 7). Go, take heed at yourself, and we are going to pray God to give you a strong heart and a steadfast faith. Do not be offended, therefore, by saints, for the Ghost of God Who speaks through them won't be wrong. Regarding the saints it is guarded the word: "Your good Ghost will guide me to the righteous land" (Ps. 142: 10[1176]).

And by hearing those things he has been entrusted into the Lord and he left rejoicing and blessing God Who glorified His saints.

779. Question: Another loving-of Christ layman asked the same Oldman: A dog bit my servant. Tell me if he is going to die or not. I am asking you about this because there are some people saying that a man bitten by a dog will die after forty days.

Answer: Your servant had nothing bad. Do not fear. But think at that what was written: "Not even a sparrow will fall into a snare without the will of our Father form heavens" (Mt. 10: 29).

[1176] In KJB we have: Ps. 143: 10: "Teach me to do thy will; for thou art my God: thy spirit is good; lead me into the land of uprightness."; in ROB we have: Ps. 142: 10: "Teach me how to do Your will, for You are my God. May you good Ghost advise me to the land of the righteousness." (E. l. t.'s n.)

780. Question: By hearing that one those things, he reckoned that his servant wasn't to die. But after two days that servant died. And his servant, due to the fact that he had a great faith into the Oldman, and for he knew that the Oldman didn't lie, he wondered and he wasn't convinced that his servant really died. And he came and asked the Oldman: "Because I doubt the fact that my servant died or not, what could you tell me, Fater?

Answer: He died.

781. And how could he die, once you told me that he had nothing bad?

Answer: Because you suspected that he was immediately to die because of the bite of that dog, I told you the opposite. That's why I told you that your servant had nothing bad. This is for the death from God has nothing bad in it. And to announce you that your servant was to die for a death coming from God I added in my answer that nobody can die without the permission from God even if somebody would have been bitten by tens of thousands of venomous snakes[1177].

782. Question: And what did you give us such an unclear answer?

Answer: Do not wonder about the fact that I didn't tell you that limpidly. This is for we mustn't always speak limpidly about these things. This is because doing the opposite would harm him who uttered them and they are unbeneficial to him. Don't you remember that also our Savior by wanting to show His human nature, he used humble words, saying: "Where have you put him?" (Jn. 11: 34); and" How many breads do you have?" (Mk. 6: 38); and: "Who has touched Me?" (Mk. 5: 38). By that He thought the saints not to always use big words. That's why they too answered according to their benefit[1178]. And if [1177] But the bite itself takes place by the permission of God.

[1178] If they always showed their knowledge of the future by using lipid words, they could be tempted to get pride from that. So that would be unbeneficial to them.

some people get offended, let them hear Paul who says: "We are the good fragrance of Christ within them who are saved and in them who are lost: to some of them we are a fragrance of life towards life, to others we are stench of death towards death" (2 Cor. 2: 15). So, for the believers we are talking like this, for them to understand and to benefit, and to the unbelievers in order they to despise us and us to benefit of that[1179].

783. Question: It happened often that this Oldman John sent, out of his humbleness, somebody's question to the Great Oldman, to Abba Barsanuphius, especially when it was to follow a great and wonderful thing. And the questions sent to the Great Oldman had never remained unanswered.

That's why, a loving-of Christ layman told once to Aba John: "Why do you mock us, Father John, because of having you the same power of the Ghost, but still sending our questions to the Holy and Great Oldman Barsanuphius?

Answer: I am nothing. And even if I had been something, I wouldn't have mocked you. I would have mocked you if I had sent your questions and you wouldn't have received any answer. But it is beneficial to you, for two to pray for you[1180]. This is for two are more than one. This is for He says: "My Father is greater than Me" (Jn. 14: 23). This was because He too was capable of doing His Father's deeds. But by saying that: "everything the Son sees His Father doing, the Son does likewise" (Jn. 5: 19), He not only once sends His disciple to His Father, saying: "Ask for it from the Father and the Father will give you in My name" (Lk. 16: 23). And He says again: "I do nothing from Myself, but My Father Who dwell within Me, He will commit the deeds" (Jn. 14: 10)[1181].

[1179] The saints will benefit is the unbelievers draw out of their saying conclusions beneficial to their helplessness.

[1180] A given answer implies also a pray done in order to find the true answer and for him who received the answer to be able to fulfill it.

[1181] It is here being affirmed the importance of the communion in all the things, according to the example of the Holy Trinity. Something can be done more easily and better in communion of thinking and of work with another, or with others.

784. A wonder committed by both Old Men: A man who was very-loving-of Christ and of guests, and who was committing the deed of Abraham (of accommodating guests), we have in danger of dying of certain disease, and he was already told by doctors that he was to die. So, one of his friends into the Lord sent a question to Oldman John about his dying friend, if he was truly to die and if he should write down his will.

And the Oldman answered them: The end has come. He should write down his will. And after saying those things, he told to the servant: "Go to the Holy Oldman (Barsanuphius) and ask him for praying for your master, for God to bestow him an add to his life for his good deeds of accommodating strangers. This is for, if the Oldman asks God for that, he will receive this grace". And the servant went and asked for that and the Great Oldman prayer. But he didn't' say anything. And the servant was sent for the second and for the third time, by Abba John to the Great Oldman. And that one prayer and again he didn't say anything. And by finding out about that, Abba John told his disciple: "That man won't die of this illness. The Great Oldman has received this grace from God". And Abba John made all these things known to those who came to pray him for that ill man. And that man immediately escaped that danger and he got healed through the prayer of the Great and Holy Oldman Barsanuphius and of Abba John who followed and resembled to Barsanuphius in all aspects. And that man found out the cause of his healing and he progressed ever more in his deeds of accommodating strangers towards the glory of God.

785. Question: Some loving-of Christ laymen who expected an injustice to be done to them by some powerful people, they asked the same Oldman John if they should ask for help from some other powerful persons and they to buy their protection.

Answer: That one answered and said: Do not buy the protection from a mortal and passing man. This is for he exists today but tomorrow he won't be anymore. And you have given your goods but the protection will die. And you will have lost together your good and your protector. Do you want to buy an imperishable protection? Buy the protection from God Who is the immortal and the imperishable Emperor, or of the poor. This is for He reckons as His, the things given to the poor. This is for He says: "I hungered and you gave Me to eat" (Mt. 25: 35)[1182]. You know that if you buy the protection form people God won't protect you. And if you say: "But how comes that some of the Fathers have protectors according to the body?", I am telling you that the Fathers do not have that protection by buying it. This is for they prayed those by the love of God. And those ones gladly become the Fathers' protectors[1183]. Examine the thing thoroughly and you see that the Fathers' gave nothing in exchange for that protection. Neither their protectors asked the Fathers for something in exchange, but they asked only for the Fathers' prayers which are more precious than the silver and the gold[1184]. Verily so: what they gave to their protectors? When the anger of God will come, they will gain the mercifulness. Take heed, therefore, at the fact that since the beginning to the very end, they fulfill a thing of God.

786. Question: Because of occurring a disturbance within the Holy and of God Church, and being expected to be ordained some people who didn't obey the emperor's commandment, and being fears of some persecutions, some asked the same Oldman if they should leave and hide their goods away.

Answer: Is there anybody more powerful than God? If we are in the hands of God and if we sing together with David: "To Your hands I will entrust my ghost" (Ps. 30: 5[1185]), what should we fear for? Didn't God say that He was to destroy the city of Nineveh? And did He destroy it? No. But God forgave that city [1182] Buy mercy by protecting the poor, and not from the powerful. This is for by doing that, you will have bought the protection from God Who is united with the poor. In this sense, one can say that God is the Emperor of the poor, and that the poor are powerful into God. But they do not abuse their power. They do not want to take the place of the rich, and to worldly master instead of them.

[1183] So, also through God, the powerful people of the world became the Fathers' protectors. This was for they set in movement, within those, theirs though at God, and their sensitiveness for God; they made them see the passing character of their life and of their power.

[1184] The Fathers' gave to the powerful, in exchange for their protection, something that is more precious than all the world's silver and gold. The Fathers gave the eternal life to their protectors, by their prayer to God, and not a plus of comfort in a passing and uncertain life of tomorrow.

[1185] In KJB we have: Ps. 31: 5: "Into thine hand I commit my spirit: thou hast redeemed me, O Lord God of truth."; in ROB we have: Ps. 32: 5: "Into Your hands I will give my ghost; You have delivered me, Lord, You God of the Truth." (E. l. t.'s n.)

for the repentance of its inhabitants. Therefore, us too, let's turn ourselves with repentance to God and Go will bring everything to peace. And again, were there on earth any king more powerful than Nebuchadnezzar? And though, Daniel and the three young men prayer God Who is the heavenly Emperor and God subdued the earthly emperor. Withing your question there is hidden a twofold war: of the cowardice and of the love for money. Ww are in the hand of God and God has power to do His will upon us. So, do not run away, neither hide any of your goods.

787. Question: "The same ones asked the same Oldman: But what has been written for, the following: "If they banish you away form a city, you will run into another" (Mt. 10: 23)?

Answer: We haven't been banished away yet.

788. Question: A certain priest was elected by the inhabitants of city to be their bishop, and he asked the Oldman if God wants him to be a bishop.

Answer: Brother, you have asked me something above my power. This is because I am a too unimportant man and I haven't reached this measure yet. You have left the Apostle and you ask me who I haven't even started to live as a monk? And what the Apostle says?: "He who desires bishopric, he desires a good thing. But the bishop must be unstained" and the followings (1 Tim. 3: 2). But the Scripture says too, as from the part of God, towards the sons of Israel: "If you ask in My name a liar prophet and you will be worthy of hearing the truth, I will put the true word in the mouth of the liar prophet for him to tall that word to you"[1186]. That's why I too am telling you: "If you have adorned your house beautifully and if you have prepared your heart towards receiving this well-fragranced chrism" (2 Cor. 2: 15), according to eth teaching of the Apostle, that will have been prepared to you from God. This is for He is not a liar who says: "May God give you according to your heart" (Ps. 19: 4[1187]).

[1186] He who asks while being full of preoccupation with God, he wakes up the responsibility of the asked one as well. Thus, the vibration of the conscience of the presence of God it crosses form him who asks to him who is asked. Or the asked one will be moves by the responsibility wakened up in him, so that he will pray God for giving him the true word. A serious interlocutor makes the another to be serious too.

789. A vice bishop asked the same Oldman if he should leave his vice-bishopric and withdraw himself into monastery.

Answer: We do not advise you to forsake the care for the holy of God churches, as entrusted to you, but we advise you to take heed at your soul into the fear of God. Do not accept gifts form anybody, do not be biased in judgment, to not be ashamed of the person of the powerful and condemn the innocent. Banish away from you the love for money that is the root of all evils (1 Tim. 6: 16). This is for the love for money is called also as the second worshipping of idols (Eph. 5: 5). And do not get haughty in your thought but be the disciple of the Apostle who says: "Not cogitating the high things but letting yourself led by humble things" (Rom. 12: 6). Do not try to be pleasant to the people, because you know what is expecting for one like this: he will estrange himself from serving Christ. This is because the Apostle says: "If I still are pleasant to people, I will no longer be the servant of Christ" (Gal. 1: 19). Obey the Lord Who says: "Learn from Me for I am gentle and humble in My heart and you will find resting to your hearts" (Mt. 11: 29). Quench the anger within you because of being a falling down from the state of human[1188]. Do everything according to the will of God and you will have God to your help. Always fear the death. This is because the death will unavoidably come to us. Condemn yourself in the moments of your exit[1189] and you won't commit sin against God. And if you reach the quietude, you will find resting united with the grace so that you will be at peace wherever you will be[1190].

[1187] In KJB we have: Ps. 20: 4: "Grant thee according to thine own heart, and fulfil all thy counsel."; in ROB we have: Ps. 19: 4: "May the Lord give you according to your heart and Him to fulfill all your counsel." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[1188] It is characteristic to the man to have self-control. That's why the man has conscience and freedom. The animal lacks these.

[1189] Here it seems being about every going out to some work supposed and needed by his serving.

[1190] The man will be able to be at peace also while doing his job, if he calls God in everything he does. It seems that the vice-bishop was at that time a bishop for the country parishes, unlike the bishop who was for the parishes from the city.

790. Question: A bishop who was a monk and who trusted the Old Men very much, he sent to be the Great Oldman asked if he should leave the world and turn back to the monastic life. He also asked for his prayers and blessing.

Answer: It is an appropriate moment for I t tell you the Apostle's word that says: "I have become mindless; you have forced me to" (2 Cor. 12: 11). But for it is about words told me according to God and not according to man, may I be allowed to tell God that what His servant Moses said: "Either you bring with me into the eternal life him who has been given to me as spiritual son, or erase me too from Your book" (Exod. 32: 32); and I not to see the face of Jacob, the father of Josephus, if I haven't Beniamin with me (Gen. 44: 34)[1191]. And I believe in His holy name that He won't deny my ask. This is for the joy of the Holy Trinity and of the holy angels it is the salvation of those who will be saved. So, I don't stop praying until God will give me the joy of your salvation. But take heed at those words not to make your thought drowsy and so to become indifferent. Remember in everything that the world is passing away (1 Cor. 7: 3), and remember that the world is temporary and feeling pleasure felt for the world it is corrupting. "Your better chose to suffer together with the people of Israel than to have the temporary pleasure of the sin" (Hebr. 11: 25). Remember that we are going to unwillingly leave the world and that our live is not long. This is because what is the man's life? We aren't sure that we are going to live in this world even from morning until evening. Let's willingly forsake the things form here, in order us to have a reward fore this. Let's rather choose the carelessness for the earthly things, we who want to show ourselves to the face of God, so that we to dare saying: "Get my soul out of prison, in order to confess your name" (Ps. 142: 7[1192])[1193]. Hurry [1191] The live by oneself, not warmed up by the love of somebody who is close to us as a son, it is cold on earth too. Such a life couldn't be happy in heavens either. This is for the happiness consists of the warmth of the communion. And if you haven't done anything on earth for others, you haven't been able to gain their love. On the opposite, because you haven't done anything for them, or if you haven't done everything you could have, that will be a thorn that will make you suffer forever. Jacob is the symbol of God. The sons of Jacob are all of us. I cannot see the face of God without having Beniamin with me, another son of his.

[1192] In KJB we have: Ps. 142: 7: "Bring my soul out of prison, that I may praise thy name: the up, walk quickly "until it still is day" (Jn. 9: 4)[1194], before the night falls, during which the sinners and the lazy will cry then vainly repenting[1195]. Find out that the time won't be prolonged[1196]. And when the time has come[1197], the servant won't find mercy. But who has prayer Him and he was heard? The true servant of the true Master, that servant who fulfilled zealously His commandments. Let's fear that day and that fearsome hour, on which we will not longer be able to have as defender either brother or kindship[1198], either power of mastery, either richness or glory. Let's sell the corruptible things which drag us in the bottomless deep, and let's buy a wedding coat[1199] (Mt. 22: 12) in order us to enter the consummation. This is for, if we enter the consummation, we will achieve the consummation of the love according to God, that love that righteous shall compass me about; for thou shalt deal bountifully with me."; in ROB we have" Ps. 141: 7: "Get my soul out of prison, in order my soul to praise Your name, Lord. I am waited by the righteous ones, until you will reward me." (E. l. t's. n)

[1193] It seems that the emperor was favoring them who wanted to make some changes in faith. Barsanuphius urges the bishop, who enjoyed the emperor's favor, not to obey emperor's will regarding those changes.

[1194] Get yourself out of the prison of the sad egotism here on earth, in order you to be escaped form your egotism also in the future life.

[1195] Properly-said, he who has been constantly postponing the time for his repentance, after exiting the time he will try vainly to repent. He will be petrified in the drowsiness of his soul, in insensitiveness, and that will be equivalent to the end of the time for him. The time will stop for him also in the sense of this helplessness of his soul to get out of his inertia. His repentance from there it is a sorrow for his life lived wrongly, but united with the impossibility of moving out of it.

[1196] In time there is change, in eternity there isn't change.

[1197] It is the moment by excellence. It is the las moment, that moment which all other moments we have been having will be concentrated in, and after that moment we won't have any other moment of life.

[1198] If you do not soften yourself, pray and repent for yourself, all the less will you be able to do that for somebody else, neither will be able your brother, who is in the same situation as you are, to dop that for you. There hasn't been a deep communion, a sincere communion, between you and him here on earth. You have been communicating only in superficial material things, serving passing interests. All the less will you be able to communicate there.

[1199] It is about the bottomless deep (abyss), without offering any support, in an emptied existence, one rather apparent and reduced to abstract schemes of the human wisdom, an existence that doesn't know about God sand about the mysterious richness of the reality. God too is an ocean an abyss of the meanings, of the love, of the light that is communicated, unlike the darkness that doesn't communicate anything. Within God you feel everywhere engulfed by the endless Being, but not by the void which you will remain after the corruption of the present image of the world, because you haven't been able to find the another, by cleaning up your egotism. This is the wedding coat: the celebratory coat of the clean life that is pleasant to everybody, by which we enter the chamber of the communicative gladness of the wedding.

removes the fear[1200]. Then we will sing joyfully together with the Apostle: "The love neve falls" (1 Cor. 13: 8)[1201].

My all-true son, may I see you in the Kingdom of God, in Christ Jesus, our Lord. I am embracing you into the Lord in the name of God. I am embracing you into Christ Jesus, I am embracing you the all-honored one into the Holy Ghost.

791. Another bishop sent to the same Oldman the request for an advice.

Answer: What could I tell to your love into God? Should I tell you that it is forbidden to the servant do give counsel to his master? But until now I haven't been able to deliver myself of my vain-glory in order I to reckon myself the servant of everybody. So, I don't' know how to excuse myself. I don't' find any escape from it except by telling you: "Forgive me, for the Lord, and pray for me in order I not to be condemned at His coming; and I to recognize God and I to take care of fulfilling His commandments and I to find mercy".

792. Question: Taking place a quarrel for faith, there was sent a bishop by the emperor, and that one asked what should he do? This was because he expected to face opposition from some powerful people from the world who weren't thinking healthy about the faith.

Answer: According to the things shown to us by your envoy, we reckon that after the extolling received from God by Daniel, Daniel also received the friendship of the emperor (Dan. 6). But by trusting God Who saves His servants (Dan. 13: 60) and Who is "near to them who call Him truly" (Ps. 144: 18), [1200] There where is love among people, nourished out of the love for God, there won't be the fear among people. This is for no man can commit menacing deeds to his fellow humans. No one takes care of his interests, no one wants to assure himself against somebody else. Each one knows that his life comes to him through loving communication from another, and he does everything he can to assure that communication through his love for another.

[1201] They who sing aren't divided, but they are in harmony. At least on those moments they live the joy of the mysterious union of love among themselves. That's why during the Holy Liturgy, by feeling themselves in front of God, the people sing together. It is a mode of gathering themselves into God.

Daniel didn't fear the menace and the trap of the imperial commandment and he wasn't disturbed, but he leaned on the faith in Christ and so God extolled him by faith. And if truly is "the heart of the emperor in the hand of God, God will lean it" (Prov. 21: 1) towards where we want it. Be strong into the Lord, be strong.

793. Question: A bishop was accused of love for money and of other sins and he was hated by the people, so that he was condemned by the synod of that county. And after he was condemned, he resigned and the congregation voted him out of his episcopal chair. And the inhabitants of that city, by reckoning three men as worthy of bishopric, they couldn't decide whom to elect. That's why they sent a word to the Great Oldman Barsanuphius.

Answer: You do not choose anyone, but let that to the bishop, And the bishop will give you that one shown to him by God.

794. Question: Another loving-of Christ layman asked the same Oldman: Will the bishop surely give us one of those?

Answer: If they will want in a sole thought and with a righteous heart and according to eth faith in God, God will give them not only one of those but also an angel from heavens if they want that. Namely a man equal to angels. This is for cannot lie Him Who said: "Ask for and you will be given. This is for everybody who asks for, he will take" (Mt. 7: 7-8). And to them who ask for in a wrong manner, he said: "You ask for but you won't be given, because you ask in an evil manner" (Jas 4: 3).

795. Question: So, if one of them is better than the others, will God give us that one?

Answer: If they leave it to the bishop for electing one of those, and if God sees that one of those will be more beneficial that the other two, that one will be elected. For instance, if one of them is harsh and they need reproaches, towards correction, that one will be elected.

796. Question: If the city id divided that some people ask one due to their faith, others because of their passion, but the proposed ones are equally good, what it will happen?

Answer: God will listen to them who ask through faith, and not the others, not because God rejects their proposal, but because their ask was evil.

797. Question: But what will happen if him who has been proposed by those who do not ask through faith, he sems to be better than the one proposed by them who ask by faith?

Answer: The knower-of-people God, by looking at the will of them who ask in a good manner, God will give them the another who was proposed by others, but not because of those ones' ask, but for the good ask of those ones who will accept the best one gratefully, even if because of their nescience they haven't proposed him.

798. Question: In this case will accept also they who asked with a good thought, the best one, contrary to their worthiness. How could we understand this?

Answer: God has mercy on the unworthy too, for the worthy ones. This is for He "sends rain over the righteous and over the unrighteous" (Mt. 5: 45). This is shown by God to us in the Holy Scripture, by saying towards Abraham: "If I find ten righteous in the city, I won't destroy this place" (Gen. 19: 32). If for ten righteous God said that He was to spare the city, how much more will he spare the righteous for the others?

799. Question: If all the candidates are proposed in good faith, but neither of the proposed ones is beneficial to them, will God give them somebody from Himself?

Answer: because they are worthy of benefaction, God will cross over their proposals and at the right time God will sow them the thought for proposing somebody else, or God will urge him who has the power for ordination to give them somebody more beneficial.

800. Question: But when all of them who propose somebody, they actually do not formulate their proposals in good faith and they still manage to propose a good candidate, will that one be given to them or not?

Answer: If the knower-of-people God sees that they repent, God will give them that one. This is for they are found worthy of their future repentance. But if God sees them remaining unrepented, God won't give them that one, because of their unworthiness.

801. Question: You said, Father, that even if the city gets divided, both the righteous and the unrighteous will rejoice of the good bishop given to them due to them who asked in a good mode. But them how could be true the saying of the Scripture that "any city that gets divided in itself, it won't stand" (Mt. 3: 24)? This is for, lo, the city gets divided but it will still stand united through the good ones.

Answer: It is there called division the tendency of both parts towards evil. Then will be fulfilled the word" it won't stand", namely in good. But the good doesn't' cause division. This is for the teaching of the Apostles it is one. And the Apostle said: "And if the unbeliever wants to part himself, let him part" (1 Cor. 7: 15). So, will we say that through that the Church has been divided and it won't stand? Let that not be! This is for the Lord said: "The gates of the hell won't defeat it" (Mt. 16: 18). But him who hasn't stood on the side of the good, that one has separated himself. And he who stand, he hasn't separated himself.

802. Question: The inhabitants of the city did according to the answer given them by the Great Oldman and they chose three men. And they were given a holy and well-pleasant to God bishop. But the previous bishop, trusting his money, he left for Byzantium where he asked for his chair back. Ad the rumor was that the previous bishop succeeded and everybody were engulfed by worry. And they sent to the Great Oldman asking: what should they do? This is for they feared to appeal the emperor, because they feared the failure, and the damage that could occur to the Church. And the Oldman answered them:

Answer: Sent a request, in order you to announce the emperor that the removal of the previous bishop has been done justly. Sent also a copy of his resignation. And showing the content for being elected his successor, tell the emperor that the election has been done by God and not bye people. And so, the emperor will be convinced that he must remove any doubt form himself. Sand they who want to do this evil thing, they won't succeed but in losing their money and to be ashamed. And with him who spent their money, it will be that what the Scripture says about Samson, that "they of another nation perished" (Jud. 16: 30).

Question: By receiving those that answer, they were lazy in sending the request. And the previous bishop went to te capital of the county to the governor with the imperial order to be his episcopal chair be given back to him. And there was much noise and disturbance in the city, so that they sent to ask the same Oldman about that. And his answer was the following[1202]:

Answer: You have done bad because you were lazy to let the emperor know the truth about the things. This is for God hates the idleness[1203]. Still, I am telling you in the name of the Lord, that even if that one reaches the gate of the city, he won't enter the city.

[1202] Note in Volos Edition: Here seems to be not about the condemned bishop but about the metropolitan of that region, according to the canon no. 40 from Laodicea, who is called by the saint also as archbishop.

[1203] God doesn't love that man who because of his laziness he doesn't develop himself. God doesn't love the inert man. That's why no good thing is done without the help of God, and that's why we must ask God for help; but neither any good thing will be done without the contribution of the man.

After this answer of the Oldman the governor came into the city to fulfill the imperial order. And all of them were engulfed by discouragement and by fear, but they suddenly received the news about the emperor's death and all the planed things came to a halt. And the bishop left without any result, having his money spent vainly, as the Oldman predicted. And his prediction was proven by deeds. "That what is tied on earth, it is tied on heavens too", according to eth Lord's word (Mt. 18: 18).

804. Question: The newly ordained bishop, because of reckon himself unworthy of the sanctifier ministration and incapable of administrating the churchly things, he thought to resign and he sent a question about that to the Great Oldman.

Answer: Rejoice into the lord, you the servant of God and you the officiator of the Holy Mysteries. You must know that the Holly Apostle Paul wrote: "Brothers, each one of you to remain in that what God has called him to" (1 Cor. 7: 24). And I believe that you have been called by the will of God and not as a hireling, but as a shepherd[1204]. So, stop trying to leave, lest you will anger God. This is for He said: "The heavens and the earth will pass away, but My words won't pass" (Mt. 24: 25). Do not let yourself scared. This is for it was written that after Moses died, Joshua Navi feared to lead the people towards the Promised Land, and the angel told him: "encourage yourself and stand strong, for as I was with Moses, I will be with you too" (Joshua 1: 9). Hear too from me the unworthy, the same word: "encourage yourself and stand strong".

805. Question: The same one asked the other Oldman: Who must I ordain as clerics, Father? Or what live they should have?

Answer: You must ordain people worthy of God and good, in order they to serve at the altar of God. Especially those whom several people bear witness for, according to the Scripture (1 Tim. 3: 7). You must take care for ordaining those ones and to judge them after ordination. This is for God will hold you accountable for the Church if they will deviate from the Church. And by doing so, you show to God your intention for wanting to ordinate good people to the churches of God.

[1204] The shepherd has the responsibility to guard the flock and to feed the sheep. The hireling serves for a payment, namely for himself. If the hireling leaves, there will remain the shepherd and he will hire another hireling. But the shepherd cannot forget about his sheep.

806. Question: If the Holy Fathers bear witness about somebody that he is worthy of being ordained, will their witness be enough, so that I won't need also the witness of other people?

Answer: You must be content with the witness of the Fathers. This is for they speak according to the will of God. And ones like these are wanted by God to be His servants. And whether after the testimony of the Father you still find within yourself a thought of doubt, that is tares from the devil.

807. Question: But is after the testimony of the Fathers that one doesn't' want to accept the ordination, or if he left after being ordained, what should I do?

Answer: If he doesn't want to accept the ordination, you will force him to. And if he still runs away from ordination after you attempting to force him, that must not be reckoned as a guilt to those who testified about him[1205]. The guilt will be his because of disregarding the will of God. This is for he must prove himself and he must toil fulfilling the thing of God. And if you see yourself powerless, if he is "seasoned with salt" (Col. 4: 7), you should again ask the saints and do according to their opinion. This is because many of the saints refused to accept to be priests but they were forced by God. Moses said too: "See and choose another one" (Exod. 4: 13). And Jeremiah said: "I am young and I cannot speak" (Jer. 1: 8). Other Fathers too they ran away from priesthood. But by being they forced and ordained, they bore the task of serving for the name of God. And [1205] Neither must somebody strive at all costs to become a priest, if he doesn't feel the calling to priesthood, nut neither one must easily disregard the calling he feel within himself, or the calling ascertained by others in him. God doesn't give any gift vainly. He who disregards the gift he will be held accountable in front of God, because of not cherishing and developing that gift as he should. Where there is a gift, there will be a duty too (Gabe und Aufgabe).

he who is forced to come but he still refuses, the actually runs away from obedience. And the Scripture says: "The obedience is better than the sacrifice" (1 Kings[1206] 15: 22). And if you look at others who appease themselves into withdrawal and they never meet anybody, you must not cogitate that they should come among people. But if some of them meet the people and if necessary, they do not avoid entering the villages and the cities, and they are testified as good and skillful, those ones must be forced by the bishops to accept the ordination. This is for these can be useful not only to their souls but also to the souls of others. That's why the Apostle ordered to Titus "to place priests in each church" (Tit. 1: 5), doubtlessly, worthy of this job, as for instance was Timothy. And, also Saint Gregory and others like him were ordained forcedly[1207]. And if we research, we will find many other servants of God in our times who did alike, but by being they forced much they accepted this toil, because of fearing to disregard the will of God. And if somebody refuses recklessly, there will be needed prayers, in order that refusal not to endanger his soul. This is because of happening that satan topples over the man, by making the man to search for some justification. May God banish satan far from our souls and from all the ones who fear God. Amen.

808. Question: The same bishop wanted to ordain, into the fear of God, deacons on behalf of the Church and to place some people in churchly administrative positions. But because he didn't know whom he should chose according to God, he sent a list to the same Oldman with the names of the candidates, so that the Oldman to choose whomsoever he wanted. The Oldman chose some of them who, humanly, they seemed to be unfitted for administration, and the bishop wondered and asked the Oldman about that. And the Oldman answered thus:

Answer: I didn't appoint by myself, but I prayed and that what God showed me, that I chose. But not because I was worthy it was that answer given through me. But because it was necessary, God opened the mouth of the female donkey (Num. 22: 28).

[1207] It is not about a coercive ordination, but it is about insisting to persuade somebody to accept to be ordained.

809. Question: The same one sent to ask the same Oldman John how the deacons could manage to fulfill their jobs and they to be sent to bring the necessary answers, while they are unskilled in speaking and despised by people?

Answer: Tell to your master bishop: If you become like Abraham, God can raise sone to you out of these stones (Mt. 3: 9). And if you force yourself to put the whole your trust in God, if you appoint as administrators unskilled and inexperienced people, God will make them more fearsome than the rulers. And if you send them to bring answers to all the things you want, you will succeed through them towards the glory of the name of God. And if not, even if you sent as advocate an orator, he would come back without any result. The sons of Israel were strong in wars and they kept their heart into righteousness, they defeated their enemies, and when they didn't take care of their salvation, they were defeated by their enemies.

810. Question: And Hos can I become like Abraham?

Answer: I didn't tell you like Abraham in all aspects, but only in the cutting off of your will as he did, by showing that even in his decision to sacrifice his own son. His virtues were many. And if we cannot become like Abraham in all aspects, let's be like him at least in the visible aspects[1208].

811. Question: I am convinced that the things you told me are from God and I must fulfill them. But I reckon that all the people within church will be offended by this decision of mine and this thought of mine is difficult to bear. What do you command me: should I fulfill all of them or only those which are useful in the things I do?

Answer: The Lord said: "Everyone who doesn't hate his mother, his wife, his children, and even his soul, he cannot be My disciple" (Lk. 14: 26). And hating his soul means cutting all his will through ascesis. And one like this won't pay attention to the people's words and he doesn't try to be pleasant to them, but he takes heed at the questions of God and at the answers he received through the mouth of the saints[1209]. But he who asks he must believe that God puts in the mouth of the asked one the answer according to his heart[1210]. This is for he says: "May Him give you according to your heart" (Ps. 19: 4[1211]).

So, we have shown ourselves that we are people, by not being able to endure the condemnations and the troubles coming from the people. Even if one wanted to teach everybody, he wouldn't be able to do so. This is for not everyone wants the same thing.

[1209] God asks us questions, by starting the dialogue with us. And we must not only answer these questions, but themselves His questions are imprinted within us and they make the man a being who asks endlessly. Any answer given by the man to a question he is asked, it will give birth to another question.

In the fact that the man doesn't find a definitive and total answer neither within himself nor within world, the man feels that the definitive answer is beyond him and beyond the world, in an absolute infinite. That's why the man will ask endlessly, but he will never reach or cross the border. With the asking character of the human being was occupying himself the German theologian W. Pannenberg, in his study "Die Frage nach Gott", in his book "Grundfragen systematischer Theologie", Gottingen 2/1979. But one answers God's questions by fulfilling God's commandments, which are directions for following the road that we can advance on, in the knowing and in the real imprinting of God within us. That's why the saints gave the bets answers to the question from God, and through the answers with the deed they advanced into the knowledge of God Who was reflected ever more clearly within their being. At Saint Gregory of Nyssa, the answers to the questions from God, as practical progresses towards God and within God, by fulfilling God's commandments, those answers are called "epektasis", extensions beyond the levels reached by the won being into God.

[1210] But the man asks not only on himself, but he asks also others. And the man received the best answers from God through the mouth of the saints. But God gives him answers through the saints according to the level which that man has reached on. By this it is shown that him who asks he too helps to the answer, or he makes that answer to be given to him according to the level he has reached by his efforts. This is for the answer equals the understanding occurring within man. But the saints, they occasion to the man and confirms to the man that understanding. This shows again the intimate union, or the reciprocal interiority between him who is spiritually advanced and he who asks him. But that depends also on him who asks, as it can be seen in the following rows within this text. The responsibility wakened up in the questioned one, in front of God, it determines him to receive also that answer that is appropriate to him who asks.

[1211] In KJB we have: Ps. 20: 4: "Grant thee according to thine own heart, and fulfil all thy counsel."; in ROB we have: Ps. 19: 4: "May the Lord give you according to your heart and may Him fulfill all your counsels." (E. l. t.'s n.)

You have asked me about consummation, namely about that power of throwing everything upon God so that God to choose them whom He wants and about the fact that when we reach the answer, we don't accept that answer. This happens because we don't know that God sees differently than the people see. This is because the people notice (often) only the visible aspects. And the people mix (within answers) their will too[1212]. But God sees also the invisible aspects and the deeps of the heart; and God sees the things to come too, as present. But we benefited much out of knowing that until now remains within us that what is human. By this we find out our measures, or where we are, and we still humble ourselves in order us to take the gift of the humble[1213]. Consequently, we prayed to God for as He gave prophet Hezekiah instead of man dung ox dung (Hez. 4: 12-15), and as God gave a king to the Israelites when he saw that they wanted a king (1 Kings[1214] 8: 5-22), we pray God to descend, likewise, to the will of our helplessness. And lo that His kindness descended all the way to cut off His will for us[1215]. So, if we do not defame on ourselves, by admitting that [1212] The man must give answers to himself, for he must ask questions to himself. Or, the man must ask for answers to his questions from another as well. But the man often doesn't accept the true answers given him by his heart, or by a holy man. But the man wants superficial and inappropriate answers to his questions. That's why the man remains locked up into darkness. And in the end, the man renounces to ask himself essential questions. Thus, the man comes closer to the animal by no longer searching except for that what fulfills his bodily instinct. The man must answer according to the question from God, namely according to God's will, for the man's natural development. IN the possibility of using the world in a liar manner, it is shown the man's freedom. On the other hand, it is characteristic to the man a ceaseless progress in finding out ever more conform words for expressing the indefinitely complex reality given by God. As the man advances into the discovery of the creation's complexity, he sees the creation as imprinted by the human personalism, in last analysis by the divine personalism. But if the man reduces the reality only to the material reality, the enrichment through words expressed by the man, it will be unilateral and remained in superficiality.

[1213] Even if we cannot give the answers according to the measure of the questions, we will still gain a lot by admitting this fact. This is for by doing so we admit our limitation, and so we know Him Who surpasses us infinitely. By this we humble ourselves and thus we still receive the gift of a true knowledge.

[1215] This is the supreme kenosis, or the descent of God to our weakness. God allows un into our helplessness, by cutting off His will. This is for God doesn't want to treat us like some wood logs. And he also knows that some us of being left within the limits of the things which we can do by our will, we will have had enough of that poverty and we will come back into the wide content of the things wanted by Him. So, God have been allowing us to fall from bad to worse, as He allowed Hezekiah to fall for the ox dung to the man dung, and as he gave a king to the Israelites, though He knew that was not in their benefit. This helps us to humble ourselves even more.

until now we have still been eating vegetables, Go will make us worthy of solid food that is of them who are consummate into Christ. Amen.

Question: I have a pious and skillful secretary and recognized as such. But I hesitate whether I to ordain him or not, lest to offend some people, as one who would fulfill my own pleasure. What do you command me to do?

Answer: You do not think right about your secretary. If he was bad, unskilled, and not recognized as such, I would say ok. But if he is recognized as good and skillful, do not overlook that by invoking a liar excuse, the commandment of the Apostle who says that some people like these must be ordained (1Tim. 3: 7). You must know that he who does a thing with the fear of God, by not leaning his heart towards human things, even if that deed is followed by a temptation, that temptation won't last and neither will harm somebody. This is because such a temptation comes out of the devil's envy. I pray you to forgive me for the Lord. And pray for me.

813. Question: A monk who were previously an advocate, he asked for being ordained as priest in the church of the holy city[1216]. And the bishop, by being influenced by the intervention of some people he ordained that monk as a deacon, by tacking in account his title as advocate. And the bishop was prayed to ordain that monk as a presbyter. But the bishop repented for the committed deed so that he sent to be asked the same Oldman if he did good by ordaining that monk into deacon. And if he will do good if he ordains him into priest.

Answer: Once done, it will remain done. So, don't be sad about that. This is for powerful is God in order to lead, by His will, this brother to the knowledge of the truth. Regarding the priesthood, do not allow to be yourself influenced, for a while, to give it to him. This is for, if the will show fruits worthy of this ministration, God will let you know about that. This is for God is not far from us (Acts 12: 27). That's why you shouldn't pay attention to his title as advocate, or only to the world's wisdom. This is because, if the man doesn't have the spiritual wisdom, he vainly will have the worldly wisdom[1217]. But blessed is him who has both of these wisdoms. This is for he says: "Every scholar having teaching about the Kingdom of Heavens is like a rich man who gets out of his treasure new and old things" (Mt. 13: 52). Take heed not to allow yourself be carried away by any wind. This is for "the bad sayings corrupt the good habits" (1 Cor. 15: 33).

814. Question: And if I don't know whom to ordain for the church es from villages, what will I do?

Answer: The people from villages will bear witness. And you will trust their witness and you will throw the responsibility upon them, you will ordain the candidates recommended by the villagers. And they will see. And you will be not guilty.

815. Question: And if a village has enough clerics, but the villagers bear witness for others too, because of wanting those too, should I listen to them and ordain these too even unnecessarily?

Answer: If ac church has enough clerics, you must not ordain others more, in order there not to occur disturbance. So, there where are enough clerics, you should not listen to the people who testify for other more. This is because, if a village has ten worthy candidates whom the people testify about, that they are worthy, should one ordain those too? No. But one must do everything orderly. But if they really need another cleric and they testify about a candidate, you must ordain one even though he refused to accept the ordination.

[1217] The world's wisdom, by the fact that it is defined, it locks up that what it knows within separating limits, by remaining far from the reality which all the things are united in, mysteriously and undefinably. This unity of theirs, we will be able to see it at the fullest within God if we open ourselves to Him.

816. Question: A village needs a priest and the villagers recommend two candidates, and one of those is married for the second time, but the other is poor. Which one should I ordain?

Answer: You must not ordain him who is married for the second time, because of being that against the canons[1218]. But you will ordain the poor one. But you should think at where you could give him some help from, because of his poverty.

817. Question: Among the clergy ordained by us there are some serving. Other, who were ordained somewhere else, they are added by the request of the village, to that village's clergy, being they serving too. Should done of them to be appointed to civilian tasks?

Answer: Those who are ordained or appointed at the request of the villagers must not be submitted neither to the bodily servings, not to the monetary dues (of that village). And they who have been ordained because somebody asked or exerted pressure for that, they smut not be submitted to the bodily servings, but only to the monetary dues, even if it was heard that they would have paid for their ordination. This is for their status must be honored. And he who has paid he will be the one bearing his sin.

818. Question: By ordaining somebody, I caused upset to somebody else, and I feel uneasily, because I don't know if I did rightly or wrongly.

Answer: If your sadness is caused by your another's sin or carelessness, you will cogitate that you have done rightly. But if it is a bodily sadness, because you have done that thing out of avenge, you should repent and ordain that one according to your own decision.

819. Question: Diverse persons caused me much unrest, by asking me for ordaining some candidates, whom I have been reckoning about, until now, that I must not ordain any of them. Now, a good friend, loving-f Christ, who toiled much for us at the powerful people, out of his faith into God, he asked me to ordain a layman by testifying about that one that is a good man. Should I do that for him?

Answer: If you put the whole your strut in God, you wouldn't worry about anything. But because you still need people, you should thank him for the thankfulness he produced to you. This is for it was written: "As you want the people to do to you, you too do them alike? (Lk. 6: 31). Likewise, if that one who asks you for that he is a good man, and the man whom he testifies is a good man too, you should doubt his testimony and hesitate to ordain the candidate recommended by him. This is for he will bear the responsibility. And if you know that the candidate is not good, but he is stained in some regard, you won't accept to ordain him, otherwise you will bear the damnation.

820. Question: There were exposed some people as being Manicheist and they ran away form danger and they went somewhere else in order to be baptized, if they could. What do you order me to do?

Answer: For the exposed Manicheist you should write in order you to impede their intention by showing to those who want to baptize them that they are actually Manicheist. And it will depend on those to baptize them or not. This is for not everybody pays the due attention to these things. And not everybody knows that such people like these need much zeal and a long time and hearing the godlike words and to be catechized regarding the Holy Mystery, and only then to be they accepted; so, they must not be accepted immediately as they arrived. This is because of being this a fearsome thing. And there where it is not longing for God, we must remember our Master Who sys: "Do not give the holy things to the dogs" (Mt. 7: 6).

821. Question: It has been issued an imperial commandment that stops the few to maintain their rules anymore. It is alike to the schismatics too. And some of them have come after the Holy Passover has ended, to be baptized, and other to be imparted. Should we welcome them? And when must we reckon them as worthy of Baptism and of the Holy Impartation?

Them who want to be baptized (enlightened), you must accept them. And you must give them the Holy Baptism in the Holy Forty Days of the Easter Fasting, or at the Ascent of the Savior. And so, they will have the whole week as holiday. But if you suspect someone that he wants to do that only formally, or because of fearing the imperial order, you will tell to that one: "If you come because of the imperial order, that will be a sin. But if you come by the fear of God, and for life, you will gain two things: that one of the life and the bodily one". You should tell the same thing also to them who want to receive the Communion (the Holy Impartation) with the Church[1219]. And if they tell you: "We come for God" you will immediately welcome them. For they are Christians.

822. Question: A man from another nation was caught in the country of the believers and many say that he should be killed or burnt. Is that right or wrong?

Answer: He must not be killed or burnt. This is not a deed characteristic to the Christians. But he must be disapproved and give him a fine. This is for these things touch the people. Then he must be entrusted to somebody to fear God and he will teach the stranger the way of the lord and that will enlighten him.

823. Question: Father, I have big upsets from the people who do my injustice and whom I resist. I am reckoned as their enemy and I do not find somebody to help me. That's why I am troubled and I want to leave the Church.

[1219] One can see from here that the participation to Christ is one with the full communion with the Church. Those who were excommunicated were kept far from the Holy Impartation, but also from the full communion with the Church.

Answer: Tell me whether or not it is a sin to transgress the Apostle's commandment. That is obviously a sin. If so, the Apostle says: "Are you ties to a woman? Do not try to untie yourself" (1 Cor. 7: 27). But you married the Church. Do not trye to part with it. Otherwise, you will suffer temptations and you will repent for this deed of yours. So, you must suffer manly the troubles coming upon you, and so you will find the mercy of God. This is for he says: "he who endures to the very end, he will be saved" (Mt. 10: 22). Resist the evil and the lord will bring your enemies to your feet. And the opposants will become your friends. Fight to the death, for truth, and God will fight for you[1220]. Do not ask the people for help, because he who trusts the people he will fall quickly. The help form God surpasses tens of thousands of people. This is for the Lord says: "The Lord is my helper and I won't feat that what the man can do to me" (Ps. 117: 6[1221]). So, lean your heart into the Lord and encourage yourself and be strong. And the lord will be with you.

824. The question of the same one towards the same Great Oldman: I do not oppose, Master, any of your orders. But pray for me in order I to receive the help from God and for I to be protected from the temptations rising against me.

Answer: I know that I am nothing[1222]. And I do not have prayer as God wills. But he who asks for somebody's prayers, he too must bring his small toil to the prayer of him who prays. This is for it was written: "Much can the prayer of the righteous [1220] Only by fighting with the whole your power, there will be God too present within yourself, and God will fight with His power that will be intertwined with your power. If I fight drowsily, God won't fight powerfully within me. God wants me to be strong, but I am not strong if I don't feel my power straining. And in this training of mine there is God too working, on the measure of my straining.

[1221] In KJB we have: Ps. 118: 6: "The Lord is on my side; I will not fear: what can man do unto me?"; in ROB we have: Ps. 117: 6 "The Lord is my helper; I won't fear that what the man can do to me." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[1222] Here we have a change of a sole word from the Socrates's sentence: I know that I know nothing". But only a Christian can operate this change. This is because the Socratic pantheism contains in this sentence a contradiction. The Christian know that he is a creature, and that he is not part of the supreme Being. And the supreme Being differs from the creature. But the Christian can sip power out of God through prayer. Only if the Christian has not prayer, only then he will be nothing, as it is said in the following phrase, though right when the Christian hasn't God within himself, he won't live his nothingness.

upheld by word" (Jas. 5: 16), namely helped by him who asked for prayers[1223]. Your angel must know that not only a little are you protected by God through the prayers of the saints. But take heed also at how the deacon prays for you, when saying the word of the Apostle: "Rightly teaching the word of the truth" (2 Tim. 2: 15)[1224]. Show the truth and do not be ashamed by man, neither you should try to be pleasant to somebody. And you will find grace in front of God and of the people. And do not cogitate anything according to the man. This is because of all the too human thing God gets disgusted[1225]. And let the Church not to do injustice to anybody, but let the Church be an example to everyone through justice. And God will be within you and you will be within God. And God will protect you against any evil and against all the traps of the enemies. May our Lord Jesus Christ be with your ghost. Amen.

825. Question: The same one, because of disregarding some right of the Church in order him to be pleasant to some people, he was surrendered by God permission, to temptation, and he got troubled, and he sent to ask the Great Oldman abut that. And the Oldman answered him:

Answer: This surrender was not done without the permission of God. Therefore, let's examine our hearts and we will find out what commandment we have transgressed, and because of that we have been surrendered to temptation[1226].

826. Question of the same one towards the same Oldman: Father, I know that I harmed both my soul and the holy Church of God. And that's why the opposition to the Church go harsher. This is because of being many and strong they who wage war to [1223] All of us are weak. All of us get discouraged when being alone. This is an experience we always have. Even a simple word uttered by somebody else it strengthens us. All the more is our prayer strengthened by the prayers of others. There is a flux of power crossing from one to another.

[1224] One can see from here that at that time this was uttered by the deacon and not by the priest as it is today.

[1225] God wants us to have Him, or us to have our thought at Him in that what we are doing; But we think only at us in separation from god, as we or something could be separated from God's ultimate foundation.

[1226] All these answers were sent to a bishop, consequently to his questions.

the Church. And if I want to resist them, there will follow a loss for the Church. And as much as it depends on the man, there is not solution. But "To God everything is possible" (Mt. 19: 26). That's why I fall before you, Master, ask for forgiveness for me, and help me and the Church. And make the trouble stop, as you wish. This is for you can do that.

Answer: If to God everything is possible, and we believe so, let's do into Him everything we can and He will destroy them who resist us[1227]. This is for God "scatters the plans of the nations and he destroys the plots of the rulers. And His will remains forever" (Ps. 32: 10). You must uphold the truth and fight for truth. And God will wage war for you to His enemies[1228]. Those ones resist you bodily, but you stand up spiritually, namely through prayer and asks for everything, by asking God to help you. And "reproach, rebuke, and urge" (2 Tim. 4: 2), as it is due to a spiritual teacher. And do not fear them, "For are more numerous them who are with us than with them" (IV Kings[1229] 6: 16). These ones are with the devil and with the people having the same passions, while we are with God and with His saints. We trust God Who said: "I won't let you, neither will I forsake you" (Josh. 1: 5). And "He will do to us much more than we ask for or than we understand" (Eph. 3: 20). And He will fulfill with us the word: "Blessed is him who [1227] This is the steadfast formula of the saint: when we set all our power in motion, God places within it His power too; or, when we set in motion the whole our power, that is a sing that God works powerfully within us. Then we surely succeed. God sets the whole our being in motion. Or, by setting ourselves the whole our being in motion, God has a propitious environment to work in. If there remained only our power, even if we set all our power in motion, we wouldn't succeed to do that what we want to. Our power is limited, but God makes us cross over its limits, over its "helplessness".

[1228] The Truth is Christ, for he is God and for He has within Himself the humanity in the fulness of its content brought back to normalness and to the living in a human form of the infiniteness of God. He who fight for this truth or for this human life into the godlike infiniteness, through him God himself will defeat his adversaries, by showing them how empty they are in comparison to them who have Christ within them. If the Son of God embodied Himself as man, that means that the man must be completed through God. Then the man lives the truth. The truth becomes reality to us when we too contribute to fill ourselves up evermore with Christ Who is God and true man. So, on one hand the truth is a given, and on the other hand we achieve the truth by fulfilling our need for being us united with God. We will fully have the truth in the eschatological future. The truth is given and it is being given to us, but we too advance towards discovering it, by advancing us towards actualizing the truth within us. We live the truth, anticipatedly, by prayer.

has the Lord as his helper, and who trusts his Lord God" (Ps. 145: 5[1230]).

Therefore, if a small loss is to come, we will despise it and we won't allow ourselves to the ashamed by the face of the man. This is because otherwise God gets angry, Let's stand into truth. And the enemies won't be late to be brought to our feet. And God Who is always extolled by His servant, He will be extolled.

You must have the saints as your allies, through they prayers to God. Teach, as you have heard, rightly, the word of the truth, as a bishop of God. And the people will bow down before you as before a true servant of God, with fear and with tremble and with love. This is for they who fear God they will be feared by people, as God's angels are feared by demons too. So, do not fear. This is for God and His grace are with you. Take from above that power that was taken by the Apostles, by the grace of Christ our God. And His grace will remain with you to your last breath. I am embracing you with holy embrace. I am embracing you into the Holy Ghost praying you to pray for me out of love.

827. Question: Father, the Church received much help from God after your holy words. And some of the people who did injustice to the Church and who started against the Church's members, they beg us for peace. And they promise us to heal themselves up and to correct the injustices they did against us and to appease their people who are against us. What do you command me? Should I accept them or not?

Answer: I they pray you, you will receive them for Him Who commanded us to forgive one another. And give them the opportunity to appease the others, mercifully or mercilessly. And let them be given as rule to respect the right of each one.

828. Question: It is good to keep the records of the Church?

[1230] In KJB we have: Ps. 146: 5: "Happy is he that hath the God of Jacob for his help, whose hope is in the Lord his God:"; in ROB we have: Ps. 145; 5: "happy is him who has God of Jacob as helper, his trust into his Lord God," (E. l. t.'s n.)

Answer: If you keep the records as records of the Church you will keep the records of God. This is for you are the administrator of God and you owe to keep those records, so that fi there will be something more, you to feed the poor and the orphans, Whose Father and nourisher is God. And you to provide their families with subsistence goods. And if there is nothing in plus, you will take care of making something. If you do not so, you won't truly keep the records of the Church, but you will actually keep your own records, according to your will. And by doing so, there will no longer be kept the records of God, but of the devil. So, do everything according to God and you will be rewarded by Him.

829. Question: This loss was caused in diverse ways, and I am troubled because I don't have any means in my hand. What should I do?

Answer: The Scripture says that "him who does injustice to us, he doesn't do that injustice to you but to the Holy Ghost Who lives within you" (2 Tim. 1: 14). So, do not be sad for a human loss. This is for the lord Himself said: "You Father from heavens know that what you need even before you ask Him for that" (Mt. 6: 8). But you must search for the Kingdom of God, by doing its deeds, and all of these 'will be added to you" (Mt. 6: 33). And if you suffer because of the lack of material means, you will find plentifully in front of you all the goods, by the will of God. remember that it was written: "They who want to live according to god, they will be persecuted" (2 Tim. 3: 12). But he says again: "Rejoice into the Lord always when reaching into diverse trials" (Jas. 1: 2). This is the persecution and these are the temptations. But suffer them courageously and with faith and God will be extolled through you[1231]. This is for the patience makes the man experienced. And the hope doesn't shame the man up. Pray for me.

[1231] God will be extolled through you if you show how much you love Him by enduring so many troubled for Him. But also, for God will strengthen you into your patience. And these things will be seen by others and they will wonder about God's power shown through you. Our power that extolls God it is not shown when the things go well for us, but when we endure patiently the hardships. That's why we glorify Christ not only for His resurrection but also for His cross and for His decent, out of love for us, through embodiment, by taking all our weaknesses, pains, human emotions – except for the sin. That's why the whole Church's cult is doxological. Through the cult we show the glory of God in everything He did for us by descending to us. By that He has given value to our humanity, because by itself our humanity would have been nothing.

830. Question: because the so-called execution-agents come into this city and they always expect gifts from the Church, I don't know what to do. Should I send them gifts? But by doing so I will upset God, because of me spending inappropriately the means due to the poor. Should I not send them gifts? But then they will speak evil of me to the rulers. What do you order me to do?

Answer: The execution-agents are in the service of the human governments and sending them gifts is the sign of the human fear. So, if we want not to fear them and if we want to stand strong into the truth, then we will listen to the word of the Apostle who says: "If you want to not fear the government, do the good and you will be praised" (Rom. 13: 13). Do not fear the slandering. This is for it was said: "Right in that what you are gossiped in, they will be ashamed those who speak evil about your behavior into Christ" (1 Pt. 3: 16); and again: "If I was pleasant to people, I wouldn't be the servant of God" (gal. 1: 10).

831. (V. 831 a). Question: Some counties of the province being troubled by the duke's soldiers, and the property of the churches being stolen, the chiefs of the city wanted to make that thing known to the emperor. But they feared the persecution form the duke. So, they sent to ask the Great Oldman about that.

Answer: If you believe that God upholds the poor, you will have courage in this thing. This is for, certainly, He Who upholds the poor he stays in from of the warrior for them, for Himself said: "For you have done to one of these all-unimportant one, you have done in to Me" (Mt. 25: 40).

832. (V. 831 b). The answer of the Great Oldman towards them who were lazy to do that.

Take heed not to be fulfilled with you the word: "After you started into ghost, are you now finishing into body" (Gal. 3: 3)? Don't you know that this is a thing of God? And that re not only you fighting for this thing, but also many other fight together with you through prayers? Take heed that, if you leave the thing of God that God will punish you. Regarding the governments, let nobody be afraid of them, for nobody can resist the will of God. Think always to fight to the death for the truth. And the lord will fight with you.

833. (V. 838). The answer of the other Oldman towards the bishop who asked about the same meddling of the duke and who kept his silence[1232].

Take heed at yourself. Because neither the duke not the emperor will save us on the day of the judgment. So, do not allow yourself to be scared by them in thig thing, in order you to find mercy on front of God. This is for not you will bear the burden for this thing, but God and the Oldman. And therefore, if you set in work your power, you will be partaker to reward. And if not, you will receive condemnation, Pray for me.

834. (V. 839). Question: Question of the same one towards the same one: Because the duke embraced recently the Christendom in order him to be pleasant to God, would you want us to write him a letter of friendship? This is for he has the power to correct the injustice done to us. And if you reckon that as good, will you dictate us the letter? This is for that will have much power, by comprising in it the words the Holy Ghost Who dwells within you.

Answer: You write him the following: We all the ones who fear God rejoiced for your coming to the faith into Christ. But we will rejoice even more when seeing the spiritual fruits of your coming as sprouting out of it. This is for it will truly be a joy to us, if the evangelic word is being fulfilled with you: "So to lighten your light before people, as by seeing your good deeds, they to extoll your Father Who is in heavens" (Mt. 5: 16). As your highness knows, the recently planted plants bring many and beautiful fruits. Because have been recently planted (neophyte), show everybody, towards their building up, the many and beautiful spiritual fruits of yours, towards the glory of the Holy and of-one-being Trinity and towards your praising by the loving-of Christ emperors, from whom you have received this great gift of the Baptism (of the enlightenment). And which these ones are spiritual fruits are, if not fighting for the faith into Christ and upholding the Christendom? This is for, though the Christendom is upheld mainly through Christ, but God wants to probe also the people's will to see where they are leaning to. Actually, the Church cannot be abolished. This is for the promise of God says: "On this rock I will build up My Church and the gates of the hell won't defeat it" (Mt. 16: 18). So, the good must come. But blessed is him whom the good coms through. So, you too who love Christ, steal this blessing. This I wanted you to know, you glorious Lord, that if him who holds the power was pagan and opposant to the faith, we wouldn't have anything to do but to close the churches until the loving-of Christ emperors would open them again[1233].

[1233] The Church isn't a reality locked up into present. The Church represents a tension and an eschatological perspective. Christ isn't only present within Church and within world. He comes to, and in His coming He is ever closer. But we too contribute to His coming. And for Christ is the spring of the good, the good doesn't only exist, but the good also comes, fighting against the wounds which attempt to remove the presence of the good and to impede the coming of the good. But to the continuous coming of the good, to imposing the good over the evil that impedes it, we too must contribute. This coming of the good will last until the end of the world, and the evil will resist the good to the very end. But for the fuller coming of the good depends also on people, and many of the people could remain evermore attached to the evil, so that the evil could increase. But, the more the evil makes out of this world a place less able to tolerate it, the closer will be the coming of Christ so that the come good to change the present image of the world. This is for the good cannot resign from expending. The good must come. Until the good could fit in this form of the world together with the evil the good was content to be in the world. But because of the evil tending to hold an ever-greater power in the world, right by that the evil contributed to need for changing the world.

This will be shown by the lessening of them who believe in Christ, even though their faith will be strengthened. And this state could be seen prefigured in that what the saint tells us in these rows. When the duke of this world, who is enemy to Christ, he will lock up the churches, then Emperor Christ will come and He will open up the churches and He will change the present form of the world.

835. The question of the bishop towards the other Oldman John: Powerful person from the city want to bring new customs into the Church entrusted to me and to ask for a tax on the wine brought in its harbors. And some of them advise us to take the entire tax and that will bring a great earning to the Church. Do you order us to take that tax?

Answer: It is inappropriate to the Church to collect taxes. That is a thing of the layman. So, you tell to those ones: If we are Christians, we don't need to obey the people but we follow Christ Who says: "As you want the people to do to you, you will do them the same" (Mt. 7: 12; Lk. 6: 31). But take heed that the things consecrated to the Church are consecrated to God and you must not diminish anything of those. Woe to him who cause losses to the Church[1234]!

836. (V. 840). Question: The Church has canons that forbid the people to go to theaters in the evening[1235], or to participate to the pagan feasts. But the chief of the province wants to disregard those. What do you order me to write him?

Answer: Write him these: You are a servant of God as the Apostle says (Rom. 3: 6) and you are required to keep His commandments, as I am required too. So, we owe to guard the high laws of the Church towards the praise of God and of ours. I remember you this for I love you as our friend. This is because it is inappropriate to the Christians and to loving-of Christ people that you to cherish more the human pleasures, which harm your souls, than you to serve God.

837. (V. 841). A great and powerful fellow citizen of ours, who lives in Constantinople, he fights strongly to be the people allowed to go to theaters. What do you command me to write him? If he wants to plot against us, pray so that him not to be successful.

[1234] It is inappropriate to the Church to collect taxes on the wive brought by ships into the harbors. But it is also wrong to collect taxes from the Church for the wine brought to it.

[1235] It is about the Canons no. 24 and 51 of the Ecumenical Synods V-VI and XVII from Carthage, which forbid the people from going to theaters.

Answer: Write him like this: "Son, the whole our prayer is that God to increase the faith of the Christians into His fear and Him to raise the horn of His Church. God is the hope for our salvation. And you should know that we have no other help except from the Church and form the prayers of the saints. He who leans on them he finds them at the right moment. But the theaters are the workshops of the devil. And he who strive to support the theaters he will fall off the flock of Christ. But we know that you are sons of the Church of Christ and you always strive to do the things pleasant to Him. So, you do not need to be lectured. But I am writing you in order I to remind you not to become yourselves partakers with them who strive to sustain the devil's theaters[1236]. This is because in time of need they cannot help to anything, except to drown they who run to them. And he who has his heart attached to God and who wants to sustain the things pleasant to God, that one will daringly call God on the day of his trouble and he will be guided towards God Who bestows to each one according to his deeds (Ps. 61: 11[1237]). You now that "the form of this world passes" (1 Cor. &; 21), but the faith of God remains forever (Ps. 116: 2[1238]; 1 Pt. 1: 25)". Write them these things and do not fear the plots of the people, and fight for the faith in God and have God as your Helper. And he who resists God will be drown as Pharaoh in the Red Sea. And he who believes doubtlessly, he will stay steadfast on the hard Rock (Mt. 7: 24).

[1236] The interdiction to go to the theaters it is maintained up to these days by monks. The interdiction given back then by the Church regarding the attending of the theaters was probably because the theatrical creations were then inherited form antiquity and in them was affirmed the faith in gods.

[1237] In KJB we have: Ps. 32: 11-12: "God hath spoken once; twice have I heard this; that power belongeth unto God. // Also unto thee, O Lord, belongeth mercy: for thou renderest to every man according to his work."; in ROB we have: Ps. 61: 11: "Once spoke God, I heard these two things: that the power is His and Yours, Lord, it is the mercy; that You will reward each one according to his deeds." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[1238] In KJB we have: Ps. 117: 2: "For his merciful kindness is great toward us: and the truth of the Lord endureth for ever. Praise ye the Lord."; in ROB we have: Ps. 116: 2: "For His mercy has been strengthened over us and the truth of the lord will remain forever." (E. l. t.'s n.)

838. (V. 832 a). Question: Father, I strive on each day to fast until evening. Tell me is that is right. And if I must pray before doing something.

Answer: Regarding your fasting, examine your heart in order not to be stolen by the vain-glory. And if your heart haven't been stolen, you will examine it again, and see if your fasting doesn't make you weak in fulfilling your duties. This is for this weakness isn't useful. And if it doesn't harm you in that regard, the fasting is good.

And the prayer is luminous light. And each Christian must pray before doing something, and especially the priest of God must do so.

839. (This is not given in Manuscript Pantelimon, no. 192). Between bars: Master, pray for me, in the name of the Lord. This is for I put all my trust in God and in your holy prayers.

Answer: May the Holy Ghost entrust you that you always are in my prayers, day and night… (the end is missing).

840. (Partially given in the V. 832 b; it is not complete except in the Manuscript Paris, in Greek, no. 873). A loving-of Christ layman who left his country for fighting in the name of God for His Church against some people who were making troubles, he sent to the same Oldman for asking him for a word of life and for an urge.

Answer: Keep strongly the love for God, the truth, and the freedom. And do not fear to help according to your power, praying for everything and step assertively on your ways. This is because they who try to be pleasant to the people they are stranger to God and the Holy Ghost isn't within them. Have the Ghost of God and He will teach you everything as it is right. This is because you cannot succeed without Him anything as it should. Guard yourself against the disturbance of the anger. Do not fear anybody, but remember the word: "The Lord is my Helper, I won't fear what the man could do to me" (Ps. 117:

6[1239]); and: "All the nations surrendered me and I pushed them back in the name of the Lord" (Ps. 117: 10[1240]). If it happens that somebody gets disturbed by you, tell him with humbleness, with love, and with understanding, the truth. And God will tame him down by the prayers of the saints. You have also the teaching of the Fathers and with God it will protect you from the evil one. So, be strong and courageous through Hod (The Second Law 31: 6).

841. (V. 833). Question: When I doubt about something, if I should do it or not, tell me what should I do?

Answer: When the need occurs for you to do something, pray God for three times, asking Him not to allow you to stray away. And if you remain in the same thought, you will do what that thought tells you to do, for that thought comes from God and not from you. When you do not achieve the certitude, you will ask the Fathers.

842. (V. 834). Question: When the Fathers tell me something but I cogitate the opposite, I am at war with my trust in them. But I tell to my thought: "It must be like the Fathers say". Is this a sign of trust or of mistrust?

Answer: Answering to you thought like that it is a sign of trust. This is for, if the Fathers tell you that the darkness if luminous light, you will strive to believe them. But one need to pay much attention. This is for God tells us now a word that must be fulfilled and after a little while there occurs a change in that thing (the circumstance changes). And if somebody is not strengthened in faith, he will be offended. It is likewise with the things said by the Fathers. This is for some people do not know the meaning of the said things, neither they know the oikonomia of God regarding them, so that they always ask:

[1239] In KJB we have: Ps. 118: 6: "The Lord is on my side; I will not fear: what can man do unto me?"; in ROB we have: Ps. 117: 6 "The Lord is my helper; I won't fear that what the man can do to me." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[1240] In KJB we have: Ps. 118: 10: "All nations compassed me about: but in the name of the Lord will I destroy them."; in ROB we have: Ps. 117: 10: "All the nations surrounded me and in the name of the Lord, I defeated them."

"What haven't the Fathers told us like, about the occurring change?". This is for they always speak relatedly to the present time. But if the Fathers were asked after a change has occurred, they would say differently, according to their Teacher Who said that He was bringing the anger upon Ahab, but for Ahab changed, God too went ahead from His anger, saying: "I won't bring the anger during his days" (3 Kings[1241] 21: 29). What would therefore tell the mindless ones about God" That God is in nescience? They are wrong, because of not knowing that the judgments of God are bottomless deep and therefore non-comprisable. These mysteries have been entrusted to the believers. But not all of them receive these mysteries. You must know, therefore, brother, that the true Fathers do not get upset when they seem to be liars to them who do not know the mysteries of God. This is for if this doesn't bring them any benefit, it neither harm them. This is for they do not want to have a glory as their Master has[1242].

843. (This is not given in the Manuscript Ivir no. 1307). Question: The anger of God started against the people, many of them possessed by unclean ghosts they were barking like dogs and so they prophesized, so that many people went stray because of believing that those were saying the truth. Some loving-of Christ laymen sent to ask the Great Oldman about that.

Answer: By knowing form before our weakness, God told us: "There will rise liar Christs and liar prophets who will do signs and wonders in order to deceive, if possible, even the chosen ones" (Mt. 24: 24).

844. (This is not given in the Manuscript Ivir no. 1307). The answer of the same Great Oldman to the bishop of the city who asked him for telling what he should do; and to pray for the people fallen under the anger mentioned before.

[1242] The circumstance changes, but the man's thought changes too. Within man too, there is a virtual torrent out of which can come other and other thoughts. And God give us freedom. It might be that right out of the connection with the doglike torrent can come out other and other thoughts form the human torrent. Does God foresee those? But isn't God free on each moment to decide according to a new circumstance? This is the unfathomable mystery of God.

It is appropriate to your all-holiness to suffer more as much as you can for them who are in trouble. This is a duty of the father and of the spiritual teacher. This is for the good shepherd takes care of his sheep and he watches them; so, you must teach the people to bring their part to the ask and to the prayer done for them. This is for so become possible the great things, according to the commandment of the Lord (Mt. 17: 20; Jn. 14: 20).

845. (V. 836). Question: A loving-of Christ layman asked the same Oldman: Will it be good if I tell to mister bishop everything I thing as useful to him?

Answer: This is a right thing and appropriate to that love according to God. You only guard your heart clean in front of God and that won't hurt you. And having a clean heart means not to tell anything about somebody for revenge, but only to do him good. Do not reckon this as a gossip. This is for everything done for correction isn't a gossip. This is for out of gossip doesn't come anything good. But in this case one must help the good. And that's why one must not use the gossip.

846. (This is not given in the Manuscript Paris, Greek, no. 873). Question: What is the doubt of the heart (Mt. 14: 31 and 28: 17) and what does it mean being doubtful (Jas. 1: 8 and 4: 8)?

Answer: The doubt of the heart consists of asking yourself, or of having always within your soul the question: "Has God mercy on me, or not?". If you think that not, that is faithlessness. If you do not believe that God has more mercy on you than you can understand, why do you continue praying[1243]? And being doubtful means not to surrender yourself totally to death in exchange for the Kingdom of Heavens, but to take care more of things for the body.

[1243] Only if you do not doubt the help from God, you will be able to pray with the whole your trust. But you must pray, for only form God comes the help.

847. (This is not given in the Manuscript Paris, Greek, no. 873). Question: What does it mean the word: "It cannot be hidden a city place on the top of a mountain" (Mt. 5: 14)?

Answer: the city is the soul, and the mountain is the peak of the virtues which they who have climbed it on "shine like some candlesticks of light within world, having word of life that will be their glory on the day of Christ" (Phil. 2: 15-16).

848. (This is not given in the Manuscript Paris, Greek, no. 873). Question: What does it mean the word: Always rejoice; pray ceaselessly, give thanks in everything" (Tim. 5: 16-18)?

Answer: In these three things it is comprised the whole our salvation. Always rejoicing it is a guarantee for the righteousness; this is because somebody won't be able to rejoice himself if he doesn't live according to the righteousness[1244]. The ceaseless prayer impedes us from doing anything evil. Finally, giving thanks in ell the things it is an obvious proof for the love for Christ. And if we keep the first two commandments, we will give thanks to God.

We haven't translated the letters 849-850 from the French translation, because they are not given except in that translation, and they are not given in the Greek manuscripts and because they contain some unclarities.

[1244] The righteousness is, in the biblical language, the totality of the virtues.

"The death is the night which I am wared of, and therefore it torments me. Knowing the love of God shown within Christ, it is luminous light, it is the day, it is the satisfying meaning of my life. This daylight has removed the surrounding night. But this death is not only one with the darkness, but it is also one with him who sinks into it. This is because, that one unites himself with the darkness and with the death, and somehow unconsciously, to such an extent that himself become the death and the darkness. On the other hand, between sleep and drunkenness and night, there is some identity with the death. The night makes us sleeping and it urged us to drunkenness; and these two makes us desiring for the night even more. The sleep too is darkness and spiritual death, and the sleep increases these two; the drunkenness is likewise. But the spiritual sleep isn't a total unconsciousness too, but it is a tormented nightmare, or a string of nightmares. The drunkenness is likewise. In sleep and in drunkenness we crook and we make meaningless the whole reality. So will be the hell."

Short Introduction of the Translator

God helped me to finish The Romanian Academia with a translation of a work of the greatest spiritual force, one full of concrete advices founded on a real experience, a paramount book of the teachings of the hermit Fathers form Paterikon, who lived in the Egypt's deserts. I think that is have been the will of God that The Romanian Philokalia, that starts with a wringing attributed to Saint Anthony the Great, to come to an end with a work belonging to a hermit who lives in the same Egyptian deserts, soon after Anthony's death (355). By thig it is shown that the spiritual life that follows the example of Christ, it is the same in all times, being upheld by the same Holy Ghost of Christ.

In his Prologue to the first edition, monk Agustine brings serious proofs in favor to attributing this powerful writing to Isaiah the Hermit, and not to Isaiah the Monophysite who opposed the Chalcedon Synod and signed the "Enoticon" of Emperor Zenon, in the year 482, and who dies around the year 488. I hadn't available this text when I published the 27 heads in the volume no. I of The Romanian Philokalia, at Sibius, in the year 1947.

And because of not having available either the "Prologue" wrote by monk Augustine, I have adopted together with other Patrologists (Bardenhewer, Florovschi), the Krüger's thesis that the author was a Monophysite monk. But now we agree monk Augustine.

And even the text of these "Words" show that they couldn't come but from an author who was moving through the Egypt's deserts. Thie is because these "Words" contain sentences of subtle analysis and descriptions in the style of those from the Egyptian Paterikon and intercalations of dialogues like those form Paterikon. This shows that the isolation of those Fathers was not a total one. It was likewise Abba Isaiah's withdrawal, the author of the present writing. An old man lived in a monastic cell together with one of two disciples, and they visited one another, in order to learn from each other. The main preoccupation is to learn the brothers to overcome any egotism of the pride in the relationships among them, by following the example of Christ Who wants the monk to overcome any passion, by having within his soul the ceaseless fear of God and the humble cogitation produced by that hear. The monasteries hosting communities of monks started their existence a little later, as also the idiorhythmic monasteries which the monks subsisted by themselves in monastic cells from the same monastery.

Now we are publishing this main work of Abba Isaiah, a work that is of a great spiritual density and finesse that spring out of an authentic experience and it is not influenced by the authors adherence to the mentioned pro-Monophysite document issued by Emperor Zenon.

We are going to give, before giving the text of the "Words", the "Prologue" to the second edition written by the pundit Athonite monk Theoclit Dionysiatis, and that of monk Augustine from the first edition. The first edition was published by monk Augustine from Jerusalem, according to a manuscript form the library belonging to the Jerusalem's Patriarchy, in Jerusalem, in the year 1911, and the second edition was published by Sotir Schina, at Volos, in the year 1962. The "Prologue" written by monk Augustine contains also other precious fragments from the work of Abba Isaiah and some biographical data, which contribute to clarify the nature on the content of this work.

Monk Augustine gives also precious footnotes showing some borrowings made by Abba Isaiah from Fathers preceding him, as for instance from Anthony and Pachomius, and the many borrowings made out of this writing by ulterior authors, especially by Paul Evergetin. We are going to reproduce only very few of those footnotes. In exchange, we are going to attach several of our own footnotes, trying to explain to the today's readers some of the teachings of Abba Isaia.

Monk Teoclit Dionisiatis

Prologue to the Second Edition of the Writing from the Present Volume

The beloved brother into Christ and blessed editor of these writing of the Fathers, mister Sotir Schina, he has done me against the honor to write a Preface to the new book that is going to be issued by the printing house "The Hagiorite Library", namely the most spiritual and the most precious book belonging to Pious Isaiah the Hermit.

Pious Isaiah lives in the deserts of the Egypt in the second half of the Century IV and he was contemporary to Pious Makarius the Egyptian. Great ascetic and mystical father, he is rightly inscribed in the "angels' camp", in the holy group of the Fathers of the Orthodox ascetic tradition. And this book, the only one preserved, it constitutes an all-beautiful collection of the best fragranced flowers from the highly spiritual experiences, and out of his feelings, gained by him in his holy battles against the destroyer passions and against the demons. This book is also the fruit of the ceaseless and deep meditation at the Holy Scriptures, as one can see out of the often use of the places ceaselessly cited.

This book, as also all the books watchfulness and ascetic, they teach in all details about the nature of the soul's passions, which start out of the soul's passionate part, or out of wrath (anger) and of lust, and these books also teach about the diverse works of the devils, and about the diverse spiritual battles and about the ways which the grace works in within the cleaned up soul. These books teach us about the holiness of the heart, about the illuminations brought by the Holy Ghost, and about the union into the godlike love with our Lord Jesus.

To the attentive reader it won't be difficult to get convinced about the coherence of the writing of Pious Isaiah to the teaching of all ascetic Fathers who lives in watchfulness, starting with Anthony the Great, Basil the Great, Gregory the Theologian, and up to the hesychasts from the Century XIV, Gregory Palamas, Nicephorus the Monk, and Saint Nicodemus the Hagiorite, and an entire constellation of Holy Fathers, who found the doing that advances to contemplation ("sight"), in the deserts of Egypt, in Palestine, in Siria, in Constantinople, in the Holy Mountain, in Macedonia, and in Veria[3]. And itself this harmony, the undeniable accord of the teaching of the Holy Fathers, it shows that the spiritual Tradition of our all-Holy Orthodox Church has been formed out of the illumination of the Holy Ghost and out of the spiritual loving of the clean and undefiled minds.

This full of wisdom and grace book, it has been edited in the series of editing the Fathers' texts, by the "Hagiorite Library", with the healthy intention to be make known the teaching contained by the libraries of the Holy Monasteries and of the monastic cells, and to become these texts a spiritual food and they to guide the piousness of the loving-of God souls, and also in order to cover a void in the bibliography of the Greek texts of the monasteries, given that today this book is difficult to be found in the edition published by Augustin of Jordan, in the year 1911.

In our epoque, when the sin of the corruptive publications has increased, it has increased also the grace of publishing the holy books of the Fathers. And I hope that this book of our Pious Father Isaiah the Hermit it will plentifully bring fruits of grace within the hearts of its pious readers. More than that, today when the orientation towards the external things it rules, namely towards sensuality and towards the cheap ethicality, and because the people tend to edulcorated emotions, books like this one belonging to Abba Isaiah constitute true atomic bombs, able to wake up the souls who are dead into sins, to give birth to the fear of God, a fear that helps cleaning the souls, and then, according to the non-stray teaching, to lead the pious souls to desiring the heavenly goods. This is for through the sweetness of the human teaching and through judiciary sermons, the soul burdened by sin cannot be convinced to leave the bodily pleasures of all sorts, except through powerful spiritual pleasures. Only through the spiritual and godlike love can be defeated the ill love for the deceiving things of the world.

It would have been a precious and just thing that, before I finishing this short prologue, to ask the all-simple and lacking-of-pride our friend and brother into Christ, Mister Sotir Schina – whose deeds resembled to "a treasure in pot vessels" – not to consider this prologue – which cherishes the toils of hit sedition of a new patristic work – as the sin of a diminution of his know modesty. But I am content with the hope that the importance of this serious gift will be known, a gift bestowed though him to the churches by our Greek Orthodox Church. And its prayers, and its blessings, together with the gratitude and with the prayers of the pious readers for the humbleness of the editor of the books of the Fathers, it will be the most beneficial reward for him. And may hid deed be “of a good spiritual fragrance” towards the Lord.

Monk Augustine

Prologue to the First Edition

(having some paragraphs shortened)

During the first centuries of the Christendom, it was reckoned that, according to the Gospel, as being a means to moral consummation of the man, the total rejection of the pleasure provided by the world and the battle against the troubles of the body. Many of the Christian back then, who were moved by the godlike zeal to reach the consummation, they sold their wealth and they gave the money either to the treasury of the community or they shared it, by themselves, to the poor[4]. And by living according to that restrain and cleanness, they totally bestowed themselves to the prayer and to the meditation at the godlike Scriptures. They who lives like that were called ascetics[5]. Origen († 254) wrote that most of the Christians toiled in ceaseless virginity[6]. Clement († 220) called these people as "the chosen ones of the chosen ones"[7]. Ireneus († 202), Dionysus of Alexandria († 264), and Epiphany († 403) confess that fasted for two or three days, and they occupied themselves with the prayer. They especially lived in ascesis in cities and in villages and within a community, by not leaving their homes. And during persecutions, they either were reaped like the wheat ears and adorned with the crown of the martyrdom, or they were scattered by getting far away from their persecutors. And after the persecution passed, they regathered together and each of them "live in ascesis individually"[8]. In the Liturgy attributed to Clement, they who were called "ascetics living in virginity and cleanness", they formed a specific group within the Church by the end of the Century IV, and they approached the impartation with the Holy Mysteries coming second after the clerics.

And at the Apostle: "Put on Lord Jesus Christ and do not make your care for your body towards lust" (Rom. 13: 14). "But I torment my body and I submit it top the slavery, to make myself unworthy" (1 Cor. 9: 27).

But when the found out by experience that it is impossible to one to achieve the virtue in the middle of the world and of the relatives[9], they got far into deserts in order to surrender themselves exclusively to serve God; they were called withdrawn (anchorites), hermits, and monks. Among the ascetics living during the first centuries of the Christendom, who lives in virginity and cleanness, that is reckoned as the first stage of the monasticism, there detached themselves the ascetics of the wilderness, called as anchorites[10]. But they differed from the first mentioned ones, because those lives in ascesis in their country and in the midst of the people close to them, while these ones lived into wilderness in a harsh ascesis. Finally, some of the withdrawn ones went to hermits who distinguished themselves in virtue and wisdom, and, by obeying those one's rule, they formed groups which give birth to the life in Scetis, out ow which, later on, there came the monasticism in monastic communities.

About the beginning of the monastic life there are several opinions. Some people say that the monasticism has its beginning into Gospel, others see Elijah the Tishbite as the first one giving the example for the monastic life, while others see as such John the Baptist and the Apostles. Other, again, they see the cause of the monastic life in the persecutions perpetrated by the idols' worshippers upon Christians. But there is also the opinion that the monastic life had it beginning among the first Christians from Jerusalem. But during the persecutions ordered by Diocletian (303) all the writing about the first monks were burnt or went missing. That's why we lack clean and sure proofs about the existence of the monks before Constantine the Great. Some other people see as beginners of this kind of life the Therapists who lived beyond the sea shore (of the Red Sea?). One of the more recent researchers (Weingarten, About the Monastic Rules, Lipsca, 1907), he reckons that the oldest Christian monks are a simple imitation of the idols' worshippers who live locked up in the church of Serapis of Memphis, locked up in monastic cells and communicating with the people from outside through a sole window. But the simple resemblance of the living mode of the Christian monks to the way of living of the idols' worshippers who lived locked up, it is not a sufficient reason for claiming that there is a relation of origin, tight and unseparated between those and these ones. But, thought it is admitted that before the Christian monks there existed not only singular individuals practicing an ascesis in their national religion, but also gathered in groups as the Essenes and the Therapists, the science though admitted that the monastic life was born totally independent from that of the Pre-Christian epoque.

The tradition reckons Paul of Thebes as founder of the withdrawn or hermit-like Christian life, as he ran away from the persecution ordered by Decius (240-251), while he was still young, and he left for the wilderness and he lives there until he was more than ninety. He is reckoned as the first one living into wilderness. But he who moved the ascesis form village to wilderness and who gave the first beginning to the real monastic life, it was Anthony (250-355). And after he accepted, since the year 305, several monks who gathered around him to live together with him, there were formed serval monasteries and he led all of those monasteries and so the life in Scetis was constituted. The monastic life spread quickly in Egypt, and Egypt became famous for that.

The wilderness of Nitria, due to its wild nature, it soon elicited the attention of the monks. The first known inhabitant of it is admitted to be Amun (Century IV), later on called of Nitria. He settled down into this wilderness, because on the Nitria mountain there were no monasteries yet. And he lives an animated life between Scetis and the mount called Nitria, for twenty-two years (Sozomen, The Churchly History, chapter 31). That place was later called as "cells", because of the scattered hermits' monastics cells (Ibid). At a half of day or at a half of night distance, there was the wilderness of the Scetis, where there was lived a monastic life in the wildest loneliness. The wilderness of the Scetis was to great that only looking at it was burdening the eye with a deadly sadness. One could advance on its sand-dunes into it only by orienting himself using the stars.

The monastic life expended quickly in the desert of Nitria. We do not know when Abba Isaiah was born. If we admit as true an unpublished story attributed to Abba Isaiah of Thebe, we will admit that his country was Thebe (out of an epistle wrote by bishop Amon towards Theophilus of Alexandria).

We can see that he was contemporary to Abba Orsisius († 376, who was the descendant of Saint Pachomius during the time of Athanasius the Great. We do not know either at what age he came to monastic life, or other deeds from his life, because of lack of information. But some of the stories saved as Paladius, and out of the titles of the Library of our community, we will strive to clarify to some extent the things regarding Abba Isaiah.

He who was coming to the monastic life put on the monastic schism either under the leadership of the hermitage's presbyter, or under the rule of the virtuous old man who the newcomer obeyed to and whom he was learning from the practice of the virtues. But many newcomers came also to the old man who distinguished themselves in their virtuous life, and the disciples obeyed those ones' teaching, by piously guarding their advices and teachings. Coming to the old man and being advised by them it was a rule of the old fathers[11] (Monk Augustine – p. 15 – Prologue to the first edition). Some of them went even for ten times a month to virtuous old men in order to benefit of their teaching[12].

Observing that custom, Isaiah went to Abba Makarios and asked him: "Tell me a word". And the old man told him: "Run away from people". And Abba Isaiah told him: "What is it running away from people?". And the old man told him: "Sitting without your cell and crying because of your sins"[13]. On some other time, Isaiah himself recounts: "I was once sitting near to Abba Makarius, and there came seven brothers from Alexandira tempting Abba Makarius by telling him: "Tell us, Father, how can we be saved?". And I tool a notebook and I sat myself aside, and I wrote the words coming out of his lips"[14]. And Isaiah went also at Abba Silvanus to hear his teachings too. On some other time, being him warred by dirty thoughts, he went to Abba Poemen who was distinguished for his virtues, and he asked that one too about those. And Abbe Poemen told him: "As a chest of drawers full with clothes, if somebody forget about those clothes, those clothes will be attacked by mold, likewise in case se of the thoughts, if we do not employ them bodily, in time they will disappear or they will rot away" (The Greek Paterikon). All the monks worked and they fed themselves by their efforts. And some of them went to reap "in the middle of the summer, and they gathered so the wheat they needed, and they also shared their earnings to other monks too" (Sozomen, The Churchly History, book no. 6, chapter 28). Others were intertwining ropes out of date palm leaves, and they crafted baskets out of those ropes. They weren't forbidden either form practicing other sorts of handwork. Thus, we come across, in Paterikon, also upon calligraphers living at Scetis.

[11] A brother asked an old man, saying: "Is it good to go to the old men and to appease yourself there?'. The old man told him: "Going to the old men was the tule of the old fathers" (Code Sinaiticus 448, f. 295, a).

[12] "Abba Poemen said that Abba Paphnutius said that he went to visit the old men for the times a month, during their life" (Paterikon, Greek edition).

Each anchorite left and sold his handwork in villages and in cities[15]. And they came back they bought the things they needed for a living. But there were also worldly people who came and took the handwork form the monks in exchange for what the monks needed, so that they spared the monks of walking through the world. Regarding Isaiah's handwork and the diet of the monks living in Scetis, it has been preserved the following story said by Paladius:

"Abba Ahila came once to the cell of Abba Isaiah in Scetis and found him eating. He was putting salt and water into a bowl. And the old man saw him hiding that behind the basked ant told him: "Tell we, what are you eating?". And he answered: "Forgive me Abba, for I have been cutting branches and I set them in fire and I took in my mouth bread and salt and my throat got dry because of the burn and the bread hasn't gone down, and that's why I had to take a little salty water so that I can eat it. Forgive me!". And the old man said: "Come and see Isaiah eating soup in the desert. If you want to eat soup, go to Egypt" (Greek Paterikon, p. 124).

Abba Isaiah probably dwelled near to Amma Amoi. At his arrival Abba Amoi asked him: "How do you see me know?". Abba (Isaiah answered: "As on an angle, Father". And after Abba Amoi showed him his shortcomings as a beginner, he asked Isaiah later on: "How do you see me now?". And Isaiah told him: “As on satan; even if you tell me a kind word, I receive it like a sword” (Greek Paterikon).

During that epoque, the monks who were dominated by their enthusiasm for living into wilderness, they were withdrawing themselves in the most far deserts in order they to serve God there in quietude and in harsh ascesis. They were upheld in that by the (harsh) high living of some fathers and by the idea that one achieved the virtue into wilderness. That’s why we are going to attribute to our Isaiah a story said to belong to Isaiah of Thebe, a story found among the fragment of his words, and we are going to admit that himself went into wilderness and while he was there, it happened to him the following thing recounted by himself, later on, to the brothers, for their benefit.

“That one (Isaiah of Thebe) said: While I was sitting into the most-inner wilderness, twenty-three years by now, a brother cam to me and, while he was washing up my feet, he told me: “I want, Abba, I too to dwell in this wilderness”. And I told him: “If you can endure, you can advance”. And I told him those with my tongue, but I judged him in my heart. And after he left, I stood up to pray and I reaches like in an ecstasy and I saw a fearsome man having a shiny face and a spear of fire, and he told me: “Tell me, old man, who made the heavens and the earth, and strengthened them?”. I told him: “God”. And he told me again: “Who measures the sky with his palm and the earth with his fist? (Isaiah 40), Who weighed the mountains and the hills? (Ibid), Who hanged the firmament and tightened it without tying it? Who sealed the sea and put a bridle to the bottomless deep? Who hanged the clouds and commanded them to bear the waters? Who made the sun a composed the moon? Who whitened the snow and the crystal? Who empties the clouds and make them bearing the waters and pouring it on the face of the entire earth? Who gathered up the winds and locked them in an unmastered palm? Who examines the hearts and the entrails (Ps. 7: 10) and the thoughts and he exposed the whispers and he sees the deeps, and he looks at the things in the darkness?”. I told him: “God alone”. And he told me: “Do you know that God is Who judges rightly and He gives each one according to his deeds” (Rom. 2: 7)? I told him: “Yes, I really know”. And he told me” If you knew this, why would you judge that brother who came to you, in your heart?”. And I told him: “I have mistaken to the heavens and in front of God and in front of you and behold I am giving you as guarantor the Holy and All-Praised Birth-Giver of God, for I won't even slide again in such a mistake". And he told me: "You have sown bitterness within your heart, you will reap it for three years from now on". And I saw him living for the water spring from where I drunk and he hit that water with his fire sword. And I came back to my senses and I cried bitterly, and when I went to the water spring, I tasted the water and it was bitter. And each time I tasted that water, I remembered the word of the angel and I told to myself: "Lo, you have sown bitterness, reap it with your hand". And I did that for three years, crying and paining. And, after three years, that water became sweet again and I knew that God have mercy on me. That's why I am telling you, that there is nothing worse than speaking evil about your neighbor, and worse than judging your neighbor. This is because they who fornicate and commit debauchery, by seeing that, they know that they commit sin and they often come to repentance. But they who judge, they come with difficulty to become aware of themselves" (Codex 113 of the Patriarchy from Jerusalem, f. 66 v.)

Again, we do not know when (Isaiah) took Peter as his disciple. Out of the Speech 25 we see that that one wrote to Abba Isaiah, who had advised him about salvation, before Peter came to the monastic life. Maybe at the beginning of his rejection of the world and of the co-inhabitance with Abba Isaia, it happened to him the followings: "Abba Peter, the disciple of Abba Isaha said: "I once sat at the table with my father Isaiah and with some other old men, and I laughed because of the work of the devil. And seeing me Abba Isaac, the hegumen of the hermitage, he told Abba Isaia: rebuke your disciple because he is going to fall into the hands of the devils. This is because the laughter is born out of the lack of fear. And especially at the table, when we sit in front of the eyes of God and the holy angels fight for us, how could us not owe to shed tears and to sigh and to get ashamed by eating the foods of the speechless, we who are speaking and who must be in the sweetness of the Paradise for the shininess given by God (over them), but not, because of his disobedience, we have been kindred to the non-understanding beasts and we likened ourselves to them (Ps. 48:

6[16]), by eating the good close to the pasture[17]? That monk that sits at the table and he eats and he drinks fearlessly and he doesn't think at the food he eats, and he doesn't despise on himself and he doesn't' judge his conscience by saying: How comes that I the wicked and unworthy of heavens or earth, I am eating bread and vegetables, and many saints and righteous and ascetics and hermits, they hunger up and they are thirsty and they lack their clothing, and they don't eat even bread, while I, the wicked, I eat boiled foods while, instead, I should eat dust and ashes. This is because that monk who sits at the table but he doesn't pray with his mind, but he speaks and utters any word, he is bodily and not spiritual. And he who laughs at the table he has separated himself from God and God has parted with him. And his prayer is not accepted and his toils are useless".

From the next unedited story, we can see that except Peter, Abba Isaiah accepted another disciple called Elisha. In this story we are going to find plenty of information regarding the Scetis, as also about the monastic community from Alexandria. "Abba Isaiah told us: When I was younger, I lost wight almost to my death. And my father was constantly next to me and he was calling doctors and he promised them many things whether they healed me. And the doctors strived a lot but they were unable to chase my illness away form me. Then they told to my father: This young man is going to die in three days. After my father heads that form the doctors, he prayed with tears and he ran to the church of Saint Mark the Evangelist, and he said that found inside the church a very old monk sitting on a chair. That monk saw my father sad and he told to my father: "What's happened to you. Mister Procopius? Why are you troubled?". My father told him: "My name is known to you; and the cause of my grief too". And the old man told to my father: "Let's go to the house (of my father)". So, the old man

[16] In KJB we have: Ps. 49: 12: "Nevertheless man being in honour abideth not: he is like the beasts that perish."; in ROB we have: Ps. 48: 12: "And the man, being in honor, he didn't understand; he came together with the mindless beasts and he likened himself to them." (E. l. t.' n.)

[17] God looks at us, with a special care, when we eat, because then, while nourishing our body, there is a bigger temptation us to fall into the bodily lusts. Then the angels too stay more around us and they fight away the demons which tempt us more while we are eating. When eating, we come closer to the non-understanding animals. Adam and Eva, before their falling, they mastered over all the things (animals, nature's products). After their sin, the things can tempt the people.

cam and examined me and he told to my father: "Bring your wife here" – for my mother was very-loving-of Christ and of monasticism, while my father hated the monks very much. And he told to my father: "God asks for three things from you, and if you guard those things God will bestow you the life of your son. And my father said: "Guarantor for me is Saint Mark the Evangelist that I will keep those things". And the old man told to my father: "Lo, you have nineteen years of fornication and by fornicating you have defiled the bed of your wife and that's why God surrendered all your children to death, before time. And the second thing is: you should not give this young man to marriage, but make him a monk. The third thing: you must have no communion with the Ariens or with the Theodosian"[18]. And my father told him: "I will keep these things for the rest of my life". And the old man uttered a prayer for me, and in three days I got healthy and then I continued living for three more years in the house of my father. And when my father was taking a trip somewhere, I engaged the niece of the chieftains (of the city) (mayor) Augustalin. And while my father was preparing the things necessary for the marriage, it happened that the girl fell under the disturbance of an awful devil being her tormented badly and mercilessly. The parent of that girl and my father took her everywhere, for seven months, to churches, to doctors, and to sorcerers. At the end, according to the general opinion, they brought her to Abba Makarius[19], and I accompanied them. And the old man took some oil and prayer for her and ordered her mother to anoint her with oil from head to toes. While her was anointed, the devil started shouting out" "I am burnt, I am burnt". And the devil went out of the girl and attached himself to me, sevenfold stronger, tormenting me awfully. And I was tormented by that demon for thirty days before that old man who talked before to my father and who rose me out of illness. When my father saw him, my father ran away from him. And the old man took me to his monastic cell and he prayer for me for the whole night, staying on his knees, and so he banished that devil away from me. And he cut my hair and he dressed me up with a coat made of wool and of camel hair, and he gave me

[18] It could be here about the heresy of the Theodotian who have as initiator a certain Theodot who was saying that Christ was a mere man (Eusebius, The Churchly History, c. 28: 6).

[19] This Abba Makarius is Makarius the Egyptian, who, according to Socrates, The Churchly History, book no. 4, chapter 23. "He had so man y healings and he cast out so many devils that it would be necessary an own writing for describing those".

to Abba Isaia. The old man had another disciple too, who was called Peter. After I staid there for seven months, my father heard about me and he sent four of his servants with eight camels, loaded with all sorts of foods and fruits. And he also sent me a letter and, after reading it, I started crying. Abba Isaiah saw that letter in my hands and he stood up and plucked it from my hand and he tore it apart. And I was upset, and therefore Abba started rebuking me in front of the servants sent by my father. Since that very hour, the devil of the hatred rushed upon me and I was no longer able even to see him or to hear his voice, but I was looking at him as at Haron, and I was feeling his words as some arrows and as sone double edged knives.

And while he was sitting to prayer and to taking vigils, I was cursing those because of my much hatred and disgust which I have against him, and for many times I woke up during night thinking to kill him, btu I feared Peter, his other servant. And the old man didn't stop teaching and advising me, and sometimes he comforted me, while on some other times he rebuked me. And when I came close to the Holy Impartation, he impeded me and chased me away form there. He also sent me out from the table, telling me: "You won't eat until you say" I have mistaken, forgive me". But I did the opposite and I secretly stole food. When he was praying, I was sitting; when he was taking vigils, I was sleeping; when he was reading, I was speaking vain things; when he was crying, I was laughing. The demon saw me obeying him in everything, so that he started showing me dreams and hallucinations against the old man. And I, the humiliated one, I started trusting the suspicions caused me by the devil, and I was thinking at that attentively, in details, with understanding and watchfulness. And I started believing and impropriating the ugly and evil and defiled thoughts which were flowing out of my heart and troubled me against the old man.

So, these thoughts started troubling me inside, and the devils form outside started moving me towards wrath, anger, upset, and enmity. And the devil of the pride, better said the devil of the perdition, started being my teacher. And I even started teaching the things taught me by the devil, namely to express those and to herald them in front of everybody. This was because, by being I mastered by upset, I was telling to myself: who is this hypocrite deceiver, this impostor, this ordinary man whom I, despite coming I from a city and from an important family and out of noble parents, so rich, and having so many servants, I have become his hireling, better said I am serving him like I was a slave, by pouring water on his hands, by being I a tool that carries water and gathers wood, while rather he should serve me and obey me, and not I to him. How many upsets, troubles, sadness, strife, and condemnations have I endure from him? How long have he made me to hunger, to get thirsty, to take vigil, to sleep on the floor? How much has he despised me, and which how many evils has he burdened me? And by being I taught these things by the devil, I got even angrier and I reckoned myself enduring injustice and suffering many evils. And my thought was telling me: go away form this cursed man, sit in a monastic cell as all the fathers do, because of this one not being a monk or even a Christian. Out of these thoughts I stared to see the old man, in my dream, as he would dance with women and with Ethiopians. And by believing those I was getting strengthened in my conviction that he was the enemy of God and the friend of the devils. Outside Scetis, at about three miles, there was a Hellenes (pagan) temple and in its middle was a marble statue, and the old man used to get out of Scetis, on Sunday, and he went there and cried. And the demon showed me, and not only once, that the old man brought sacrificed and worshipped the idols. And I supposed that those dreams were true, at the time when the old man used to go to that temple, I pretended something and I went out of the monastic cell and I hid myself behind a ruined wall. And I saw the old man coming in and there was a woman before him and I saw here praying and worshipping the idol and after she finished her prayer, I saw the old man bowing down before the animal image and he kissed the woman and accompanied by her, they existed that temple and the old man left for the Scetis and the woman left in the opposite direction[20].

I looked at those things for seven times and I reckoned those as certain, so that I started sitting outside the monastic cell and secretly telling to the brothers who came to visit the old man, in order to benefit of him: “Brothers, this Abba is a fornicator and a worshipper of the idols; why do allow him to deceive you by visiting him?”.

[20] He saw these as happening into a dream, or as hallucinations.

And I did this speaking to the monks who were visiting the old man, for about four months, and the more I strived to impede them from visiting him, the many were coming to visit him by the power of the Holy Ghost. Seeing I that, because I reckoned myself as humble, I stopped doing that and I raised my hands to the sky, saying: “Lord, give me patience”. And I the worthless and the wicked, I was reckoning that I endured unjustly and that I was practicing a virtue, and sighing I was saying: “Glory to you, God, what honor I came from to what dishonor, and what I was and what I am now”. And I was crying.

And the old man saw me and told me: “Good son, clean your heart, humble your thoughts, desire the humbleness of Christ, despise the pride, and take heed at yourself”.

Because of him telling me these, I got angry and troubled and I felt him words like some arrows wounding me. While sitting at the table together with him, I felt the foods spreading a bad smell and I was ashamed for I had to vomit not once, but twice or even trice. That’s why I left the table. And the thought disturbed me inside and didn’t stop telling me: “Get out of the house of this old man and, if possible, leave the Scetis. This is because through this old man you won’t be saved”. And I was telling to myself: Why do I endure all of these? When I was within the world I didn’t fornicate, neither I did steal, nor I did kill”. And my thought – better said the demon- was telling me: “You suffer justly, because you have upset your father and you mother and your relatives and your friends; and now you have left the holy fathers and you have come and you live lonely with this impostor who commits evils and who is merciless and shameless”. Those were the thoughts told me by the demon and I, the claimed humble and the sinner, I was about to consent to these to these evil and wicked thoughts.

And sunk into darkness, I thought I was luminous light, ant I thought I was living monastically, but I was of satan, and instead of criticizing and condemning on myself, I was criticizing and condemning the servant of God.

Being I in this disturbance of the thoughts, it happened that my father wrote me: “Your mother is dying, come to see her before she died”. So, I told to Peter: “I really go to see my mother”. Peter told that to Abba, and Abba came to me and told me: “My good son, sit here in the patience of God and let the suffering of your father and of your mother, for we have a Father in heavens Who takes care of us and of them according to our benefit. And if you do not obey me and still leave, you won't benefit your parents by anything, but you will harm yourself very much and later on you will repent much, because of not benefiting anything of that, but your absence will teach you a hard lesson". Hearing I those from the old man and being I kidnapped by the devil of the anger, I told to the old man: "Imposter and worshipper of idola, fornicator, adulterer, do you want to make me your equal?". And the old man was telling me: "The grace of God comes to me out of your mouth". And I was shouting out: "Impostor, idols worshipper". And my words made many old men to gather there and all the old men were disapproving me and condemning me. And I, because of the devil working within me, I took my monastic coat, I torn it down in halves, and I threw it to him and I left the monastic cell naked, I entered the monastic cell of one of the old men and I stole his coat and I left for Alexandria. There I found my mother dead and my father ill; him to dies after three days. And I being preoccupied with money and discussing about the other inheritance and regretting the fact that I became a monk, the evening came. And I sat on the bed and I cogitated at the things and at Abba Isaiah, I was saying: "Glory to you, Lord, for You have escaped me from that impostor and strayed old man".

And in the same time with that word I heard a thundering voice, saying: "Destruction and perdition to Procopius house". And immediately came a wind and a fire was lit in the four corners of the house. And I waked up disturbed and we barely were able to get out of the house because of the fire extending all over. All the inhabitants of Alexandria gathered up there but they couldn't do anything, because the fire melted down even the stones. And I felt ashamed and I thought at all the happened things and I left with big weakness and descouragement and I threw myself on the porch of Saint Mina. And the devil pretended again to be my witness and told me: "All these things have happened to you because of Abba Isaiah". Waking myself up, I told: "Really, that impostor sorcerer sent devils and burnt my house down". And saying that, I woke up in the morning and I went to Patriarch Eulogius[21], and I told him: “Master, avenge me on that idolater Abba Isaiah. This is because Abba Isaiah used his spells to burnt my house”. And the Patriarch told me: “May be speechless your lips which talk injustice against this righteous” (Ps. 30: 18[22]). And in the same time with the words of the Pope I saw an Egyptian beating me over my chest with a fire staff. And I immediately fell before the Patriarch trembling because of punishment. Then, the Patriarch stretched his hand and sealed my mouth. And the tying of my tongue was done. And I remained for seventy months punished under the yoke of Belial, and I was to everybody a worthy of compassion sight, seeming I like held in chains. This was because I was harming myself and those present around me, and they couldn’t help me. I was eating human feces. The loving-of Christ ones were feeling for me and they covered me with clothes because I was walking naked. But I was hitting my body and I was throwing away my clothes, and I was beating myself and the people around. And I was dirtying my body with feces which I laid myself into and I rolled myself into. And there was nobody to take care of me. I became like an elephant.

Because of seeing me like that, the loving-of Christ people from Alexandria brought some of the Fathers from Scetis, but those ones didn’t recognize me. And the loving-of Christ people form Alexandria told them: “This is the son of Procopius, who was monk at Abba Isaiah”. And the Fathers told them: “Have mercy and bring him back to the Scetis”. And the loving-of Christ ones hired a camel driver, they paid him, and they tied my hands and my feet and they sent me to the Scetis[23]. And the

[22] In KJB we have: Ps. 31: 18: “Let the lying lips be put to silence; which speak grievous things proudly and contemptuously against the righteous.”; in ROB we have: Ps. 30: 18: “Mute to be the cunning lips which speak lawlessness against the righteous, with pride and with defamation.” (E. l. t.’s n.)

[23] There were three roads between Alexandria and the Mount Nitria where the Valley of the Scetis was. The first road reached firstly the Mareotis shore, and then crossed through the Valley leading through the salt rocks, all the way to Mount Nitria (the Salted Mountain), where the center of the monastic settlements was. But that shore was submitted to winds and sometimes beaten upon by strong cyclones, and, often, the waves of the Valley were impassable. The second road led towards west, between sea and the shore of Mareotida, all the way to Mareotida’s end, and then bent southwards through a sandy beginning that separated the Valley of Nitria from the water of River Anhidros (without water) that seemingly was a branch of the River Nile, and that is also called as River Anhidros. The daring Melania wanted to take that road in her trip to Egypt, and she barely escaped from being kidnapped by the Arabs who were living by the seashore, and she escaped due to the rapidness of her horse. The third road climbed following the River Nile all the way up to Menphis or Arsinoe and from there it entered one or another of the valleys. He who starts Fathers form the Scetis gathered up in the big church and they take vigil for me and they anointed me with oil all over my body, and they banished the devil away from me[24]. But I remained scared because of my wounds and because of my defilements.

But I, the humble and the sinner, the wicked and the guilty, the one bellow any monastic trace, I heralded in details all the things happened to me and I recounted them to everybody, and I prayer them to pray for my humble and pained soul and to pray the old man to have mercy on me and to accept my repentance and not to allow me again to be tempted by the demon. And the fathers went on my behalf and brought to me Peter who was together-disciple to Abba Isaiah. And that one, by seeing me having my body rotten by dirt and wounds, this was for the fathers wanted to elicit the mercy and the pain of the old man on me, they disrobed me of the coat I was dressed up with and they laid me naked on a mattress. And Abba Peter, when he saw me, he threw himself over me and he cries continuously. And I was looking at him humiliated, discouraged, and ashamed. And him, after he cried much, he stood up and by taking one of the fathers they went to the old man. And I saw the old man and I was shouting out at him, saying: "Have mercy on me, you the servant of God, because I was strayed by devils, and do not allow me to be joy to the soul's corrupter. This is for I have been punished and tormented enough, as I deserved it". And the old man told me: "Have you known, my son, that the punishment comes upon the proud ones for their falling?". And I said: "I have learnt out of the things happened to me. And I am convinced that God is a righteous Judge Who rewards everybody according to his deeds" (Rom. 2: 6). And after sealing me with the sign of the cross[25], walking on that one, he will reach that part of Nitria touched by the water of the River Nila, where there are crocodiles. Melania, who dared to hit this road, she suffered many trials (Preface to the First Edition).

[24] Since the first times of the Church there was done something for the body too, as the Protestants and the Neo-Protestants do not do it, because they do not see that the soul works through the body, and also the body influenced the soul, All the Holy Mysteries use also a means for sanctifying the body. So, it was used the anointing of the body with oil, accompanied by prayers, in order to be the body sanctified by that. The demons have a weaker influence over the body. By anointing the body with oil, accompanied by prayers, there will be banished away the demons working within that body. Often the anointing with oil had healing effects too.

[25] Both from Anthony the Great (born in the year 250) and from this writing, we can ascertain that the Christians marked upon themselves with the sign of the cross even starting form the

the old man told me: “May God, the Maker of the entire creation, forgive your past deeds and may Him correct your future deeds”. And they sat me on ac hair and so they carried me to the monastic cell. And in a few days, by the grace of Christ (God), I got strengthened. And it was fulfilled with me the prophetic word that says: “With bit and with bridle you will squeeze him who doesn’t come close to you” (Ps. 31: 10[26]). And again: “Many are the beatings of the sinner” (Ps. 31: 11[27]).

So, the fathers of the Scetis knew about all the happenings and for they reckoned those as worthy to be recorded in writing, they summoned Pionius, who was a skilled calligrapher[28], and I was ordered to recount him exactly and in details those happenings. And the calligrapher wrote everything down and he left the first book of the writing “About the Hallucination from the Devil” (Cod. 113 of the Patriarchal Collection, f. 194).

Besides Peter and Elijah, there came others too, asking for beign accepted as disciples of Abba Isaiah. This is proven by the title of the first word: “Command toward the Brothers Who Are Together with Him”, but this I proven also by Abba Barsanuphius who wrote that thousands of questions were addressed to Abba Isaia by those who prayed him to explain that what they needed to know.

A brother cam to see the Great Isaiah[29] and told him: “Pray for me, Abba, because I am turning back into the world. This is because mu Abba reproaches me all the time telling me: devil, satan, enemy, Antichrist. That’ why I am living for the world”. And the old man told him: “Does he, son, say the truth?

first centuries of Christendom. The sects, by refusing the cross, they set themselves far from the Christendom from origins.

[26] In KJB we have: Ps. 32: 9: “Be ye not as the horse, or as the mule, which have no understanding: whose mouth must be held in with bit and bridle, lest they come near unto thee.”; in ROB we have: Ps. 31: 10: “Do not be like a horse or like a mule which there is not understanding at; with bit and with bridle I will squeeze their jaws so that they won’t come close to you.” (E. l. t.’s n.)

[27] In KJB we have: Ps. 32: 10: “Many sorrows shall be to the wicked: but he that trusteth in the Lord, mercy shall compass him about.”; in ROB we have: Ps. 31: 11: “Many are the beatings of the sinner; and on him who trusts God, the mercy will surround him.” (E. l. t.’s n.)

[28] Monk Augustine gives from also from Cod. 113, f. 181 a, from the collection of Patriarchy of Jerusalem, a news about Calligrapher Pionius, disciple of Abba Longinus, who is mentioned in Paterikon.

[29] Abba Isaiah is called as Great also by a troparion composed by Theodore Studites, in the third song of the canon of the Sunday of the cheese, in Triodon.

Christ and our Lord have also many names: God and the Lord and the Goo and the Merciful and the All-Keeper, and the Almighty. He is called as: God (Theos) for He sees everything[30]; Lord, for he is master over all the things; All-Keeper, for he upholds all the things. Belial has several names too: the devil, satan, enemy, cunning, Antichrist. Likewise, that man that does the good he is called as good. But that man who gossips another he is called as devil (gossiper), and he who contradicts and disturbs the brothers he is satan; and he who contradicts his superior brother or the chieftain, he is called enemy; he who plots upon somebody he is called cunning; he who thinks at evil things he is called as evil; the contrary to Christ and he who judges another he is called Antichrist; and he who commits sins, he is called as sinner. This is because anyone who commits the sin, he is servant to the sin (Jn. 8: 35). If you too, son, do the things of the devil, do not be upset by hearing that you are called as devil and satan and enemy. This is for our Lord and God told to the Je3ws: "You are sons of the devil" (Ibid 14).

Sighing up, the brother said: "Rightly so, Abba, I am devil and satan and Antichrist and enemy and cunning and sinner and evil and opposant, I the sinner and the wicked. That's why, after leaving from here, I am going to fall down before my Abba and I am going to cry and I am going to weep and I am going to ask him for forgiveness for the time of my life wasted by myself, because I was cunning and unclean, and enemy to god and servant to the devil, and enemy to my own life, and twisted and much-speaking, and speaking-against, and ready for any vain-speaking, and lazy to prayer and quick to anger and to contradict, and mocking and envious, and greedy for food and avenger. But I am thanking now to God for, by your righteous words, my soul has been saved". And while he was still confessing his sins, out of his mouth exited like a smoke, and it became a swirl and broke up all the pottery form that monastic cell. And it appeared like a small Ethiopian having one eye of fire, and ran out through the door shouting out and saying: "I am the devil of the anger?". And the brother prayed the old man for telling him a word of salvation and the old man answered him and told him: "If you want to follow our Lord Jesus Christ, you will guard His word and you will hand your former man on the cross, and you will have to stop them who pull you down from the cross before you will have not died. And you owe to endure their contempt and you to rest the heart of those who do you evil and to humiliate on yourself towards those who want to master you, and you to keep your mouth silent and not to judge anybody within your heart. This is because, if a thought comes to you judging your neighbor for some sins of his, you will firstly think at yourself because of being yourself a sinner, and think at the good things which you think about that you did, but you should not think that they were pleasant to God. And so, you won't dare to judge your neighbor. This is because loving the glory from people it will give birth to the lie, and refusing the glory from people makes the fear of God even bigger within your heart. Do not try to make friends with the glorious people form the world, lest the glory of God will get far from you. If you do your handwork, you won't despise it, but you must take care of it into the fear of God. Do not sleep in somebody's house while traveling[31]. When you didn't' wait for our advices and you left as you wanted, you have reached to be like the demons. And I, by getting myself very sad, I didn't want to find you worthy of my words, once I prayed you, and once I advised you like a father, but you didn't obey my words. The heart of the saints doesn't get locked up. But I forsook your soul that got endangered and I wrote you the present things. So, if you want to be even more mockery to the devils, leave your place by listening to my advice, and do and live in a monastery. And if you do not obey either this advice, you will later repent much because of this recklessness" (Coded Sinaiticus 206, f. 181 b).

On some other time, again Abba Isaiah by wanting to teach the brothers, he took a sack and he went there where people were threshing wheat, and he asked the landlord: "Give me wheat". And that one told him: "You too have reaped Abba?". And the Old man told him: "So, if somebody doesn't reap, he won't be paid?". And the landlord told him: "How do you expect me to give you wheat, because you haven't reaped?". And the old man told him: "So, if somebody doesn't reap, he won't have wheat?". The landlord told him: "No". and the old man left. And the brothers who saw him doing that, they prostrated before him and prayed him to tell them why did he do that. And the old man told them: "I did that as an example, for if somebody doesn't work, he won't take payment from God" (The Greek Paterikon, p. 181).

[31] "Do not sleep there where your heart fears the possibility of committing sins. And if you find out that you must eat there, you won't stary there after eating. This is for it will be more useful to upset the host, that you to hiddenly fornicate within your heart. If you can, do not look even at the woman's coat. Do so and you will be saved from the traps of the enemy" (Here it ends the Savaitic Codex no. 665 – in the Preface wrote by monks Augustine, p. 26).

Out of the following story preserved by Palladius, we can see Isaia's hospitality regarding the brothers. And what was Isaia's opinion about the earthly things it can be seen out of the observation done to a brother: "Abba Isaiah invited a certain brother and washed up his feet. And then he threw a towel in a pot and, after boiling it, he took that towel out. And the brother told him: "I haven't been boiling long enough, Abba". And Abba told to the brother: "Isn't it enough to you that you have seen it shiny? This too is a great comforting." (The Greek Paterikon, p. 181; Evergetinos, book no. 2, paragraph no. 16, p. 58).

Abba Isaiah didn't go to the agapes done by monk sat that time. The reasons why he avoided to accept those invitations can be seen in the following unpublished story:

"Abba Peter, the disciple of Abba Isaiah, recounted to us: I asked Abba Isaiah, saying: Why don't you go, Abba, to that agape, as all the fathers do? And he told me: "Son, each one knows what is beneficial to himself and what harms him". And he told him: "Peter, run away like form a snake or as from a fire, from any agape where you see being served wine. For many times I sat at agape and I drank wine, and I started to talk to the old men and we reached from discussing about Christ to speaking ugly and to gossip and we stood up disturbed. So, it is good to the monk to eat hashed and to drink sea water in his monastic cell rather than participating to agapes. This is because, if he gores there, he will eat that what he doesn't want and he will drink that what he doesn't want; and for many times he wills peak that which are inappropriate and he will hear useless things and he will get sad and he will disturb others and he will be disturbed by them. This is because, he who desires the resting of his body he won't lack occasions for participating to agapes, but him who gets used to agapes and to the remembrances of the saints[32] he will despise his life and he will get intertwined with many sins. This is because out of wine are born ugly thoughts and out of ugly thought are bork looks around, and out of this it will be born the laziness, and out of laziness the vain-speaking, and out of this it will be born the slander. And out of slander will be born the disrespect, and out of disrespect will be born the lust of the belly, and out of that the covetousness for food, and out of this will be born the fornication, and out of fornication will be born the irony". And I asked him: "Abba, what's the irony?". And he told me: "The irony is when somebody says jocks and laughs on the expense of somebody else; the irony is when somebody, instead of showing to somebody else openly that he criticizes him, he instead seemingly praises him by words. He who practices the irony shows himself as having a cunning and ill-intended thinking. This is for irony won't allow him to reach to love somebody" (From the mentioned Codex form the collection of the Patriarchy of Jerusalem, f. 67 a).

Abba Isaiah, for his fights and virtues, he was counted among the great Fathers of the wilderness, as one can deduce out of the followings: "They were telling about the Fathers: Abba Pambo, Abba Bessarion, Abba Isaiah, and Abba Paisius, that they were very powerful, having together with them Abba Artre as well. All of them were asked by the presbyter form the Mount of Nitria how should the brothers live. And they answered him: "In a great ascesis, guarding their conscience against their neighbor" (Cod. 137 from the collection of the Patriarchy, from the Century XIV).

Rufin was pronouncing himself piously about him (Vila Patrum, tome II, c. 10, p. 358). Out of the following story of Palladium one can see that he was occupying himself with the charisma of the foreseeing: "Abba Uros and Isaiah and Aba Paul met together, and there unexpectedly were, t the river, pious and ascetic men visiting the great Anuv[33]. At some distance form that place there were three monasteries. And they told to one another; "Let's each of us receive his living, as each one was honored by God". Abba Uros told them: "I ask God from the gift of us reaching tirelessly the place where we are going to, into the power of the Ghost". And immediately that he prayed for that the ship was ready and the wind was favorable and, in an instant, they were on the river floating against the current. And Isaiah told them: "What's to wonder about, friends, that a man will encounter us and he will announce to each of us the living we have to live? And Paul, the third one, he answered: "What will be, if God is unveiling us that, after three days, God will raise that man?". After they advanced a little towards that place, that man encountered them and he saluted them. And Paul told him: "Tell us, brother, your victories, for the day after tomorrow you will leave for God", and Anub told them: "Blessed is God Who has made known to me, as also about your coming and your living?". And he told to each of them their deeds, but he also explained his virtues" (The Lausiac History, chs. 55, 56, 57).

From the title of the Sabbaitic Codex (from Saint Sabba Monastery, near Bethlehem, translator's note), 72, from the Century XII, f. 58 b., "of Abba Sabba, the hesychastic and the presbyter", and from cod. No. 28, Paris, from the Century XV, f. 66-110, which comprises works attributed to Isaiah the presbyter, probably belonging to hegumen Isaiah from the Century IV (Krumbacher, Bizantinische Worktkunst, tome I, p. 318), we can see that he was a presbyter. It is unknown the date or his death, and it is assumed that it took place around the end of the century IV. His memory is celebrated in the Orthodox Church of the Saturday of the Cheese, together with all the Holy Fathers.

These are things regarding Abba Isaiah. And about his twenty-nine Speeches of his, lately, Krüger has launched the idea that it is doubtless the fact that the writing attributed to Isaiah from the Century IV have the also Egyptian Hermit who dies near Gaza, on 11th of Augst in the year 488, and so, these writings are moved from the Century IV in the Century V.

But before solving this matter we need to research the many Syriac writings bearing the name of Isaiah (Kügener, Byzanst. Zeirsch., 1900, f. 385-386). According to Isaiah's biographer, Isaiah was the first nomad monk from Egypt, in the most inner wilderness (Scetis). From there he moved to Jerusalem, and then he remained in the Eleutorupol desert, and after that he withdrew in Gaza, where he founded a monastery and he locked himself in a house without seeing any other person except the chief of his disciples: Peter. All Isaiah's answers were communicated, starting with his isolation, through the mouth of Peter. In the same Syriac manuscript, a short inedited news, it shows us that Isaiah the Hermit didn't' oppose the Synod from Chalcedon, though his disciple Peter opposed that Synod[34]. The information that Isaiah didn't oppose the Chalcedon Synod is not true, because Emperor Sophronius of Jerusalem (†641), in his Synodal Epistle against Monothelites, he wrote: "Peter… the Iberian stench, and the insane barbarian Isaiah, the friend of this Peter, they shown themselves the receiver of another acephalus heresy among Acephalus ones" (Patr. T. 87, part III, col. 3192-3193). And later on, while anathematizing the heresies, the epistle mentioned among those: that of Eutychians, that of Acephalus, that of Barsanuphius, and that of Isaiah".

But we can deduce the fact that the writing preserved (under the name of Isaiah) belonged to an author who lived during the century IV, out of the followings: "I canonically receive both the writings and the lived of the ascetics. I am saying this against the strayed Pamphilus, who came here from Orient, and he badly and in a liar manner gossiped the following Fathers: Mark, Isaiah, Barsanuphius, Dorotheos, and Hesychius, but he didn't' gossip Barsanuphius, Isaiah, Dorotheos, and The Acephalus united with the Acephalus one, and the Acephalus with seven horns, but they gossiped other Orthodox bearing similar names which I accept as belonging to the tradition of the Fathers, being I assured by the information of the All-Holy Patriarch Athanasius… of other worthy of being believed persons, not only from those cities, but also from cities from the East. The mentioned ones are so praised by the holy Fathers mentioned above, that their icons have been placed in the big Church, aligned with the holy icons of the Holy Fathers, with the icon of Ephraem and with the cions of all the others, within whose teachings there hasn't been found anything impious, or outside the law, or uncanonical" (G.P.[35] 99: 1816).

Finaly, we are bringing here the testimony of the Patriarch of Antioch, from the century XI, who, when listing the writings of the Fathers form Scetis, he mentioned among those also the book of Saint Paisius.

According to the information mentioned above, Isaiah who lives in the Century V was a Monophysite, but the Twenty-Nine Speeches do not belong to him, but they belong to Isaiah who lives in the Century IV. This is for, how it would be possible that great men of the Church, as John Damascene, Barsanuphius, Gregory of Sinai, Paul Evergetin, and many others, to take all the quotes form their writings out of the work of a Monophysite?

Beside the Twenty-Nine Words, there have been saved in Latin translation Latin Patrology, t. 103, col. 417-434) 68 rules for beginner monks, taken from the Speeches 3 and 9.

A small work bearing the title Advices of Abba Isaiah towards Amma Theodora the Nun and Her Sisters into Christ, translated in the speech of Nicephorus of Chios, it was edited (at Irenopolis, 1885), by Archimandrite Christophorus.

In Patrology, t. 40, col. 1205, there are nineteen heads belonging to the same one, entitled: About Ascesis and Appeasement (Hesychia), which have been take form his 29 Speeches, as also those form The Greek Philokalia, tome I, p. 17. Translate din The Romanian Philokalia, volume I, under the title: About the Guarding of the Mind, except for the heads: 7, 8, 9.

In Codex 118 from the collection of the Patriarchy (from Jerusalem) there are some fragments under the name of Abba Isaiah (f. 62 a – 68 b, 124 1 – 132 a, 202 b – 203 b). These fragments (except three: 127 b, 118 b, 120 a), which correspond to those from Philokalia (23, 24, 26), do not belong to this Abba, and we say this due to the different notions and language. At Palladius († around the year 420) there have been preserved the following sentences:

"Abba Isaiah said that the beginning benefits of nothing as much as he benefits of being reproached. As the tree benefits of being watered every day, likewise the beginner benefits of being reproached and of enduring the reproach".

"He said also about the beginners who are obeyed to the holy fathers, that the first paint doesn't stick, for instance the red color; and as the tender branches bend easily, likewise the beginners under obedience".

"He said again that the beginner who moves from monastery to monastery resembles to the animal running form a pasture to another".

"The presbyter from Pelusium told, on the occasion of an agape, to the brothers form the church who came together and were talking to one another: "Be silent, brothers, for I have seen a brother eating together with you and drinking cups, as much as you have done, and his prayer still raises in front of God as a fire." And he also said that if God wants to have mercy on a soul, and that soul resists and that souls doesn't want that, btu that soul fulfills his will, God will allow that soul to suffer things which that soul doesn't' want to suffer, so that that soul to search for God".

"He also said that when somebody wants to pay evil for evil, he can harm his brother's conscience even with his intention"[36].

"The same Abba Isaiah was once asked what the love for money is, and he answered: not believing in God that he takes care, and not trusting God's promises, and wanting to extend oneself".

"He was asked, also, what the gossip is? And he answered: not knowing the glory of God[37], but knowing the envy on the neighbor".

"He was asked also: what the anger is? And he answered: strife, lie, and nescience" (The Greek Paterikon; G.P. 65; col. 204-220, Evergetinos, book no. 2, ch. 31).

In the scholia to The Ladder (G.P. 86) of John Climacus (†around the year 600), there are given the followings from an unknown text of Abba Isaiah:

"He who always lives within his heart, he will necessarily exit the beautiful things of the bodily life. This is for, by walking into the ghost, he won't know the lusts of the body, for he takes his strolling into the city of the virtues. He has the virtues as guardians at the gate of the clean living. That's for also the plots of the devils remain unworking upon him. The arrows of the worldly love reach at most the windows of the nature" (Scholium no. 4, to the Speech 27, in Romanian translation pg. 379).

"The anger, means one wanting to impose one's own will; the liar knowledge, means one wanting to teach and to love the things necessary to the world[38]. The smallness-of-soul consists

[36] There is a spiritual communication among souls even when not shown in deeds, and it is that what the modern psychology ascertains as phenomena of psychosis and suggestion. The difference consists of the fact that the psychology ascertains these phenomena only when the will is active, while they take place also when the will doesn't' accept them.

[37] Gossiping another means not seeing that within the gift had by each human being there is manifested the glory of God Who has bestowed those gifts.

[38] There is too a liar conscience. The man cannot renounce to the will of enlightening himself and of enlightening others as well. But the man can crook the thirst for lightening himself and of being mastered, of not enduring, of not giving, and of taking" (Scholium no. 1 to The Ladder, Word no. 21).

"Question: What the fornication is? Answer: The helplessness to control oneself. Question: And what the helplessness to control oneself is? Answer: The adornment of the body, the embracing, the laziness, the words causing laughter, the shameless look, the faithlessness in the promises of God, the love for extending oneself, because of desiring for the praise of the world, the mercilessness, because of loving the vain-gloriousness, the lack of measure of the lack of conscious, not taking heed at the judgment of God" (Scholium to The Ladder, 12, to Word no. 15).

John Damascene (†756) preserved the entire Word about the Humble Cogitation (The Word no. 20), in The Holy Parallels and in the following two fragments:

"Because of happening the same case both to the sinners and to the righteous, let's not reckon everybody as submitted to the falling, and let's not reckon that the evil things must precede the salvation" (Patrology, t. 93, 324).

"They who do everything only for themselves, they impropriate the love for the self as the greatest among evils. This is the non-union with anybody, the non-communication, the lack of love, the injustice, and the lack of piousness. The nature makes the man not as the singular animals, but as a group united with others, in communion, and not in order to live for himself, but also for his father and for his mother, and for his brothers, and for his wife, and for his children, and for his kinships, and for his friends, and for the people of different nation, and for all people. And much before him, to God the Maker. This is for, if the man is wholly rational (speaking), the must be social, loving of the universe, and loving of God" (Ibid, col. 420).

At Paul from Amorium, the founder of Evergetin Monastery (in the year 1048), from where the Evergetin collection originates, there were, besides the fragments of the text of The Speeches, also the following fragments from unknown writings: The same (Isaiah" getting weak, he told Abba for lightening others. He places his will in the service of the narrow egotism, by believing that he widens up the content of his self, by reducing it to himself. By that he renounces to God. But the man cannot renounce to the world. And the man doesn't renounce to the world, because he can master the world, and because, on the other hand, the world masters upon the man's body's weakness.

Peter: “It isn’t a burden to the tired one to wait for his resting. That’s why, neither I, into the tiredness of my weakness, I do not feel myself burdened, but I rather am mastered by the fear of that darkened hour, when I will be thrown in front of God and there won’t by anybody to listen to me, neither will there be a waiting for the resting” (The Third Book, ch. 18, p. 58).

“But it is possible to the man to do the evil things on the occasion of the good done to him, when by repenting he commits sin again”.

That’s why, if you truly repent, you won’t sin again. This is because him who repents he doesn’t have hours of God which he owes to do the good in, neither he has hours form the devil which he ought to be himself in disorder; neither he has a time for piousness and then, again, a time for lawlessness. He cannot be once servant to God and once servant to the devil, but he is always the same. “This is for he who does the evil, he is servant to the sin” (Jn. 8: 35); and he who is servant to the sin, he cannot serve God, as the Lord says again, into Gospels: “No one can serve to two lords” (Mt. 6: 24(. “This is because what company has the righteousness with the lawlessness?” says the Apostle. Or, what partaking has the log with the darkness? And, what agreement is between Christ and Belial? Or, what have in common God and the idols? (2 Cor. 6: 14-15). “Let’s therefore clean up on ourselves of all the defilement of our body and of our ghost. And then “we commit the holiness into the love for Christ” (2 Cor. 7: 1). This is because, he who avoid most of the sins but he still is mastered by only one sin, he won’t be free. This is because, if he is defeated by one sin, he will be slave to that sin. And he will be easily defeated by the small sins, so that he will be later mastered by big sins. This is because it is impossible for one to master his big passions, without defeating, firstly, his smaller passions” (The Book 3, ch. 11, p. 30).

In The Greek Philokalia, tome no. I, pp. 18-19, and in The Romanian Philokalia, vol. I, pp. 395 and 398, there are the ch. 7, 8, and 19, belonging to Isaiah the Hermit.

The Monk Anthony or Melissa, who lives, according to some researchers, around the year 1110, he preserved the following fragments:

“What is better: to sweeten yourself and to fulfill the lust of your body for a few days, or to deprive yourself of the eternal life?”.

"He who spares the evil ones, he does injustice to the good ones" (G.P. 136).

"They who punish them who commit injustice, they impede them from committing injustice to others" (Ibid).

"He who honors the virtue, he honors the first truth that masters the whole good" (Ibid).

Gregori of Sinai whole lived around the year 1330, he sys in his writing: About quietude (hesychia) and about the Two Modes of the Prayer (The Greek Philokalia, t. 2, ch. 3, p. 269; The Romanian Philokalia, volume 7, p. 174): "For you owe to hold your breath", Isaiah the Hermit is witness to that, who says about it:

"And he (Isaiah) said also: "If the man doesn't become example, he won't be able co cohabitate with his neighbor (Cod. 113 from the collection of the Patriarchy of Jerusalem, f. 25 b).

And the Codex out of which have been taken the present edition of the 29 Speeches of Abba Isaiah, consisting of 321 sheets of parchment, it is classified under the number 109 of the patriarchal collection (0,253 x 0, 215). It was written in the year 1679 by Monk Damascene. The pages are divided in two columns.

We have bene giving until here, the translation of the Prologue belonging to Monk Augustine, to the second edition.

Monk Augustine mentioned, in continuation, other codexes too, which contain fragments of the present writing. He mentioned the Codex Sabbaiticus from the Library of the Patriarchy of Jerusalem, which probably were the property of the Saint Sabba Monastery form near Bethlehem.

Fragments of the Speech no. 1 can be found in Codex Sabbaiticus 363, from Century XIII, f. 203 a). Fragment of the Speech no. 2, in Codex 464 Sinaiticus from the Century XVII, f. 183 b. From the Speeches no. 3 and 4, in Codex Sabbaiticus 206 from century XVI.

Fragments of the Speech no 5 can be found in Codex 378 Sabbaiticus, from century VIII, f. 131.

Fragments of the Speech no. 7 can be found in Codex 78 dating from the Century XII, f. 58 v. and in patriarchal codex 181 from century XIII.

Fragments of the Speech no. 9, in the patriarchal codex 408 from the century IX or X, f. 142, and in the patriarchal codex form the Century XVI, f. 268 b.

Fragments of the Speech no. 15, in the same codex, f. 151 a.

Fragments form the Speech 17, in Codex Sabbaiticus from the Century XV, f. 454-459, in Codex 378 Sabbaiticus from the Century XVIII, v. 134 b, patriarchal codex 16, f. 181 and 464 Sinaiticus, f. 175 b.

There are fragments also in the patriarchal codexes 113 from the Century XVII and 137 from the Century XIV, 206 from the Century XVI, codex 394 from the century 15, and in Codex Sabbaiticus 333, from century XIV.

Besides the mentioned codexes, Monk Augustine had in view also the Latin text of Isaiah (L.P.[39], t. 40, f. 1150-1205), translated by Francisc Zenus from Verona, in the year 1574, after a Greek manuscript written with older letters, being corrected by Anthony Hilbert. By comparing the two texts, he annotated the essential differences and lacks of each one.

Ending his Prologue, Monk Augustine confesses that it was a very heavy burden assumed by him and it was above his weak powers. But he started working by trusting God.

Twenty and Nine Speeches

The Word no. 1

Advices given to the Brother Were with Him

1. You who want to remain with me, listen, obey, God's sake, and let each of you stay within his monastic cell, into the fear of God. And do not despise your handwork, for the commandment of God. And do not forget about your meditation or about your ceaseless prayer. And guard your heart against foreign thoughts. In order you not to cogitate anything about some man or about something belonging to this age; but always research what are you advancing into, and force yourself to correct yourself, by praying God with the tiredness of your heart, and with tears, so that God to forgive you, and for God to guard you in the future to no longer falling into these ones. Have on each day the death before your eyes, and think at how will you leave your body, and at how you will cross over the powers of the darkness which will meet you in the sky; and think at how will you answer to God. Look previously and unimpeded at the fearsome day of the judgment and of the rewarding of all your deeds and words and thoughts. "This is for all the things are naked and unveiled to the eyes of Him Whom we are going to give account" (Hebr. 4: 13).

Do not speak in the refectory without a big need for speaking[40]. And at Liturgy do not correct one who sings, if that one won's ask you for that[41]. During the week's days, you serve in the kitchen in the fear of God, without you to leave your meditation[42]. In all circumstances nobody will enter[43] the [40] Saint Pachomius (†348) said: "If somebody is pushed with hurry to speak and to laugh in the place for eating, he will be rebuked" (ch. 9, G.P. 40, col.948).

[41] If it happens during the singing and the prayer, or during the reading, for somebody to speak or to laugh, he immediately smut untie his girdle and, having his head bowed down, and his hand kept together, him to be brought in front of the altar and him to be rebuked by the hegumen of that monastery. The same must be done in the gathering of the brothers, when they gather together for eating. (Pachomius, G.P. 40, col. 948).

[42] John Cassian (†345), crossing through the monasteries of the East and of the West, together with his friend Gherman (†390), he recounts that not only in the coenobitic communities of the East "the brothers serve in weekly shifts to the kitchen and in other tasks, and in the Egyptian monasteries the care for the kitchen is allowed only to a very experienced brother, for the virtue of that brother allows and the strength of his body can fulfill this monastic cell of his brother, neither will you try to see each other before the 6th hour[44], nor will you want to know about the handwork of another, if you brother worked better than you did, or you worked better than him. And when you meet on one another haphazardly, you won't speak vainly, neither will you dare anything, but let each of you take heed, in the fear of God, at himself and at his handwork and at his meditation and at his soul, hiddenly. And when the Liturgy comes to an end, or when you stand up from eating, do not tarry in long discussions[45], neither at words about God, nor about the world, but let each of you enter his monastic cell and cry for his sins. And if there occurs the need for steaking to one another[46], you will speak very little, with humbleness and with piousness, while thinking at the fact that God takes heed at you. Do not quarrel with one another neither speak against somebody, nor judge anybody; do not despise anybody, do not speak against anybody. Do not let any lie to come out of your mouth. You won't desire to speak or to hear about things useless to you.

2. Do not allow the hatred to enter your heart, neither the envy against your neighbor. Neither allow to differ the content of your mouth from the content of your heart. This is for God doesn't' allow Himself to be deceived, but God see all the things: both the hidden things and the shown things. Do not hide any thought or trouble, any will or suspicion, but unveil all of those with the whole freedom to your (spiritual) father and force yourself with the whole your faith to fulfill that what you will hear from him.

Take heed at not disregarding the fulfilling of my advices, because, if you disregard my advices, because otherwise I won't allow you to remain with me. And if you guard both your hidden things and your seen things, I will give account about you to God. And if you do not guard my advices, He will hold me service, and he is not impeded either by old age or by weakness: (Cassian towards Caster, About the Canonical Rules of the Coenobitic Communities, G.P. 28, col. 860) accountable for my carelessness, as also about my advice. And on him who guards my commandments hiddenly and visibly, Master God will protect him against all evil and God will cover him against all temptations coming upon him, hiddenly and visibly. I pray you, my beloved ones, leave the things gathered by you within world, and take care of your salvation, in order not to be vain your whole life, and we to be shamed up in front of God and in front of those forsaken for Him[47], and of the saints who lives in ascesis. But you must reckon that the non-quarreling and the unpleasant suffering and the humbleness and the cutting off of your will from all the things, into good knowledge, and the lack of trust in your justice, as also the continuous looking at your sins, as the target of your virtue. This is because the resting and the vain-glory lose the whole tiredness of the monk.

[44] Palladius (around the year 430) recounts that in the Mount of Nitria "until the 6th hour (or noon) was not allowed "the meeting with anybody" (The Lausiac History, ch. No. 6, G.P. 34, col. 1019).

About that Law According to the Nature

1. I do not want you not to know, brothers, that at the beginning, when God created the man, God let the man into Paradise, having his senses healthy and persevering in that what was natural to him; but when the man listened to the deceiver, all the things moved into that what is contrary to nature; then the man's senses had been thrown off their glory[48]. But our Lord have mercy on the mankind for His much love. This is for the Word "made Himself body" (Jn. 1: 14), namely full man; He made Himself like us in all the things "except for [47] They who forsook them whom they had the duty to take care of, by invoking the excuse of a life dedicated through monasticism to God, but they didn't fulfill these monastic aspirations, they will be shamed up also in front of these ones (translator's note (in continuation: t.'s n.; note added by Saint Dumitru the Restorer of the Christian theology, while translating the present book from Greek to Romanian).

[48] The man was in his normalcy until he was in connection with God. The man fell into that what is contrary to nature, when he separated, through his disobedience, from God. The Catholic teaching is contrary to this teaching, by affirming that the man, when he is without God, he is in his "pure nature". And when the man received the grace (reckoned as "created"), the man is elevated in an above-nature state. The teaching from this text reckons the man in his natural state when he is united with God, or when the man lives in harmony with God (t.'s n.).

the sin" (Hebr. 4: 15)[49], all the way to changing that what is contrary to nature in that what is according to the nature through His Holy body[50]. And by having mercy on the man, after He resurrected, He turned back into Paradise them who walk on His traces and who fulfill His commandments shown us by Himself, until we will be able to defeat them who got us out of our glory. This is for He showed us the holy serving and the clean law, which must be guarded by the man, until the man will get steadfast in that nature which God created him in[51]. So, he who wants to come back to the things of the nature, let him cut off all his wills according to his body, until he will have got steadfast in the things according to the nature. The desire according to the nature it is the desire of the mind, and that is not without desiring for God; as neither is the love for the things according to nature[52]. That's why Daniel was called the "man od the desires" (Dan 9: 23). The enemy has changed this desire in ugly lusting for all uncleanness. The zeal of the mind is that zeal according to nature. And without the zeal towards God there won't be any thriving. So, as it has been written by the Apostle: "But aspire to the good gifts" (1 Cor. 12: 31). But the zeal towards God was turned through Adam towards the things contrary to nature[53]. Therefore, you won't bear enmity to one another and you won't envy or lie to one another.

[49] "Full man" is the formula from Chalcedon. Right because He didn't take our sin, He made Himself full man. The fact that the Son of God can make Himself also a full man, it is the great mystery and it is a great valuing of the human, by God. God created the man as such for God to be able to make Himself man too, and not by changing His godhead. This is because, otherwise, that would be pantheism. This is the mystery of the person and of the person's character of luminous light and of endless mystery. By that, the godlike Subject can replace the human subject. This is for the human subject too is an endless luminous light and endless mystery as the godlike Subject is too. But the godlike Subject is also a Subject of the infinite godlike nature (t.'s n.).

[50] Through his sin the man fell into that what is contrary to nature (para fisin). Christ has brought the man back to that what is according to nature (kata fisin). But in both states, He doesn't totally leave His connection with His nature; the Son of God, by making Himself man, He didn't change the human, but He brought the human back into its authenticity (t.'s n.).

[51] Bringing the man back to the things according to the nature, it equals the man's reintroduction in the Paradise of the communion with God, and into his glory that is a reflection of God's glory (t.'s n.).

[52] The desire and the love for the things according to the nature it is characteristic to the mind and they are equal to desiring for and loving of God. It is in the nature of the human mind to love and to desire God (t.'s n.).

[53] Through desires, out nature is made for that what exceeds it. The bodily pleasures attract our nature, on the contrary, downwards (t.'s n.).

2. But it is characteristic to the min also that anger according to the nature. This is because without anger there won't be cleanness within man. This type of anger fights against the foreign seeds sown as deceiving pleasures, by enemy, within our body[54]. This is what Phineas did, the son of Eleazar, when he got very angry against the man and against the woman, and the beating from the Lord started with His people (Num. 25: 7-8). But our anger moved towards our neighbor because all the unwise and useless things. That hatred contrary to evil it is characteristic to the mind. Elijah killed the prophets of the lie (3 Kings[55] 18: 40). Like Samuel he used the anger against Agag, the emperor of Amalec. And without the hatred against the enmity there won't be unveiled honesty without soul, and our hatred has got changed into an impulse against nature, in order to hate our neighbor and us to get disgusted of him. And the hatred becomes like that which banishes away all the creatures. To the mind it is characteristic the elevation of the thought according to the nature and against any enmity. And when Job found it out, he condemned his enemies, by telling them: "The dishonest ones and the lazy ones, they who lack any good, whom I didn't reckon worthy of even the pack of my dogs" (Job 30: 8). And the despise we had for our enemies has changed and we despised on one another, by offending one another, and we justified ourselves against our neighbor. And because we despise God, we become enemies of the people. Thus, among the things created together with the man, when the man ate because of hid disobedience, those things have been changed in evil. Let's strive, therefore, by beloved ones, to understand the things shown to us by our Lord Jesus Christ in His holy body. This is for He is holy and He dwells within saints. Let's therefore, take care of ourselves in order us to be pleasant to God by committing good deeds according to our power, and us to make our limbs to match the nature, in order us to find [54] Here is being affirmed the appurtenance of the anger and of the lust, to nature. It is about a lust (a desire) characteristic to the nature and one contrary to nature. Likewise, there is an anger characteristic to the nature and an anger contrary to nature. Otherwise, the human nature would be passive, indifferent, a corpse. Through the lust and wrath according to nature, the nature grows up, and it surpassed itself into God. Through mind it is cleaned up the nature of that what is inappropriate. Through that anger according to the nature, characteristic to the mind, the mind fights against the devil and against the seed sown by the devil within the man's body as deceiving pleasures (t.'s n.).

[55] In KJB we usually call this book as 1 Kings. (English language translator's note (in continuation: E. l. t.'s n.)

mercy at the moment of the temptation, from Him Who will come for the whole world (Lk. 21: 26), and let's always ask for His kindness, in order His help to be united with our humbleness; in order Him to save us from our enemies. This is for His is the power, and the help, and the mastery, and forever and ever. Amen.

About the State of the Beginners and of the Ones from the Monastic Cells

1. Before anything, we need the humble cogitation; let's always be ready for answering any word we hear, and anything; by saying: forgive me! This is for through the humble cogitation will be broken all the things of the enemy[56]. Do not measure yourself in any of your deeds[57], so that you will be able to remain undisturbed in your thoughts. You must have your face sad, but gentle, with the strangers, in order the fear of God to dwell within you[58]. If you hit the road with your brothers, you will walk at some distance form them, in order you to keep your silence[59]. And while walking, you won't look here and there, but you will meditate, or you will pray within your heart[60]. And in that place, or in that house where you stop, do not be daring, but be shy in everything. Stretch you hand to the things put on the table in front of you only when the people form there will [56] It is being cited in this note from several spiritual fathers: "Be ready to answer each word you hear by saying: "Forgive me", for the humble cogitation throws away all the things of the enemy" (Anthony the Great, can. no. 72).

[57] "Do not take pride of any of your deeds, regardless which". "Do not measure yourself" what height you have reached after any of your deeds.

[58] "Let your face ceaselessly be sad, except when strangers visit you. Then you will receive them with a joyful face, in order the fear of God to dwell within you" (Evergetinos, the book no. 1, sentences no. 42, p. 160).

[59] "When you travel together with other brothers, put some distance between you and them, in order you to keep your silence" (Anthony, can. 75).

[60] "When traveling, you won't look either to the right or to the left, but you will repeat the psalms and you will pray, within you mind to God, everywhere you are, and do not mix yourself trustfully with the inhabitants from there" (Anthony the Great, can. 76).

force you to eat[61]. If you are young, you won't dare to stretch you had and grab food and put that food in your mouth. And in that place where you sleep, you won't cover yourself under the same blanket with somebody else. And utter many prayers within your heart before going to sleep. And if you got tired un the road, and you want to be anointed a little with some oil, because of the tiredness of that trip, you will allow that to be applied only on your feet, and you will be ashamed of getting yourself undressed without some need of some illness. And while you sit within your monastic cell, if a brother has come to see you, you will do to him likewise: Anoint his feet with oil and tell him: please take some oil and use it[62]. And if he doesn't want to accept that, after he got rested, you won't force him. But if he is old and rich on doing, you will force him to accept you to anoint him all over his body. And if you sit at the table (in the refectory), together with the brothers, and if you are young, do not tell to your mind not to eat, by you will remember your sins in order you not to eat with pleasure, and you will stretch your hand only in front of you. And if there is something in front of somebody else, you won't stretch your hand at that food. Your clothes must cover your feet, and your knees must be kept united.

And when those who are eating, they are strangers, you will give them what they need with a glad look, and after they will have stopped eating, you will tell them for the second and for the third time: please, take a little more[63]. And when you are eating, you won't raise your face towards your neighbor[64], and you won't utter vain-words[65]. And do not stretch your hand towards something, and so you to shown that you desire that, without saying: Bless[66]. And when you drink water, you won't allow you throat to gurgle, as the worldly people do. If you feel the need for spitting, while you are sitting together with the brothers, do not spit in front of them, but stand up and go and [61] "Do not immediately stretch you hand towards the things placed in front of you to eat" (The same author, can. 77).

[62] The humbleness and the restraint mean also a gentle politeness.
[63] Invite insistingly the strangers to help themselves, at the table.
[64] Do not raise your face while eating, towards your neighbor, in order him not to see the lust for food mirrored in your face (t.'s n.).
[65] Do not speak jokingly things or useless things, while eating, which one to see in the pleasure produced by food (t.'s n.).
[66] You must always wait for you to be invited. As one can see, here are being given concrete advices on how one must practice the humble cogitation (t.'s n.).

spit outside. Neither you will stretch your body in the sight of the people. If some unserious thought tries you, you won't open your mouth; and that thought will leave you. You won't open your mouth when laughing, because of this one meaning lack of shyness. Do not lust for something that is close to you while looking at it: either coat, or girdle, or monastic hat. And do not satisfy your lust, by making to yourself something similar. If you buy some book, you won't adorn it with some jewelry. This is because that is a passion.

2. If you have mistaken something, you won't lie because of shame, but you will prostrate and say: forgive me. And that mistake will pass. If somebody tells you as harsh word, do not get haughty within your heart, because the anger from God won't be late. If somebody reproaches you for something, you won't get angry, but prostrate in front of you, telling him: forgive me, for I won't do that anymore, either you know that you have done that thing or not. This is for all of these are thriving for the young one. If you do your handwork, you won't take pride of that, but you will do made your handwork in the fear of God, lest you will commit sin by nescience. When somebody is teaching you how to made nay handwork, you will tell him who teaches you without getting ashamed: "please see if that what I have made is good or not". If some of the brother calls you while you are making your handwork, you will force yourself to see what that brother wants, and help him, by leaving your handwork. If you stop eating, you will enter your monastic cell and you will made your work, and you won't sit and talk to them who are unbeneficial to you. If there are old men telling you the word of God, you will ask your Abba: "Should I stay and listen to that, or should I enter my monastic cell?". And you will do that what he tells you to do. If you want to go to a strange thing, tell you Abba what you want to do, and why do you need that for. And if Abba tells you to do something, you won't add anything to that, neither will you diminish that. If you find out words from outside, do not tell those words to somebody else. This is for, if you guard those word in your ears, you mouth won't mistake[67]. If you want something but he whom you are dwelling with, he doesn't want that, you will accept his will in order to avoid any quarrel or upset.

[67] When you try to say words told to you, to others, your tongue can mistake by saying those words differently than you have heard them.

3. If you want to cohabit with a brother temporarily, you won't command him something and you won't want to be his chief. If you cohabit with the brothers, you won't want to compare yourself to them regarding your words. If they command you a thing which you do not wants, you will fight your will until you will do that thing, in order you not to upset them and to lose them by discouragement, and so you will cohabit peacefully with them. If you cohabit with a brother and if you want something, you will tell him what you want, but you will also add: but I will do what you want. And if you ask him to decide about what you want, you will do whatever he will reckon as appropriate, with the fear of God. If you dwell together and the thing which he asks you for it is a passing thing, you will do that. If you are more than two, you will do that thing together and you will not spare your body, by taking heed at the conscience of everyone. When you wake yourself up each morning, before starting to do your handwork, you will cogitate at the words of God. And if there is something to do in the first place, either your bed, or some dishes, either anything else, you will do that with the whole zeal and without delay. If that is a thing bringing you payment, you will do that thing together with your brother and you won't do injustice to him. And if that thing is a small thing, and one tell to another: "Leave, brother, mind you own thing, I am going to this this thing by myself", you will obey him. He who obeys, he is the great one. If there is at you a foreign brother, you will joyfully do the needed thing, and after he leaves you will do the same. Welcome your brother with benevolence and with the fear of God, in order his visit not to be a loss to him. Guard yourself against asking him things which are not beneficial to you to know, but make him pray. And while he dwells with you, you will ask him: "How are you?" and you will limit yourself to that word. And then you will give him a book, in order him to read that book and to cogitate at it. And if that brother has come to your place after he has finished a tiresome work, you will allow him to rest and you will wash his feet. And if he brings you inappropriate words, you will ask him, out of love, telling him: "Forgive me, for I am weakened and I cannot bear these". And if the brother is weakened and his clothes are dirty, you will wash up his clothes. And if he lacks something, and if his clothes are torn, you will sew his clothes up. And if he is a traveler and you have at your place some believers, you won't regard him as superior to those, but you will have mercy on him out of the love of God. And if there is a brother visiting you, for God, and he asks you for resting, you won't turn your face away from him, but you will welcome him joyfully, together with the believers who are at your place. And if he is poor, you won't send him away without giving him something, but you will give him out of the blessing given to you from God, once you know that the things you have are not yours, but they are gifts from God[68]. If a brother offers you something, you won't open that to see what had inside. But if that what is offered to you seems very expensive, you will tell him: show me please what is inside it.

If you hit the road towards somebody's house, and he goes out and leaves you alone, do not try to know the things from within his house. Neither will you open something form that house, be it a door or some vessel or a book. But you will tell him who goes out: give me to do something. And that what he gives you, you will do that without difficulty. Do not praise the things you have known, and you won't speak about the things known by you are you would have seen those things. Do not condemn anybody for his countenance. If you give water or some other necessary thing, you won't show yourself indifferent, but you will think at the fact that Hod has taken care of you. If you stand up within your monastic cell in order you to do your job, you must not remain indifferent or careless, and instead of honoring God you to forget about God, but you smut remain in the fear of God. Do not lean against the wall and do not bend your legs, by consecutively leaning on one and then on another, as the mindless do. Wake up your heart in order not to search for your own wills, in order God to accept your sacrifice. If you sign together, each of you will utter his prayers. And if there is a stranger together with you, pray him, with love, for him to utter his own prayers. You will tell this to him twice and trice, but without quarrel. At the moment of bringing your gift, you will tell to your thoughts and to your feelings they to persevere into the fear of God, in order you to be found worthy of Mysteries, and in order the Lord to heal you. Take heed not to leave your body without cleanness and take heed not to be yourself stollen by vain-glory. And the young one must allow himself into all the lack of beauty of his body. This is for that is beneficial to him[69].

[68] We have everything as gifts from God. And that what each of us receives, he doesn't receive that exclusively for himself, but also for others, in order the man to grow up in love among themselves too.

Let the young one never wear a beautiful coat, until he will reach the age of a fully grown-up man. This is for that is towards his healing. The young one can use up to three cups of wine, if needed. He must not show his teeth when laughing, and his face must look downwards, with shame. If he goes to sleep, he will girdle his waist, and he will take care not to bring his hands inside, because the body has many passions nourished by nescience. If he must hit the road, lets him wear sandals, but as long as he is within his monastic cell, he won't wear sandals. Let him never walk before others. If there is a superior and that one talks to somebody, you won't be indifferent and sit down, but you will stand until you will be shown what to do. If you leave for the city, or for the village, your eyers will be looking downwards, in order you not to wake up the enemies within your monastic cells. Do not sleep when traveling, in somebody's house, where your heart fears that it could sin. If you want to eat somewhere and you find out that a woman eats there too, you won't stay there at all. It will be more beneficial to you to get the host upset, than you to secretly commit fornication into your heart. If you can, you will leave before noticing her coat. While you are walking on a road, and a woman tells you: peace to you, you will answer her within your heart while keep looking downwards. If you hit the road with somebody old, you won't allow him bear the thing you are carrying. And if you both are young, you will bear that thing in shifts, and he who bears that things will go in front.

[69] The young one must not adorn himself, in order not to tempt somebody, and in order not to trust himself. But the old one can adorn himself at the time of the Holy Liturgy (t. 's n.).

The Word no. 4

About the Conscience of Those Who Sit in Their Monastic Cells[70]

1. If you walk on a road and some of you is weaker, let him walk in front of you for, if he wants to rest, he will be able to rest. And if you are younger and you are in places where is the time for eating, and if you are invited to be the first to sit at the table, you won't allow yourself to get disturbed, but if now somebody is the first to sit down, next time will be somebody else the first to sit down. If you ask an old man about a thought of yours, you will unveil him your thought in freedom, if you know him faithful in keeping your thought for himself. If you hear about some shortcoming of your brother, you won't tell to the old man whom is that about, because that is death[71]. If some brothers speak about the thoughts which wage war to you too, you smut not want to hear their discussion, in order you not to be warred by those. Force yourself to utter more prayers, for the prays is luminous light to your thought[72]. You must cogitate, daily, with sorrow, at your mistakes and if you cogitate at those in this way, God will forgive you of those mistakes. If a brother forces you to speak against his brother, you won't allow yourself to be convinced by him and so to commit sin against God[73], but you will tell him humbly: "Forgive me, brother, for I am a wicked, and the things you are telling me are mine too and I can bear them". If a brother does something evil to you and somebody talks to you against that brother, you will guard your heart in order the evilness not to be renewed within you. You must remember you willing sins committed by you in front

[70] In the Latin text, the title is the following: About the Thins One Must Mind while of the Road.

[71] If you confess to the old man (to the confessor) your thought about a shortcoming of a brother, you won't tell the name of that brother (t.'s n.).

[72] The prayer is the light of the soul, and it opens to the soul the path to Christ, as role-model for not judging others, by escaping you from being locked up in the egotism of your pride (t.'s n.).

[73] Speaking evil about a brother it is one with committing sin against God, for God loves everyone and He wants to gain them through forgiveness, united within Himself (Jn. 13: 35) (t.'s n.).

of God[74], in order God to forgive those sins to you, and you will avoid paying the evil back by doing evil to your neighbor (Rom. 12: 17). If you hit the road together with some brother and you do not know them, and if they are inferior to you, you will give them the honor to be the first. And if it happens you to enter to someone loves by you, you will give to the brothers who you are traveling with, primacy in all things, either to sit at the table, or to grab the food place in front of you, and you won't show yourself as the source of their primacy, but you will do this honor to them, saying: "For you the host have mercy on me too". If you hit the road with some brother and you deviate to some friend of yours, you will tell to that brother what id the need you to do that for, and you will tell to that brother: "Sit here together with me". And if your brother will invite you to eat, let nothing enter your mouth until you will call your brother to eat together with you.

2. If you hit the road with several brothers and you will feel shame to take all of them to your friend, because they are many, you won't despise them by leaving them hiddenly, and go to eat, but ask that friend what you should do regarding the brother and you will humbly obey what he tells you. And while traveling with the brother, you won't get haughty and you won't avoid serving them. If you hit the road, and if you want to visit a brother and he doesn't want to welcome you, but when he travels you see him coming to your place, you will forget about his behavior and do him plenty of good. If you hear that somebody told something evil against you and if you meet him somewhere, or if he comes close to you, you will show him a glad and good face, according to your power; and you won't tell him the things you have heard, and you won't ask him: "Why did you tell those things about me?". This is for it is written in Proverbs (ch. 21: 24): "He who keep the evil in his mind, he commits lawlessness". If you are brothers and you leave towards a poor brother, you won't trouble him by asking him something you need, but you will satisfy your need by yourself, regarding what you will eat, if he doesn't have plenty of that what you need and if he doesn't have enough space to accommodate you. If you leave towards some old people who

[74] You cannot remember your sins and repent for them except in front of God, or by thinking at God, in the same time. If you do not think at God, you won't be able to see your sin in any of your deeds or thoughts (t.'s n.).

you know, and together with you are other brothers too, and they are not known to those old men, you won't commit in front of those old man any daring deed, but let the daring to them who have come together with you and tell them the needed words. If some brothers cohabit with you, you will take care of they to hear from you only serious things, because you will give account about them in front of God. If you go to a stranger, for God, you won't avoid to see your bodily relatives, for it is more beneficial to you to see those. If you want to leave for the mountain, in order you to meet the brothers from the monasteries[75], you will remain at him whom you are going to, and you won't go to see somebody else without telling that to your host: "Should I go to see that one, or not?". And if you do not find resting at your host, you won't upset him until you will leave him. If you get to yourself a monastic cell, as you know, you won't take many brothers together with you; one brother will be enough for weakness and you won't take advantage of the power of your host.

3. If you do good toa poor, do not call him for a passing thing, in order you not to lose the benefaction done to him. If you enter some monastery unknown to you, you will sit as the table there where they allow you to, sand you won't enter any monastic cell until that one who dwell within it will invite you to enter there. If you are appeasing yourself into your monastic cell, you won't deprive a needy brother, if he asks for a thing of yours. If you have something only that much as it is enough to you, and not abundantly, you will accept not wasted that and so you to get disturbed. "This is for, it is more beneficial to you to lose one of your limbs and not to be the whole your body thrown into Gehenna" (Mt. 10: 29). If you part with your bodily relatives, and if you estrange yourself for God, you won't allow their pleasure to enter you[76].

Do not sit within your cell protecting your father or your mother, or thinking at a brother or at a sister of yours, or feeling sorry on your children, or desiring within your heart the woman you left. Think at your exit, think at the fact that you must die, and no one of them will help you. And did you leave them for virtue? If you are resting within your monastic cell and you remember that somebody did something evil to you, stand up and pray God from the whole your heart in order God to forgive him[77] and let leave from you your thought of avenging yourself for that evil. If you go to be imparted with the Holy Mysteries, you will guard every one of your thoughts, in order you not to be imparted towards condemnation (1 Cor. 11: 29).

[75] It is probably here about Mount Nitria from Egypt, where there were withdrawn several monasteries, or about some other mountain, where there usually were the monasteries.

[76] You won't allow yourself to be gained by the will to do that what is pleasant to your relatives; do not like that what they like.

If at night you are tempted by hallucination of having mating, you will guard your heart not to cogitate during the day at the bodies from your hallucination, in order you not to be defiled by their pleasure and so you to cause to yourself a heavy anger, but you will throw yourself in front of God with the whole your heart and God will help you. This is for God is lenient on the people's weakness. If you are in ascesis, you won't allow your heart to trust that your ascesis guards you, but you will tell to your heart that, for the helplessness of your body, "God takes heed at my weakness". If somebody reproaches you something, you won't answer but you will keep your silence. And if by being rebuked, you find within yourself the things reproached to you, you will repent yourself as one who has committed sin yourself, and the kindness of God will receive you again. If you are traveling together with some brothers, and among those there is one who you love for God, you won't dare to show him that in the sight of the others, lest there would be one who will die of envy. And if you visit some brothers, you won't expect them to be very glad of your visit, but if they welcome you, you will thank to the Lord. If you see your soul disturbed, your will tell to your soul: this is not more beneficial to you than the Gehenna which you are going to go in. And you will appease yourself within you. If you visit some brothers and one of them, tell you that you don't want to rest yourself at his place but he wants to dwell together with you, you won't listen to him or else you will cause offense to the many. And if he tells you:" "My soul dies for a secret thing", you will give him the opportunity to leave and you won't allow him dwell together with you.

4. Appeasing yourself within your monastic cell, you will accept eating in order to give your body that what it needs, in order your body to be able to sustain you in fulfilling your duties, and in order you not to want leave your duties unfulfilled. But you smut not eat anything with pleasure, with lust for that taste, whether that food is good or bad. And if there occurs the need for a visit, either to a brother or to a community, and they cook something really sweet, you won't let your body to get satiated, but you will want to quickly turn back to your monastic cell, in order your body not to become your traitor. If the demons urge you to an ascesis above your powers, you won't listen to them, because they entice the man towards anything he cannot do, until the man will fall into their hands and they will rejoice about that. Eat once a day and give to your body only that what it needs, and you will stand up from the table while you could still eat more. And do your vigil with measure, and do not deprive your body of that what it needs. Do your tasks with measure and knowledge, lest because of much vigil your soul to get darkened by too much straining. It is enough a half of night for your ministrations, so that you will allot the other half for the resting of your body. Use two hours, before going to bed, for praying and for singing. And then rest yourself. And when the Lord wakes you up, you do your ministration with zeal. But if you see your body tired, you will tell to your body: "Do you want to rest for a short while and then to be thrown into the outer darkness?". And if you force yourself a little, your power will come to you. Do not make friendship with people whom your conscience knows about that they are familiar with others too, in order you not to offend those ones knowingly. If you are in the monastery and you have had a slave and you have kept him, you will dishonor the monastic schism. And if you bestow that slave to a brother, you will sin against God. So, let him go away, of set him free. And if he wants to become a monk, it will be his decision. But you must not take him with you, because of not being that beneficial to your soul.

[77] This means that you have forgiven him. But anyone who does evil to somebody else shows that he is disobedient to God, so that he needs God to forgive him too, and it is not good us to limit only to the forgiveness given him by us, but too we must pray God to forgive him.

5. If you are, for God, in a living that is difficult to your body, and the people want to follow your example and they honor you for that difficult living, you will leave that way of living and you will adopt something different, in order you toil not to change into laziness. And of you feel the temptation of the vain-glory, you won't pay attention to the people, for you know that that what you are doing it is an urge from God.

If you reject the world, you won't let anything to yourself, and if you see yourself wanting to have something, you will tire your body even more with your handwork, in order you to appease yourself within your monastic cell, and you will eat your bread, with modesty. If you leave for the city for selling your handwork, you won't haggle for the price, as the people from the world do, but give it to somebody for any price, in order you not to lose your power gained by you within your monastic cell[78]. If you sell something that you need, you won't haggle saying: "If you don't give me that much, I won't sell this to you"; and if you still want that, you will strive only for a little, and if you are not offered the price you want, you will leave it in silence. And if your thoughts trouble you, wherever you are, you will tell them: "I am like all the saints who were tempted by God in the state of poverty until He saw their faithful decision; and then He brought them at large. If a brother offers you a thing and you need that thing, you won't touch that thing without telling that to that brother. If a brother tells you, when you leave for the city, to buy him something, if you are able to do that you will buy him what he asked you for. And if you are with others, you won't do that without asking for their opinion, because otherwise you will upset them who live together with you. If the occasion occurs for you to go back to your birth village for a certain thing, you will avoid seeing your relatives according to the body, and you won't spend your time with them, neither will you impropriate their sayings. If you have borrowed something from a brother, you must not forget to return that back to him, and quickly. And if that thing is a tool, you will return that immediately after you will have finished your work. And if you have broken that borrowed thing, it will be your duty to repair it and to return it in the same condition as you have borrowed it. And if you have given something to your poorer brother and you see that he cannot give that back to you, you won't bother him, and you won't pressure him in any ways. And if you have given him a coat, you will leave that to him[79].

6. If you leave for living in a certain place and you buy a monastic cell for yourself, or if you build up that monastic cell and you spend money on it and after a while you leave that monastic cell and there remains a brother living in it, and after a while you want to turn back there, you won't throw that brother out of your monastic cell but you will go and search for another monastic cell for yourself, in order you not to commit sin against God. And if he leaves voluntarily, you will be innocent. And if you left things within your monastic cell and he used those, you won't ask him for giving those back to you. If you leave your monastic cell, you won't take with you the things needed by your poorer brother, but let him have those. And God will earn to you other things there where you are going to stay. Do not be shy to tell to your superior any thought that wages you war, and so you will be relieved of that thought. This is because the ghosts do not find place except in that man who is silent about his thoughts, whether those thoughts are good of bad. You will avoid to be imparted with the Sacrifice, if you have some evil thought against your brother, because otherwise you will deceive yourself. If thought of the Scripture are unveiled to you, by understanding those allegorically, you will guard yourself not to abolish that what is written, so that you won't trust your knowledge more that you trust the Holy Scripture; because this is a sign of the pride. If your brother is deceived through the words of the heretics so that he unknowingly wanders away from faith, but he comes back to the right-faith again, you won't overlook him, because that has happened to him because of nescience. Avoid discussing with the heretics, by wanting to affirm the faith, lest the venom of their evil words to penetrate you. If you find some book known as heretic, you won't want to read it, lest it will fill your heart up with the venom of the death[80], but you will remain in that what you have been enlightened within, and do not either add or disregard anything of that. Guard yourself against the knowledge (gnosis) with a liar name, that resists the healthy teaching (1 Tim. 1:

[79] These are very detailed advices for all the situations which a monk can be in (t.'s n.).

[80] The Fathers reckon the heresy as the biggest evil. They who remain into the right-faith they can repent more easily, but they who no longer know the true God, regardless how moral they claim to be, they are strangers to God and they will be able to easily justify their deviations they wanted.

10)[81], as the Apostle said. If you still are young and if you haven't reached yet to enslave your body, and you hear about the high virtues of the Fathers, you won't run towards those virtues because of wanting to live those virtues in resting, because those virtues won't come to you if you do not practice doing them; but if you practice those virtues, they will come to you by themselves[82].

7. Guard yourself against laziness. This is because the laziness destroys the fruits of the monk. If you fight the passion, you must not get discouraged, but you must trust God, telling Him: "Help me, because I am needy", with the whole your heart and trust. If the evilness has been sown within your heart while you have been sitting within your monastic cell, you must take heed and resist your won soul, lets you will be dominated by it[83]. Force yourself to remember God, for God takes heed at you and at the things which you are dialoguing with within your heart, for all of those are unveiled to Him[84]. You tell to your soul: if you fear the sinners who are like you of seeing your sins, hos much more will you have to fear God Who takes heed at everybody? And out of this counsel you hold with yourself, it will come the fear of God without your soul. And if you remain steadfastly in the fear of God, you will remain steadfastly in front of the passion, as it was said: "They who trust the Lord are like the Mount Zion: he who lives in Jerusalem he will never budge" (Ps. 124: 1[85]). If you are in

[81] It can be here about the Gnosticism (Gnosis) that held during the first Christian centuries diverse sorts of pantheism, against individuating God from the created world, [82] The young people who haven't reached yet the full control over their bodies, they must not search for the virtues of the Fathers in a full quietude, because the Fathers have gained those virtues by fighting the temptations. So, the young people must not get sad if they still are tempted. This is for, only by perseveringly fighting the temptations, the young people will reach the serene possession of the virtues of the Fathers who fought the temptations.

[83] When withing your soul there is some evil thought, you do not obey that evil thought. By thinking at God, you must raise yourself above that evil thought, in order not that thought to master you but you to master that thought. We can achieve a doubling within ourselves, one that helps us to control ourselves.

[84] This is also in head no. 27 from the 27 heads belonging to Isaiah the Hermit from The Romanian Philokalia, volume I, p. 400. The dialogue of the man with himself in the matters posed him by the evil, it is all the more accentuated as the Third Participant to that dialogue is God Who determined the man to oppose the passions from within himself. That's why it is good for us to remember God in the dialogue we have with yourselves, by knowing that all our things are unveiled to God.

[85] In KJB we have: Ps. 125: 1: "THEY that trust in the Lord shall be as mount Zion, which cannot be removed, but abideth for ever."; in ROB we have: Ps. 124: 1: "They who trust God ascesis, resisting the enemy, and if you see your passions weakening and running away behind you, let your heart not rejoice, because the evilness of the ghosts is behind you. This is because of preparing they to you an even worse war that the first war, and he leaves them to the city and he commands them not to move away from there. If you raise against them, they will run away again form your face. But if you heart gets haughty for the fact of banishing those away, and if you thus have left the city, some of them will raise against you from your back and other from your front and the poor your soul will find itself surrounded by them and having nowhere to escape. So, the city resists when somebody throws himself before God with the whole his heart. And this will get you rid of all enemy's wars[86]. If you pray God for removing the war from you and God doesn't listen to you, you won't get sad. This is for God knows what is the best for you. So, whatever you ask God for, in time of war, for God to remove that form you, you won[‘t tell God: "Take this form me and give me that", by you will prey by saying: "Master Jesus Christ, help me and don't allow me to sin to You, because of being I strayed, and do not allow me to follow my will; do not allow me to get lost in my sins, but have mercy on me for I am Your creature and do not overlook me, because of being I weak; do not forsake me, for I have run to You" (Ps. 40: 4[87]). "In front of You are all those who trouble me, and there is no escape for me except at You, Lord. Have mercy on Me and let's be shamed all of the who have risen against me, they who search for my soul to destroy my soul. For You are powerful Lord, in all the things, and through You we give glory to God and to the Father and to the Ghost forever and ever. Amen.". And then your conscience tells to your heart, hiddenly, why God doesn't listen to you, but God still is with you. And do not disregard that thing, but whatever your conscience tells you to do, you will do that. This is for it will impossible that God not to are like the Mount Zion; he won't ever wobble who lives in Jerusalem." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[86] This text coincides to the head no. 2 from The Romanian Philokalia, volume I, p. 393. Always, behind the passions there are the devils. If you defeated the passions once, you won't get pride of that. Because, otherwise, the devils will move again against you. You must stay sheltered in your stronghold. And your stronghold is your prayer or you thinking at God.

[87] In KJB we have: Ps. 41: 4: "I said, Lord, be merciful unto me: heal my soul; for I have sinned against thee."; in ROB we have: Ps. 40: 4: "I said: "Lord, have mercy on me; heal my soul, because I wronged You"." (E. l. t.'s n.)

hear the man, if the man hears God. This is for God is not far away from the man. But our will are those not allowing God to hear us[88]. Let nobody deceive us. But, as the land cannot yield fruits without seeds and without water, likewise the man cannot bring forth fruits without the unpleasant sufferings or without the humble cogitation[89].

8. Let's persevere, my beloved one, in the fear of God, by guarding and by preserving the doing of the virtues, and by not causing offenses to our conscience, but by taking heed at ourselves into the fear of God. Let's do this until our conscience too will be liberated together with us, so that between us and our conscience to take place a union, so that our conscience to reach being our guardian, and our conscience to show us any danger which we are about to fall into. But if we do not listen to our conscience, our conscience will part with us and it will no longer help us[90]. This is that what our Lord taught us, saying: "Reconcile with your accuser as long as you still are on the way, let he will give you in the hands of the judge and the judge to the servant, and so you will be thrown into prison. Verily, I say to you, that you won't get out from there until you will have paid even the las penny you owe" (Mt. 5: 25-26)[91]. He says about conscience that it is our accuser, because the conscience

[88] We mustn't believe that God doesn't hear our prayer, when we ask Him for something and that something is not granted to us. It only seems to us that God doesn't hear us because we do not hear Him, and because we lock up ourselves not to accept His will, or not to do that that He wants us to do. God always hears us for God is not far away from us, but we reckon that God doesn't hear us because of us not wanting to hear Him.

[89] The unpleasant (bad) suffering is contrary to the pleasant passions. It consists of all sorts of hardships. The bad suffering and the humble cogitation help the man to spiritually fructify, as the land yields up fruits out of seeds and water.

[90] Here it is affirmed a duality between conscience and our being. Our conscience is that one which we can guard our being through, against the attractions towards the sins. Our target must be that of achieving a unity between our conscience and out being. But neither our conscience is totally clean in the beginning. Only on the measure which our conscience gets liberated of temptation in, our conscience can also help our being to get liberated too. But even higher than our conscience, there is our self. If your self doesn't obey our conscience, our conscience will leave us. We will become insensitive, or lacking the guarding from our conscience, namely the warnings issued to us by our conscience.

[91] The word of the Savior is interpreted like this: reconcile yourself with your conscience which, if you disobey it, it will tell you to the judge. Your conscience urges you to avoid the evil, and therefore your conscience will help you if you obey it, and if not, your conscience will accuse you on the day of the final judgment. There are three entities in man too, differing form the Supreme Third. The conscience as the third one within man (as differing from self and from the own will) it is strong within man, especially when having within it the Supreme Third, or God.

resists the man who wants to do his bodily wills, and if the man obeys his bodily wills, he will end up surrendering himself to his enemies. That's why, when Hosea cried for Ephraim, he said: "Ephraim persecuted his accuser and he transgressed the judgment" (Hosea 5: 11). He searched for Egypt and he has been forcedly taken by Assyrians. "Searching for Egypt" means that the heart searches for fulfilling the will do the own body, and being forcedly taken by Assyrians means that, willy-nilly, that one will serve his enemies. Let's therefore take care of ourselves, my beloved ones, in order us not to walk on the ways of our will according to the body, lest we will be forcedly taken by Assyrians and we will hear the bitter word that the Emperor of the Assyrians came upon Israel and moved Ephrain to Assyrians, and he moved those from there is Eleia and in Avor, at the river mouths of Guza (4 Emp[92]. 17: 6)[93], and they have remained there up to these days.

This was because of sending the Emperor of the Assyrians people form his nation to inhabit Israel, and each of those carved his idol and worshipped it and they are there up to these days. And this happened to Ephraim because he disregarded his accuser and he overlooked his accuser's judgment.

9. So, you have known those ones, brothers, who follow to their wills and who disregard their conscience, and that what mastered upon them. Let's not follow their example, you my beloved ones, but let's follow all the saints who didn't obey the sin until their death, but they obeyed their holy conscience and so they have inherited the Heavenly Kingdom[94]. This is for each of the saints became consummate in his generation into holiness[95]. And they names have become indelible to all generations. Let's take our beloved Jacob as our role-model, for he obeyed in everything his parents according to God, and he

[92] In the KJB we usually call this book as 4 King; in ROB we usually call this book as: 4 Kings (and not Emperors). (E. l. t.'s n.)

[93] The tiger means the doing phase of the virtues, which the man works in against his passions, being guided by the discernment between good and evil, or by the right-reckoning. The Euphrates, it means the basis.

[94] The conscience is holy, for through conscience God speaks to us. And our conscience can become our accuser if we do not obey it. In conscience it is shown the fact that the man isn't separated from God, but the man is united, through nature, with God. If the man no longer hears the voice of his conscience, the man won't hear God either.

[95] He who totally obeys his conscience, he obeys God, by doing only the good. And by that he will become a saint.

took their blessing in everything he did, and he wanted to go in Mesopotamia in order to earn sons there. This is because he didn't want to earn his sons out of the Canaanite's daughters, who were contrary to his parents. So, he took his staff and his vessel with oil, and he came to the place called Betel - that is interpreted as the house of God – and he slept there and he saw in an unveiling during night a ladder descending form the sky and angels of God climbing it, and "the Lord was leaning on it" (Gen. 28: 13). This is a sign of him who starts serving God, that in the beginning is unveiled to him in the form of the virtues, and if he doesn't' impropriate the effort for the virtues, he won't reach at God. So, Jacob woke up and the made a covenant with God. He swore to be the servant of God and God strengthened him, by telling him: "Behold, I will be together with you and I will protect you". Then Jacob came to Mesopotamia to marry a woman from there. And when he saw Rachel, the daughter of the brother of his mother, he loved her and he served for her for seven years. But they didn't give him Rachel, until he took Leah first. And Rachel was baren until he served for another seven years for Leah.

And the meaning is this: Mesopotamia is called like this, because of being in the middle between two rivers. The name of the first River is Tiger, and the name of the second river is Euphrates. The first one starts against Assyrians, and the second one starts against nobody (it has no enemy), but it is reckoned as starting at large. The Tiger is interpreted as discernment, and the second one is interpreted as humbleness[96]. Leah is cogitated as image of the bodily toils. Rachel is the way of the true sight (contemplation). These ones take place with the man who is in Mesopotamia, so that through discernment him to fulfill his bodily toils, because they oppose the enmity of the Assyrians in order to cross to the humble cogitation in the true contemplation (sight).

10. But she didn't give birth to sons to Jacob, until Leah gave birth to her sons. And so, Leah fulfilled the serving on behalf of Rachel, for other seven years. This is because if the man doesn't fulfil the whole doing, he won't be bestowed the true contemplation (the seeing of God). Both of those were his women, but he loved Rachel more than he loved Leah, because Leah has weak eyes and for Rachel was very beautiful. That what is said here is this: Jacob's first wife had weak eyes, namely until the man is with his bodily eyes he won't be able to see the glory of the true contemplation. This is for the enmity of the human pleasure still is mixed in the man's works. But let the man not to remain to this. This is for Leah too, he stopped for a while from giving births and she gave Zilpah to her husband, Zelpah being her slave, giving her occasion to give birth from above. That's why she gave the name Assir to the one born by her, a name that is interpreted as richness. And when Leah stopped giving birth, God remembered Rachel. The meaning oof this is: If one achieves the bodily toils and his feeling is liberated from passions, then the true sight (contemplation) will unveil the true glories to the mind. Despite all the sons of Leah helped Jacob, he loved Josephus more than all the others. Namely, though the bodily toils protect the man against enemy, only the true contemplation (sight) will unite the man with God. This is for, only after he saw Josephus, Jacob decided to turn back to his parents, for he saw that child was born to him after his brothers. And after Jacob crossed through all his camps, he says, and he crossed River Iavoch too, and he remained alone, he received the joy of the blessing from God Who told him: "You name will no longer be called Jacob, but it will be called Israel" (Gen. 32: 28). He was previously called as Jacob for he trampled over the enmity (of the passions) until he was found worthy of blessing and he has gained his senses which were before under the mastery of the enemy. And when he was liberated of those ones, he was called Israel, namely the mind that sees God[97]. This is for, if the man reaches to see the godhead's glory, the enmity will fear that man. Thus, though Essau comes in his way with enmity, Jacob's humble cogitation quenches Essau's evilness and Essau no longer wages war to Jacob but he throws in front of God[98]. And even though that [97] In Gen. 32: 28, God interprets the name Israel as "The Man strong with God", or who fight God. But Jacob is called, in continuation (Gen. 32: 30) that place as "the sight of God", where out author concluded from, that Israel means the man that sees God. Actually, only the strong man sees God, and the strong man fight God to retain Him.

[96] Tiger means the doing phase of the virtues, united with the fight against passions, which is guided by the discernment between good and evil. Euphrates means the superior phasis of the contemplation of God, one that no longer thinks at passions and at enemies, but it cultivates the humbleness out of experiencing the living of the glory of God.

[98] Jacob is strong by humbleness. By that he defeats Essau's enmity, namely his passions. This is for the passions are also the contrary impulses of other people. If the man defeats the enmity makes him envy Jacob, because of seeing Jacob's great glory, he won't be able to subdue Jacob for God is Jacob's helper, as it was written: "Turn in the land of your birth and I will be with you" (Gen. 32: 9). Finally, he came to Salem and he bought there a field and he built up an alter there, to the Lord Who listened him on the day of his trouble. The name Salem means peace, namely the man will cross over the war which God defends him in, and the man reaches the peace and he builds up an altar composed of twelve stones. And he brought gifts earned out of the toils of the serving (slavery) accomplished din Mesopotamia, in the Land of the Promise.

11. So it was also the beloved Moses, when he got the people out of Egypt and he get them rid of the hand of Pharaoh and he crosses them through the Red Sea and he saw the death of all their enemies and he sent Joshua to destroy Amalec, and he stood on the top of the mountain having his hands upheld by Aaron and Or, in order him not to lower his hands from the sign of the cross until Joshua turned back with joy after he had destroyed Amalec[99]. Then Moses built up an altar composed of twelve stones, at the foot of the mountain, and he called that place: "The Lord is my escape, for with His hidden hand God beats" (Exod. 17: 9, 15). The name Amalec means laziness. This is because, if the man starts running away form his own wills and he forsakes his sins and he runs to God, the laziness (the boredom) will be the first to wage him war, by wanting to turn him back to his previous sins. And that what sets the man in movement it is the straightening towards God, and that what causes the straightening it is the restrain. And that what guards the restrain it is the bodily tiredness. And through these ones Israel if liberated. And then the man brings thanks to God, saying: I cannot, but You are my Help from generation to generation.

And so it was the great prophet Elijah, who couldn't have killed all the prophets of the shame who opposed him, if he hadn't cleaned, in the first place, the altar composed of twelve passions, he will no longer feel the enmity of other people. And those people get appeased too.

[99] Jesus defeats satan through the cross raised by the Heavenly Fathers. In the Old Testament was fore-symbolized this by the victory of Joshua Navi over Amalec. But hot himself was raising the cross towards God, namely as a cross of his, but Moses did, by raising his hands up. The Moses's cross was neither his death, but it was a toil, and it was helped by Aaron and Or, in that, as hierarchs of Israel.

stones and if he hadn't placed pieced of wood on the altar, and if he hadn't poured water on them, and then he brought his sacrifice on them and God became "consuming fire" of the altar and of the things from on the alter. In that hour he showed his daring against his enemies and he killed all of them, so that no one remained. Then he thanked God, saying: "You are in all of these". This is for it was written that "he put his face between his knees" (3 Kings[100] 18: 42). Actually, if the mind sits carefully on its senses, it will achieve the immortality, and the immortality will bring the mind towards these glories which will be unveiled to the mind by God. And if the servant takes heed at Elijah and he doesn't see anything of the seven passions being born, he "will see a small cloud which, through a work of the man, it will bring water" (3 Kings[101] 18: 43-45) out of the sea, and that means the resting of the Holy Comforter. This is for the immortality consists of this: having healthy toils and not turning towards the same ones which you have prayed God to forgive you for. This is for, if God accepts the toils of the man and the things done my man are protected against his enemies, the enemies won't be able to persevere near to the man. This is because they will see that it is not their will within the man. Then, the enemies will disappear, as it was written: "For you call the name of their gods; but I call the name of my Lord God" (Ibid 24). And this is because there wasn't within him the will to obey them.

12. These words do not match only those, but they match all of them who follow the will of God and who keep God's commandments. That's why those was symbols of these. But those words have been written also towards advising us, for we walk on the traces of those who fought for achieving the immortality, and who were defended by immortality against any enemy's arrow. This is for they bowed under the shelter of God and they asked for God's help and they didn't trust any of their own toils. And the shelter of God was to them as a surrounding stronghold. This was because they knew that without the help from God, they weren't able to do anything. And they said, in their humble cogitation, as the Psalmist said: "If God doesn't build up the house, the mason will toil vainly; if God doesn't defend the city, the defender will strive vainly" (Ps. 126: 1[102]). This is for, if God sees the mind that has obeyed Him with the whole mind's power, and the mind doesn't have any helper except God, God wills strengthen the mind, saying: "Do not fear, My son Jacob, you little Israel". And again: "Do not fear for I have saved you and I have called your name. You are Mine and if you cross through water, I will be with you. And the rivers won't cover you. And if you cross through fire, you won't be burnt, the flame won't consume you, for I am your Lord God, the Saint of Israel Who saves you" (Isa. 43: 1-3).

So, you must listen with your mind to this assurance and dare against your enemy, saying: "Who is him who wages war to me? Who can stand against me? Who is him who sues me? Let him come closer! Lo, the Lord is my Helper. Who is him who hurts me? Lo, all of you will become worn out like an old coat, and you will be eaten by mots like a wool" (Isa. 50: 8-9). Powerful is God in order you have you together with those who live in the humble cogitation and who are defended by their humble cogitation, and their humble cogitation is their helmet around their head, by the grace of God Whom belongs the power and the glory and the mastery forever and ever. Amen.

About the Commandments Give to the Believers and about the Building Up of Those Who Want to Live Together Peacefully

1. Walking together in the way, you will take heed at any weak cogitation from within yourself, either that you must take a short break, or you eat something before the due hour. If you do out together for some passing thing, let each of you take heed at himself and not at his brother; you won't lecture another. If you do a passing thing within your monastic cell, or if you build up something, for instance the house, or anything else, let him whop works (together) to do his job as he wishes. And if he says: “Please, teach me, for I do not know”, and there is somebody else who knows that, do not allow the spite occur, but you will say: “I don’t know”. This is for this is the humbleness according to God. If your brother does something to somebody and you see that, you won’t tell him “You have broken that”. And if he tells you: Please, teach me” and you won’t teach him, but you remain silent, that means you do not have the love of God within you but you have the evilness within you. If your brother bakes something and the result is not good, you won’t tell him “You baked that wrongly”, because of that being death to your soul, but think that if you heard that from somebody else you would get upset. By thinking so, you will appease yourself. If you sing together and somebody mistakes a word, do not tell him immediately about that in order not to disturb him. If that word passed, let is passed. But if he tells you: Please, tall me”, you will tell him. If you eat something from refectory and there is somebody among you who doesn’t want that food, let him not say that he cannot eat that food, but let him force himself to eat, for God until death, and God will appease him. If you do something together and one of you breaks that up because of his weakness, you won’t rebuke him, but you rather will rejoice together with him. If some brothers bring you something, you won’t ask them something that hurts them. And if they let that thing within your monastic cell and some of the guests cannot restrain himself and says something that hurts you, let him who has heard that not to tell to any of the brothers, but let him keep his silence, until that thing let by those will pass, in order they heart not to be filled with the venom of the death. If you visit some strangers for something that you need, do not ask anyone about something that doesn’t belong to you, so that you will be able to turn yourself unharmed back to your monastic cell. And if you hear something that you do not want, by coming back to your place, you won’t tell that to your brothers. If you are at the place of some strangers, you won’t dare to utter any judgment about anything in that place where you have entered, in order you example to be used, especially your hidden and shown silence. This is for all the mentioned passions are in the weak one because of his heart and because of his laziness, and because he doesn’t see his own sins. And the help from God and the hope and the gentleness and the conscience and the forsaking of the own will and the forcing towards all the good things, all of these are contained by the humble cogitation.

[102] In KJB we have: Ps. 127: 1: "EXCEPT the Lord build the house, they labour in vain that build it: except the Lord keep the city, the watchman waketh but in vain."; in ROB we have" Ps. 126: 1: "If the Lord did not built the house up, they who built it would toil in vain; if the Lord didn't defend the city, vainly would take vigil him who defends it." (E. l. t.'s n.)

2. And the pride and the strife and the thought of reckon yourself superior to your brothers and the despising of the conscience and the non-thinking at yourself when your brother upsets you and the question: what do I have among the things attributed to me, all of these belong to the callous (sclerotic) heart. If you are working on your handwork and your brother enters your monastic cell, you won't reckon that you have done something that is above him or above you. If you work with a weak brother, you won't hiddenly judge him by wanting you to do something superior to what he does. If your brother works on his handwork and he breaks that up, you won't tell him anything, if he doesn't tell you: "Please, brother, teach me". And if you know (how to teach him) but you remain silent, that will be death to you. If you do your handwork as it should, according to your power, you won't tell that what yourself have done, or that what your brother has done during that week. This is because that will show the lack of wisdom. If you have started doing a passing thing together with your brothers, you won't want them to find out that you have accomplished more than they have done. This is for the thing done by man hiddenly, that thing is asked by God from the man[103]. If, because of his weakness, your brother tells you an inappropriate (unpleasant) word, you will take that joyfully. This is for, if you do not search for your word in the judgment from God, you will be committing a sin[104]. If you cohabit with the brothers and your thought wants to tis you up in a rope, you will tell to your thought: This brother is my master[105]. If you want to live in a harsher ascesis, you will take for you alone a small monastic cell, and you won't trouble your weaker

[103] In all of these it is being praise the humble cogitation. In it is shown a great gentleness. The humble cogitation is a great noblesse in the relationships with others, while the pride is rude. That's why God loves especially the things done by us hiddenly, without others knowing about that thing done by us, namely a thing which we don't try to impose ourself through.

[104] Any word you tell to somebody else, you should analyze whether that word is approved by the judgment of God. Only God has the quality of judging by knowing everything. You must try to conform yourself, through your conscience, to God's judgment. But God, generally, He doesn't judge but he forgives, or He waits for the man to correct himself.

[105] If you cannot tell to your brother a word of joy, because you reckon that he has done something wrongly, you will thing that your brother is your master, so that you fear of untying yourself in front of him, or to untie him.

brother. If a foreign brother visits you and you have heard, from before, that he is loving a certain schism, you won't rebuke him by words until his shortcoming will be shown to you. You will guard yourself not to do that what you know that it upsets your brother. If you want to take something that you need, you won't speak against you brother that "why hasn't him understood that in order him to give me that by himself?". But you will tell him daringly and with simplicity: "Please, give me that things for I need it". This is for this is the holy cleanness withing your heart. If you do not say plainly, but you whisper and judge your brother within your heart, you will be judged for that. If there occurs among you the question about some word of the Scripture, let him who know the meaning of that word to forsake his will behind his brother and to rest his brother into joy; this is for the word each one is required is that of getting humble in front of his brother[106]. He those thinks at the judgment from in front of the godlike Chair, there where he will be judged, let him do everything he can in order not to mistake with his mouth, because otherwise he won't find a good answer at that time.

3. You must not want to take care of the things of this body, in order you not to become like those animals who throw up from their stomach and cause much stench. But you must rather become an altar to God, in cleanness, by becoming inward priests, and you must always put incense on your inward altar, in the morning and in the evening, so that your altar not to run out of incense. Force yourself top always be in front of the Lord in a state of total prayer, in order you to be bestowed simplicity and innocence, and for the Lord to take away from you're the contrary things, which are: cunningness, devilish wisdom[107], curiosity, love for the self, and a naughty heart. This is because all of these will melt down the toils of them who practice it. The end of all of these takes place when the man fears God and the man's hearing obeys his conscience, [106] If you know the meaning of a word from Scripture which the brothers are talking about, but there is another brother who know that too, you will let that bother to tell it. This is for the best word you can tell on that occasion it is your humbleness. Out of your humbleness will be best shown that you have understood all the words of the Scripture.

[107] There is also a "devilish wisdom". It is that wisdom that searches for all arguments to demonstrate that there is no God, or to justify its pride and its egotistic passions. But this "wisdom" that is called also as "false knowledge", or pantheistic gnosis, it rather darkens him who practices it, by depriving him and all the realities of any meaning.

according to the will of God. And this will hiddenly teach the man. If there isn't the Master of the house within the man, that unworthy man will have his house submitted to his won will and he will speak whatever he wants, because of his heart not being under the master of That One, but under his enemies[108].

If you want to start and to exit to a small passing thing, you won't despise on one another, and no one will get out by himself letting his brother behind, for that one's conscience will suffer, but let him tell to his brother, with love: "Do you want to come with me?". And if he sees his brother tired, or having his body weaken, he won't insist by telling him: "We must go now". But he will postpone that on another date, and he will leave for his monastic cell with compassionate love. Guard yourself not to resist your brother in anything, in order not to upset him. If somebody dwells together with his Father or with his brother[109], let him now have his conscience occupied with somebody from outside, but let him be preoccupied in everything only with his cohabitants. This is the peace and the obedience. If you dwell with your Father or with your brother you won't be secretly friends with anybody, nor will you secretly send letters to somebody while hiding that form your Father or from your brothers, because you will lose both yourself and those. If you want to dwell together with a superior, you won't want to give alms to the poor, if you do not ask, firstly, your superior about your intention; you won't do anything hiddenly. If you ask about your thoughts, you won't ask after you have already done that, but you will ask in advance about that what wages war to you now, whether that is about a moving out, or about some handwork. If you want to change your handwork in order you to dwell together with another brother, or in order you to leave some brothers, you will ask about that, plainly, in advance[110]. You should ask yourself before doing anything, about the [108] He who thinks that he is master upon himself, and so he doesn't allow himself to be mastered by God, he actually will be under the mastery of his pride that is a passion upheld within him by the enemy demon. The man is himself inly into God, for the man won't lock up in himself but for the man remaining in connection with Hom Who has created the man, and the man remains in harmony with all the realities.

[110] Do not ask - after you have done something - about your thought that told you to do that thing, but you must ask about your thought before materializing it. And you must do this in order you not to feel sorry because of committing something before thoroughly thinking sat that thing or asking about that thing. Only by asking in advance you will decide in total freedom whether or not you should do something.

weakness of your soul or about the passions leading you to such things; and you must not ask as if you wouldn't have done that thing. So, ask yourself about your wound, saying: "LO, I have been wounded". You do this in order you to get healed of that what drives you to be wounded[111]. And if you talk about your thoughts, you mustn't be hypocrite and do not tell something instead of something else, or as that thing would have been done by somebody else, but you must tell the whole truth and prepare yourself to do that what the old men will tell you to do, because otherwise you mock on yourself and the old men.

4. If you ask the old men about your wars, you won't listen to your inward thoughts more than that what the old man tell you, but you firstly will pray God saying: "Have mercy on me and that what You want give to my fathers to tell me". And thus, if you do that what your fathers tall you to do, you will find resting into God[112]. It is restful one to live together with the brothers, but if you didn't feel yourself rested, that would be because of some motifs, as for instance: the handwork, because of some self-imposed bond, because of the resting you want, because of our incapacity to endure, because of your laziness, because you cannot endure the yoke (of the brothers' presence), because you cannot do your will, because you cannot satisfy your need, because you want to bestow yourself more to the useful suffering, because you are weak and you cannot bear the tiredness (imposed you by the brother's presence), because of any motif urging your hear to get out (of your relationship with them) and to get rid of that yoke and to get out with sadness (for them), or to sun away secretly from the trouble or because there occurs among you a lack of respect and you don't remember about brotherhood because of the impediment posed to you by some evilness. It will get you rid of these thoughts my making you to rather search for the peace, in order there to be resting within your heart wherever you do. So, you must throw

[111] You must ask about a thing that you think at, whether you should or you shouldn't do that, before you have done that thing, but by cogitating at yourself as being in the situation of one who has done that thing, in order you to be able to feel the whole joy or sorrow consequently to that thing.

[112] God accepts anyone's prayer. Though you are spiritually inferior, you should pray for the superior ones to tell you that what is good. Thus, you will accept that what you are told by believing that that comes from God. By that you do not humiliate your superior, for you admit that God tells him that what you are not sure that you should do.

the contempt upon yourself, and do not talk against your brother whom you have been living in ascesis with, and you won't listen to your enemies who urge you to change their benedictions into evil deeds. Avoid condemning and do not want the condemnation of your brother to cover up your own condemnation and to you to fall under your enemies there where you are going to live. If you live to dwell in some place, you won't want to quickly carve for yourself a monastic cell to be your dwelling place, until you become familiar with the way of living in that place, lest you will have offense there, either because of the worry (caused to you), or because of seeing some ones (who you do not like), either because of resting, or because of the offense from the friends. This is for, if you are wise, you will know in a few days everything that will be towards your death or towards your life.

5. If you had your monastic cell over to your brother in order him to remain there for a few days, you won't have your brother as under your mastery. And if you take a monastic cell for you to dwell there for a few days, take care of not breaking anything in it, neither will you build something up there, if you do not ask him who has handed that monastic cell over to you, in advance, either that thing is towards resting or not, because that would be contrary to conscience. If you dwell together with somebody, or near to him, and you receive a (commandment from him), you will keep that commandment for God, and you won't despise that commandment, neither hiddenly, nor manifestly by transgressing it. If you are appeasing yourself within your monastic cell and you have ties yourself for the hour of the eating, either for not eating something boiled, or something else, and you go out among strangers, you will avoid telling to somebody, while sitting at the table, "I don't eat this". Otherwise, all your efforts will have reached vain in the hand of your enemies. This is for the Master and the Savior said:" "Do in hidden, for Your Father to reward you visibly" (Mt. 6: 4). He who loves his toils, he will guard those in order those not to be lost. If you dwell together, if you brother calls you to any handwork, either inside or outside, you won't tell him: "Be patient, post pone that awhile", but you will quickly obey him. If you do something together, regardless what shortcoming you see to others, if you are wise[113] you won't allow your mouth to utter that in front of your brothers, because of that being death to your soul. If some brothers dwell together with you and they toil together with you for one day, you will rest them before the hour of the eating. Do not take heed at yourself, but take heed at the judgment of God. You must have God before your eyes in everything you do. If you leave for a place where you want to live either alone or with the brothers living there before you will have arrived there, and if you see there some craftsmanship damaging the things, or some harm, or that are being done non-monastic things, you won't open your mouth to criticize those ones. This is because that one is death. If you are weak in your passions, you will avoid letting somebody to tell you the passions of his thoughts, as ones of a believer. This is because this thing is destructive to your soul. If there occurs among you a word causing laughter, you will avoid letting your voice being heard, because of being that a sign of the nescience and of the non-fearing of God, and of the lack of guarding withing you.

6. Because of the anger that entered the whole world these days, let nothing of what you hear to disturb you, but you must say within your hearts: "What are these in comparison to the place where we are going to enter because of our sins?". Be merciful, for God, so that you know that you guard yourself, for it is not unimportant for the believer to have at least a very small thing. If you have these with simplicity into conscience, you will leave joyfully for the resting of the Son of God into you. Otherwise, your toils from here will be vain and when you will exit your body, you will be taken to torments, according to the Scriptures. This is for the thing said previously came our Master Christ, but the dryness of our heart blinds us out because of the wills of our heart, because we love these more than we love God and we have no love for God, because we love our passions. Lo, I have been striving myself to write to you, because the previous things haven't been enough. Please, from now one fight for no longer remain you within your uncircumcised heart, but help to yourself during your few days and guard these: the humble-cogitation, the peace, the obedience, the cutting off of your will, and the love. And if you do not guard these, but if there is within you the envy and the quarrel and the strife and the raising of the anger and the speaking-against and the disobedience, you will spend your time in an evil manner and you will really leave for torments, when you will exit your bodies. That's why, my beloved ones, you must love your brothers with the holy love and you must guard your tongue in order you not to utter any quarrel word, in order you not to hit your brother. And powerful is the Master in order him to give to all of you to work and to guard (the necessary things), so that we to find mercy by His grace, together with all the saints who were pleasant to him. For His is the glory and the honor and the worshipping, now and forever and ever. Amen.

About those Who Want to Appease Themselves in Good Quietude (Hesychia), as by Taking Heed at Themselves They to Get Far from Them Who Steal Them and to not Spend Their Time in Prison and in Bitter Slavery. These Ones Convince Their Hearts towards Things which Do Not Belong to Them by Leaving Their Own Sins

1. Somebody's love for studying the Scripture out of curiosity, it will give birth to enmity and to strife. And crying for your sin it will bring you peace. This is because of being a sin committed by that monk who sits within his monastic cell and he left behind his sins, but he studies the Scripture out of curiosity. He who occupies his heart with what the Scripture said, this or that, before he has gained on himself, he has his heart curious and very enslaved. But he who takes vigil in order him not to be kidnapped (by sin), he loves always throwing himself in front of God[114]. He who searches for comparing God to something, he commits blasphemy. And he who tries to honor God, he loves the cleanness into the fear of God. He who guards the word of God, he has known God and he fulfills His words as one who benefits of that[115]. Do not look at the high things, but you pray Gog for help, for Him to come to you and to save you from your sin[116]. This is for the things of God will come by themselves, if the place has been cleaned and it is unstained. He who leans on himself and on his knowledge, and he cherished his own will, he will gain the enmity and he won't be able to get rid of the ghost that brings him sadness in his heart. He who sees the words of the Scripture and he fulfills them according to his knowledge and he leans himself on his knowledge by affirming that it should be so, he won't know the glory of God and God's richness. And he who sees but says: "I do not know, because I am only a man", he will give glory to God. In this one dwells the richness of God, according to his power and to his thought[117]. Do not want to unveil your thought before everybody, but you will do that only in front of your Fathers, in order you not to attracts sadness to your heart. You guard your mouth, so that your neighbor will be honored near you. Teach you tongue to speak the words of God into knowledge, and the lie will run away from you[118]. But he who turns himself towards humbleness, he makes the fear of God bigger within his heart. You must not want to make friends with the people having glory within the world, lets they glory will weaken because of you[119]. If somebody speaks evil about your brother and he lowers your brother and he shows you brother's sin, you won't incline against your brother, in order you not to be taken into mastery by things which you do not want.

[114] It is being asked here not to study the Scripture while forgetting about God, and us to have God in our conscience, in the first place. Only then we will have reached the mastery over ourselves, namely we will have got rid of the slavery of the sin. He who studies the Scripture while forgetting about God, he is mastered by the pride of knowing the Scripture more than others do, but of not knowing God from direct living.

[115] Living on God gives us the power for fulfilling God's words from the Scripture. He who searches for God, he shows that he loves God. And his love for God keeps him clean of sins, namely including among those sins the pride too of studying the Scripture.

[116] While in the previous chapters have been given advices on how the monk must behave with the brother and with the old men, namely with other people, in the first chapters of this Word the monk is advised to search for living God, with the whole monk's zeal.

[117] He who is aware of his nescience regarding God, he will receive within himself the richness of God. This is for right the sentiment of the not-knowing it is produced by the overwhelming richness of God. And this living into humbleness of the richness of God it is a way of knowing God, one matching the man's power as creature infinitely inferior to God.

[118] He who searches for the glory from people, he will urge the people to lie. But he will lie himself by not remaining into the humbleness that corresponds to the truth.

[119] If you extol those who have glory within the world, you will actually weaken their true glory.

2. Your simplicity and your desire not to assess yourself[120], it will clean your heart up of evil. He who unites with his brother in some evil work, he won't escape the sadness of his heart. He who says something while cunningly having something else in his heart, he will make useless the whole his serving to God (the whole Liturgy). Do not attack yourself to somebody like this, lest you will be defiled by his defiled poison. Walk with them who lack the evilness, in order you to become partaker to their glory and cleanness. Do not have cunningness towards any man, in order not to make your toils vain. Clean your heart towards everybody, in order you to see the peace of God within yourself. This is because, as to one bitten by a viper the viper's venom penetrates the whole his body and it will harm his heart, likewise it is the evilness form the heart towards the neighbor. Its venom bites the soul and he will be endangered through cunningness. So, he who spares his toils in order him not to lose them (their result), let him remove this viper from himself, namely the cunningness and the evilness.

About Virtue[121]

1. Three are the virtues[122] had by the mind in order to discern the necessary things: the impulse according to the nature, the manhood, and the motionlessness.

2. Three are the virtues for, if seen by the min within itself, the mind will think that it will have reached the immortality: the discernment, or the discerning of each deed from others, and the non-confounding it has to another[123] [124].

[120] Somebody assesses himself because of wanting to see how important he is, or how much he has grown spiritually, namely out of pride.

[121] In the manuscript from the Century XII, no. 78, from the Sabbatical Collection of the Library from Jerusalem, this Word bears the title: "Of Abba Isaiah, the Hesychast and the Presbyter, about Virtues".

[122] The discernment of each state, virtue, and duty, from others, or the right-reckoning (t.'s n.).

[123] It seems to be here about the capacity which the man has through his mind to distinguish himself form others.

[124] It seems to us that here is being about only two virtues. (E. l. t.'s n.)

3. Three are the virtues which always provide the mind with light: to not see the cunningness (the evilness) of any man, to do good to them who do evil to you, and to endure, in an undisturbed manner, the things coming upon you[125]. These virtues give birth to other three even bigger virtues. Not seeing the cunningness (the evilness) (translator's version) of any man it will give birth to the love; doing good to them who do you evil it will bring the peace to you; and enduring the things coming upon you, without disturbance, it will bring you the gentleness.

4. Four are the virtues which clean the soul up[126]: the silence, the keeping of the commandments, the narrowing, and the humble cogitation. The mind always uses these four virtues: praying to God, ceaselessly falling in front of God by throwing itself in front of God, not judging any man, and being mute toward the passions speaking to it.

5. Four are the virtues which surround the soul and which make the soul breathing free from the disturbance coming from the enemies: the mercy, the non-getting-angry, the long-patience, and the shaking off of any seed of the sin trying to enter the soil of the soul. All of these are kept by resisting the contrary thing by forgetfulness.

6. Four are the virtues which help the youth to stay near to God: the every-moment meditation, the non-getting lazy, the taking of vigil, and not to assess on himself.

7. The soul gets defiled by four things: by strolling through the city, by not guarding the eyes, by making friendship with a woman and by and large by making friends with the people who have glory within the world, and by loving one's natural parents according and being familiar to them.

8. The fornication into body is increased by four things: by sleeping over to a young (young woman), by eating one's full, by frivolity in behaviors, and by adorning.

[125] The "light" can be seen in the appeasement of the man, in his lack of disturbance when attacked by others' evilness and by the diverse hardships. All of these, if the disturb him, they will take away from him his light, or his right-reckoning.

[126] In the Manuscript no. 181 dating from the Century XIII, from the patriarchal collection (from Jerusalem), which contains an unknown text attributed to Isaiah, before the sentence: "Four are the virtues which clean up", there are the followings: "Abba (Isaiah) said also that the soul's virtues are eighteen: the love, the humbleness, the gentleness, the long-patience, the non-keeping of the evil within mind, the non-avenge, the non-anger, the non-getting upset, the non-envy, the non-condemnation, the lack of vain-glory, the mercifulness, the restraint, the non-love for money, the compassion, the poverty, and the non-scattering" (to be seen also the Scholium no. 20, to the Word no. 15 of the Ladder of John Climacus, G.P. 88, col. 812.

9. The soul gets darkened by four things: by hating the neighbor, by despising the neighbor, by envying the neighbor, and by speaking against the neighbor[127].

10. The soul becomes baren by four things: by wandering from place to place, by living the scattering[128], by loving the material matter[129], and by having a weak (superficial) sight.

11. The anger increases through four things: by giving and taking, by imposing your will, by wanting to teach others, and by reckoning yourself as wise.

12. Three are the things gained by the man with difficulty, and which guard all the virtues: the crying, the crying for the own sins, and the keeping of the death in front of his eyes. Three are the things mastering the soul until the soul hasn't reached a certain measure, and these things won't allow the virtues to dwell within mind: the addiction, the laziness, and the forgetfulness. This is because the man wages war to his forgetfulness to the very last of his breath, because getting rid of forgetfulness requires one's struggle all the way to agony. The forgetfulness is stronger than all the thoughts and it gives birth to all the evils and it tears down, on each moment, the things built up by man[130].

13. Behold the deeds of the new man and of the former man: "He who loves his soul in order not to lose it" (Mt. 10: 39), he will guard the things of the new man. And he who wants the resting in this short time[131], he commits and he does the things of the former man, and h will lose his soul. And our Lord Jesus Christ, by showing the new man within his body, he said: "he who loves his soul he will lose his soul, and he who loves Me he will find his soul" (Mt. 5: 39). This is for He is the Master of the Peace and through Him it has been torn down "the middle wall

[127] One who doesn't' see the value of another, he has narrowed his sight, he has got darkened, and he doesn't receive within himself that what is luminous light. The egotism is that state that darkness the man up, by reducing the man to himself, in a liar manner. The egotism is non-communication.

[128] The wandering form place to place, the scattering, they mean non-deepening within that that is in all the things. It means remaining at the surface of the things.

[129] One cannot find within matter any profound or spiritual content.

[130] We have here a remarkable description of the forgetfulness. The forgetfulness doesn't allow us to continue the good which we have started doing it, it makes us fall off that good, it won't allow us to grow up spiritually. The forgetfulness invades us without us willing it. The Philokalian Fathers opposed the watchfulness to forgetfulness, and the watchfulness requires a ceaseless effort of will and of awareness (t.'s n.).

[131] The author often called the earthly life as "this short time" (t.'s n.).

of the enmity" (Eph. 2: 14). But He said: "I haven't come to bring peace, but sword" (Mt. 10: 34)[132]. And he says again: "Fire I have come to throw on earth and how I wish it was lit by now" (Lk. 12: 49); namely within them who follow His holy teachings there is the fire of the godhead. His disciples have found the sword of the Ghost and they have cut off with it all the body's wills. The he gave them the joy, by saying: "I am giving you MY peace, I am leaving you My peace" (Jn. 14: 27)[133].

Behold how, they who are mastered by worries, they have lost their soul in this century, and they who have cut off their wills, they have become holy sheep of the Lord towards sacrifice, and when the Lord will show Himself into the glory of the godhead, He will call them on His right hand telling them: "Come, the blessed ones of My Father, and inherit the Kingdom prepared for you since the foundation of the world. For I was hungry and you gave Me to eat" (Mt. 25: 34-35), and the followings. And they who have lost their soul during this short time, as the found their soul in time of need, and they received multiplied payment for that what they have been waiting for to receive. And they who have been fulfilling their wills, they have guarded their sinful soul, because of being they deceived by the vanity of their richness and because of not keeping God's commandments, they reckoned that they will last all the way to the end of this century[134]. That's why the same of their blindness will be shown on the hour of the judgment, and they will be curse goats, and they will hear the fearsome decision of the Judge Who says: "Go away from Me, you the cursed ones, [132] It seems a contradiction between the fact that Jesus is the peace of the world and his affirmation that He hasn't brought peace but sword. But He has brought the sword of the forgetfulness and of the mercy, one that kills all the enmity. He has brought the sword as a fire burning everything that is evil, as it will be said in the following quote. While in his previous Words Abba Isaiah has been spoken about the gentle behavior a monk must have towards his brothers, now he is deepening the grounds for that duty.

[133] In Codex Sabbaiticus, after the following sentences, the Words and like this: "The brother asks the Oldman: What should the man do in the temptation coming upon him, or with the thought coming him from the enemy? The Oldman told him: He owes to cry in front of God's kindness, so that God will quickly help him rest, if he prays into knowledge. This is for it was written: "The Lord is my Help and I won't fear of that what the body will do to me" (Ps. 117: 9). In Paterikon, these wors are attributed to Abba Moses the Egyptian (G.P. t. 65, col. 288).

[134] Better said, they reckoned that they will last forever in this age, or that beyond this age there is nothing more; or they reckoned that with this age everything ends. If those had been the cases, both this time and the whole their history would have been meaningless.

into the fire and into the outer and eternal darkness[135] prepared to the devil and to his angels, for I was hungry and you didn't give Me to eat" (Mt. 25: 41) and the followings. The mouth to those ones will be muted, and they won't find out what to say, because they will remember their mercilessness and their poverty[136]. Then, they will say: "Lord, when did we see You hungry and we didn't serve You?". But He will shut their mouth up, by saying: "He who did good to one of these all-unimportant ones who believed, he did good to Me" (Ibid).

14. Let's therefore examine on ourselves, my beloved ones, to see whether each of us fulfills or not the commandments given him. This is for all of us owe to fulfill the commandments, the subordinate and the leader, according to their measure. This is for the Lord rejoiced more for that poor widow's two pennies than of the rich gifts thrown into the gifts' box by the rich people (Mt. 12: 41-43; Lk. 21: 1-3). This is for God takes heed at our will. Therefore, let's not give room to our indifference withing our heart, lest the care for ourselves to separate us from God, and let's fulfill our duties according to our poverty. This is for, as the chieftain of the synagogue and his daughter receive mercy, namely the Lord resurrected the daughter (Mt. 9: 25), and as the Lord had mercy on that woman who had a spilling of blood, despite she vainly spent all her money on doctors (Ibid 22), before she knew Christ; and as the Lord healed the centurion's servant for he believed in Him (Mt. 8: 13), likewise the Lord had mercy on the Canaanite woman and He healed her daughter (Mt. 15: 28); and the Lord resurrected Lazarus whom He loved (Jn. 11: 24), likewise the Lord resurrected the unique son of the poor widow for her tears (Lk. 7: 15. And as the Lord didn't overlook Mary who anointed His feet with chrism (Jn. 12: 2), likewise He didn't reject the sinful woman who washed His feet with her tears (Lk. 7: 38).

[135] "The fire and the most outer darkness", it is the darkness of the ultimate non-understanding, which have been cultivated to them by they who haven't wanted to know the truth that everything has a meaning only by coming from a conscious and loving Creator. Given their lack of knowledge, because of coming out of their lack of love, they won't have any joy, but they will live an endless torment, like a burning fire. Both of them will be at the extreme edge of the existence, somewhat outside of existence, for the superior degree of the existence is shown in the endless love and knowledge of God: the supreme Tripersonal Love.

[136] They will be poor because of not having any spiritual content. The material richness which they have been trying to gain it, it will have got melted away, and from God and form people they haven't received and they won't receive any joy, because they haven't opened by their deeds, to the love coming from God and from people.

And as the Lord called Peter and Jacob out of their fishing boat telling them: "Follow Me" (Mt. 4: 20), likewise He called Matthew who was sitting at the custom office (Mt. 9: 9). And as the lord washed up the feet of Hid disciples, he likewise washed-up Judah. And as the Ghost, the Comforter came over the Apostles (Acts 2: 4), likewise the Ghost came over Cornelius (Ibid 10: 44) with encouragement. And as the Lord assured Anania in Damascus about Paul, saying: "For he is My chosen vessel" (Ibid 9: 15), so He assured Philip in Samaria about the Ethiopian eunuch (Ibid 9: 27). This is for there is no bias for the smaller or for the bigger, or the richer or of the poorer, but He asks us for our will and for our faith in Him and for us to guard His commandments and for us to love everybody. This is the seal required to our soul when it leaves our body; as He commanded to His disciples, saying: "In this they will know that you are My disciples, if you love on one another" (Jn. 13: 35). But who are they whom He says about, that they will know, if they aren't the Powers staying on the right hand and on the felt hand? This is for, if the enemies see the sign of the love united with the soul, the enemies will fearfully get far from that soul. And then all the Holy Powers will rejoice of it (of those ones' love)[137].

15. My beloved ones, let's therefore fight according to our power, in order us to gain it (the love), so that our enemies won't be able to take us into their mastery. This is for He also said: "That city that sits on the top of the mountain cannot be hidden" (Mt. 5: 15). What mountains does he speak about it not about His holy word? Therefore, by beloved ones, let's make our efforts zealously and gratefully, in order us to fulfill His word that says: "He who loves Me, he will keep My commandments" (Jn. 14: 23). Then our efforts will be like a stronghold protecting us to remain into His word, and against the hand of all our enemies, until we will meet Him[138]. This is for, if we find [137] The justice of Christ will allow our enemies to be present on the left hand, at the judgment, in order to be shown the extent which we served them to. But by being shown our love for Christ and for people, produced within us by our faith in Him, the evil powers will run away from us, because of not being they able to endure the love. And the angels sitting on the right hand, they will rejoice of the love of each one, a love that was directed towards all the people. Then, the love will unite everybody, in an unveiled manner, and the egotism from on hearth will be then plainly shown and it will singularize them who practiced it.

[138] The word of Lord Christ about love is the highest mountain which we must climb on, so that we to become a steadfast stronghold founded on His word. But the word of Christ about live it actually is one with Christ. Christ is the highest spiritual mountain. And Christ is a mountain of the love Who calls us too to be united with Him on that height. The devils do strength through love, there will be scattered all our enemies through His holy word that is the Mountain where the stone was cut from, without using human hands, and that crushed the idol made of gold and of other four more kids: of silver, of brass, of iron, and of burnt clay (Dan. 2: 34-35), as the Apostle said: "Put on all the weapons of God, in order you to be cable to stand against the craftsmanships of the devil. This is because of not being your struggle against the blood and against the body, but it is against the principalities, and the dominions, and the worldly masteries of this ages, and against the ghosts of the evilness from the skies" (Eph. 6: 11-12). The four principalities are these: the idol of four sorts, that is the enmity. They were made to vanished by the Holy Word of God, as it was written that that stone that crushed the idol it has become a big Mountain and it has covered the whole world (Dan. 2: 35[139]). Let's run, my brothers, under His protection, in order Him to be our escape and Him to save us from these evil powers, in order us too to have the joy together with all His saints gathered near Him from all the four quarters of the earth. This is for each of us will hear his own happiness according to his deeds. This is for powerful is His name in order not to allow our heart wandering because of the forgetfulness brought us by our enemy, and Him to protect us for us to endure the tribulations coming upon us for his Holy Name[140], according to our power, so that us too to find the mercy with those who are worthy of receiving His blessings. This is for Him are due the glory and the honor and the worshipping, to the Father and to the Son and to the Holy Ghost, forever and ever. Amen.

everything they can to separate us from Christ, of from love. This is a disorder brought into God's creation, because of them wanting to show God as having created a world incapable of happiness.

[139] Out of Christ's work about love, there has been detached, as a rock out of a mountain, that Apostle's and of his descendants' word, and not by being carved out by a human hand, but by Christ's power. And this Word crushed the devils' image imprinted within people, and image seeming to the people as being made of gold, but it actually is made of silver, or brass, or iron, and of terracotta, namely without power for lasting.

[140] Even the name of God uttered by the believer it has power to protect him against the enemy, for the power of the godlike name is united with a power corresponding to each of us.

The Word no. 8

About Short Teachings (Sentences)

1. Abba Isaiah said: "Now I am seeing myself as a wandering horse who has myself as his master, and he who finds it he mounts on it and when he lets this horse free, another one catches it and rides it".

2. He said also: "I am like somebody who has been caught by his enemies and tied up, and they have thrown him in a muddy place, and if he shoughs out towards his Master, the enemies will beat him up to make him to shut up.

3. he said also: "I am like a tiny sparrow giving its leg to a child, and if the child has loosened up the tie the sparrow will immediately try to fly away by thinking that it has been untied. But if the child pulls the string back, the sparrow will; descend again. I see myself like this. I am saying this because nobody must be careless, until the very last of his breaths".

4. He also said: "If you ever give something to somebody and you forgive his debt, you will imitate the nature of Christ, and if you ask your debtor to pay you back you will imitate the nature or Adam, and if you ask him to pay an interest you will show yourself even lower that Adam's nature".

5. he also said: "If somebody accuses you of a thing you have or you haven't done, if you keep your silence, that will be according to Christ's nature, but if tell him: What have I done? that won't be according to the same nature. And if you oppose his word with your word, that will be contrary to nature".

6. He said also: "Fulfilling your commandments (your liturgies), if you fulfill them with humbleness, as a worthless one, they will be accepted by God. And if you get your heart haughty and you remember somebody who has gone to sleep of who has neglected his duties, your efforts will be in vain"[141].

7. he also said about the humble-cogitation that it has no tongue for speaking about somebody else who neglects his job, or about somebody else who thinks evil of his neighbor, neither

[141] If while fulfilling your job you criticize another who is not fulfilling his job, your efforts will be in vain. Serving God but not loving your neighbor, it will cause your serving not to be accepted by God. The love for your neighbor it superior to the serving claimed by you as brought to God.

it has eyes to take heed at somebody's shortcomings or ears to hear things which are not beneficial to his soul. And it has nothing to talk to somebody else except about his own sins. Such a man is peaceful with all people for the commandment of God and not for friendship[142]. If somebody fasts all the time, and if he surrenders himself to great toils and commandments, except to this road (of the humble cogitation), all his efforts will be in vain[143].

8. The said also that if somebody earns a vessel for his need and when he needs that vessel, he is unable to find it, he has earned that vessel in vain. "What I am telling you is this: I fear God, for if there come to pass in the hour of the need and He finds me speaking, or angry, or daring to teach another, He won't reach him for he wants to be pleasant to people or because of wanting the people to talk about him or because of his other passions. So, if God doesn't find within man the fear of God at that time, all man's efforts will be in vain"[144].

9. He also said: "If our Lord Jesus Christ hadn't healed, in the first place, all the man's passions, which He came for, He wouldn't have climbed the cross[145]. This is for, before our Lord came into body, the man was blind and mute and weak and deaf and lepper and lame and killed by all the things contrary to the nature. Buit after He has mercy on us and He came to us for us, He rose the dead and He made the lame walking and the blind seeing and the mute speaking and the deaf hearing and He resurrected the new man who is free of all weakness, and He climbed the cross. And together with Him were crucified two thieves, and that one from His right hand glorified Him and begged Him, telling Him: "remember, Lord, when you will come [142] Neither the friendship with another are we searching it for our interests, but for it is the commandment of God give to us in order us to love everybody.

[143] The humble cogitation is not a stranger to the love, because of not being possible to exist love without humble-cogitation. If you value on yourself more than you value another, you won' be able to love him.

[144] God cannot be within man together with the man's passions, the passion representing the man's egotism. God cannot be within a man who is exclusively preoccupied with himself. In order you to feel God, you must forget about yourself.

[145] Christ had to show, before allowing Himself to be crucified, that He was stronger than all the sufferings caused by passions, and that He was stronger even than death. He was able so to convince His apostles that he defeated the death, and He even in His death showed and even greater power and His death ahs an even greater significance for He was able to defeated death even after he allowed Himself to be brought in state of death, for He resurrected but not for turning back to His historical life, but He has opened us the life for eternity.

into Your Kingdom" (Lk. 22: 24), and him who was on the left hand blasphemed Him. This means that before waking up of its indifference, the mind is with the enemy. But when our Lord Jesus Christ wakes up our mind from its indifference and He gives to our mind to see and to distinguish all the things, and so the mind will be able to climb the cross. But the blaspheming enmity and the mind weakened up by pride, they refuse the tiredness and they turn back to indifference[146]. These ones are the two thieves separated from their friendship by our Lord Jesus Christ, as one blasphemed Him and one persevered in praying Him until he heard Him telling him: "Today you will be together with Me in heavens" (Ibid 45). The las one reached in Paradise and ate from the tree of the life and of the death, after practicing the robbery for the whole his life.

10. He also said about the Holy Impartation, that it is called as the union with God, because until we still are defeated by our passions, either by anger or by envy, either by our desire to be pleasant to people or by our vain-glory, either by hatred or by other passions of ours, we still are far from God. So, where it is our union with God[147]?

11. he also said: "If you fulfill your servings (liturgies) and after that within your heart there is moving a passion, all your efforts will be in vain. This is for God won't accept those efforts of yours".

12. Someone among the old men told him: "When the rain falls over that field that has seed in it, that will offshoot: but if the field has not seed, how will it offshoot? If somebody fight for casting out the contrary things of his heart, they will no longer move within his heart. This is for God wants the man to be like Him in everything, and that's why He came to us and He suffered, in order Him to transform our callous nature and Him to cut off our wills and our liar knowledge which were masters upon our souls[148]. This is for the speechless beats preserved

[146] The mind awakened from its indifference can climb up the savior cross. Otherwise, the mind will still endure the torments of the cross, but that will be a cross not leading to the eternal life. This is because God won't see in that mind the acceptance of the self-sacrifice brought to God because of the mind's indifference, but that mind will stubbornly refuse to know God and to ask for God's mercy.

[147] We will enjoy the union with God if we are no longer mastered by our passions which are searching through for own pleasure, or which we regress through in our egotism.

[148] "God want to make the man kike Him in everything and therefore He came to transform the man's sclerotic nature". So, God didn't come as the theory belonging to Anselm the Canterbury affirms – a theory impropriated by the Catholicism -, only for satisfying the honor their nature, but the man changes his nature[149]. So, similarly to the way which the animal obeys the man to, we too must obey our neighbor, for God. Our Lord came for that[150]. Therefore, you notice how much the animal surpasses you who base yourself on the opinion of your science. So, if I want to come back to that what is characteristic to the nature, as the animal has no own will neither it has its own conscience, I must become likewise, and not only with him whom I get along and who is close to me, but also with him who opposes me. This is for this is the will of God.

13. So, he who wants to come to the resting or our Lord and not to be defeated (by the enemy)[151], he will part with the people in everything, in order him not to criticize anybody and not to praise anybody or not to justify anybody, or not to congratulate another and to show his righteousness, or not to upset somebody in any regards, and not to let any bold of enmity within his heart against the neighbor, and him to obey of God offended by our sin, and then He left us. By the human nature assumed by Him, He communicates to us the godlike power of His godhead, in order Him to make us like Him; He fills us up with the godlike gifts. He helps us to no longer follow our egotistic wills, but us to follow His will by surpassing any egotism of ours; He sets us free from the false or from the claimed knowledge that makes of our own self the center of the universe; He helps us to know Him through a direct experience, as a center and as a spring of the existence of ours and of all the realities. If they want, all the realities will be filled up with the godhead of Christ, but without ceasing to be themselves.

[149] The animal remained submitted to the law given him by God by creation. The man by using in an evil manner his freedom and his conscience given him by God when God made the man in His image, and the man by disobeying his duty to become himself increasingly like God through is freedom and conscience, the man used his freedom and his conscience in an evil manner because he wrongly understood that he was in the image of God for reckoning himself as god, for to carve gods to himself out of the nature's forces giving him bodily satisfactions. The knowledge depends too much on the man's nature, so that the man uses it even when he no longer perceived through it the reality or the truth, but a reality or a truth imagined by the man, and therefore it becomes a imagine knowledge. The man perceives the unimportant things as important and he locks his mind to the really important things.

[150] God wants each man to obey his neighbor. This reciprocal obedience allowing the man to be both master of other and their subject, it makes the people equals and it also united them, or it makes the people to help on one another, by teaching and by helping on each other. In order Him to show the need for the man to obey to his fellow human, and also the need for his fellow human to obey him, the Son of God cam like man Who, by being God as well, he asks us for our obedience but He also submits Himself to us by helping us. Christ shows us the value of our fellow human by the obedience He asks us for, and also by the great help which He provides us with.

his will to the unwise. If you do these, you will know yourself and you will understand that what harms you. But he who is convinced that he is right and who cherishes his will, he won't be able to get rid of his enmity, neither will him be able to rest himself, because he doesn't see the things he lacks[152]. That one, when existing his body, he will have to strive in order to find mercy. And the target of all the efforts is you to persevere into God with the whole your heart and with the whole your power and you to have mercy on everybody and you to cry (for your sins) and you to pray God for His mercy and help.

14. he also said about the teaching of the neighbor, referring to the commandment of God: "Where can I know from that I have received from God to tell to somebody else: "Do this, or do that", as long as I am in repentance for my sins? This is fo the man who fell once he is under repentance and he has no certitude, because of not knowing if the forgiveness has been given him. This is because the man's sin surely took place, but the mercy belongs to God. And you cannot be worriless in your heart, because of the sin you have committed, until you will come to the judgment of God. And if you want to know whether you have been given the forgiveness for your sins, you must take heed at this: if nothing related to your sins moves within your heart not even when other talks you about those, and you even no longer know what those were like. Then you know that Jesus has made you partaker to His mercy[153]. But your sins are still living within you and they still master you, so that you must cry for them. You must have fear and tremble and pain if you are not worries about your past sins until you will answer

[152] The praising of the self is the enemy of the man for he is mastered by the enemy making the man to fear of the fact that there can be one better than he is. Such a man doesn't see, by and large, his shortcomings, namely the qualities he doesn't have.

[153] "A certain brother from the monastery of Abba Serid asked Abba Barsanuphius: 'Abba Isaiah says that as long as the man has a pleasure for them (for sins), his sins haven't been forgiven yet. Explain me this, for the Lord. I ask you this because this thought troubles me". And Abba Barsanuphius answered him: 'The reason why Abba Isaiah said this about pleasures it is also because of them who commit the sins. This is for, something else is one to remember the taste of the honey, and something else is him having together with the memory the tasting too. So, to him who recalls with pleasure his past sins, but he doesn't commit the pleasurable things, but he opposes them and he fights against them, his previous sins have been forgiven" (Barsanuphius, Answer no. 139 – according to the note of monk Augustine).

in front of the judgment chair of God[154]. And if somebody asks you for teaching him something, you should tell him the truth, by giving your soul to the death and by affirming the freedom[155]. And if he came back to you without having applied your teachings in practice, and he asks you about the same things as one who hasn't used anything of what you told him previously, you will part with him because such a relationship will kill your soul. This is for it is a great thing for the man to leave his will and his self-justification which he reckons as being according to God, and to keep the word of him who teaches him according to the will of God. This is for God's man, Abba Nisterus, by seeing the glory of God and by having the sons of his sister living together with him, he didn't command them anything, but he allowed each of them to do his won will, either they were becoming kind or evil, and he took no care of them[156]. He asked them about Cain and Abel: what does it teach them to do this or that, while neither the Law nor the Scripture existed?". Actually, if God didn't teach the man, the man would vainly strive.

15. He also said: "If somebody told you some useless words, you should not want to listen to those words, in order you not to let your soul unkept. But you should not shame up his person by making him sad because of you not admitting the things he says, by telling him: "I do not accept that within my [154] Nothing unclean can enter the Kingdom of God. If you haven't cleaned yourself, until your death, of the pleasant memory of some one of your sins, even if committed only once, you won't enter the Kingdom of God.

[155] Do not teach somebody who hasn't asked you for it. But if he asks you for teaching him, you must tell him the truth even at the expense of you suffering the death for that. So were supposed to do the servants of the church during the communist regime. That is the way which the man can show himself free in.

[156] "Some of the Fathers asked Abba Poemen, saying: 'How suffers Abba Nisterus his disciples in such a condition?". Abba Poemen told them: 'If I was there, I would cover him". Abba Anuv asked him: 'And what will you tell to God?'. Sabba Poemen answered him: 'I will tell God that what He told us: 'First, you get the beam out of your eye and so you will see the straw from your brother's eye'" (Mt. 7: 4) (Greek Paterikon, G.P. 65, col. 586). Barsanuphius, Answer no. 361: "Somebody askes Abba Barsanuphius: 'Did that old man good by not correcting his disciple?'. And Barsanuphius answered him: 'Brother, the old man didn't allow haphazardly that brother unadvised. This is because he had advised that brother for many times, but the brother didn't take his advice. That's why, because of seeing that brother uncorrected, he felt that thing to the judgment of God, saying: 'God know what is beneficial to him. This is for the brother is better than me.'. This was being done by the consummate one who didn't dare to judge anyone, and that should be towards ashaming those who are nothing but they judge everybody." (Answer no. 363; John Climacus, The Ladder, note no. 3 at the Word X) (Monk Augustine).

heart". You won't tell him that. This is because of not being you superior to the first created man who was made by God with His own hand, and who didn't benefit of his evil carelessness (indifference). Therefore, you should run away and do not want to listen to him. But take heed at not wanting to still know the things said to you, while running away only with your body. This is because, if you hear the word even only for an instant, the devils won't let go the saying heard by you, but they will kill your soul. Running away, you must run totally".

16. He also said: "Out of the things I see, the earning and the honor and the resting wage war to the man, to the death".

17. He also said: "Teaching your neighbor it is a falling of your soul; and wanting to bring your neighbor back to his good nature it is a great crushing of your soul[157]. This is because, while you teach your neighbor, by telling him: Do this or that, you will make him understand that you have the means for sleeping and tearing down your house by wanting to build up his house".

18: He also said: "Woe to that soul who committed sins after the Holy Baptism. This is because such a man cannot be worriless, while being into sin, or once he has fallen into sin with his body, either he stole, or he did some other mistake to somebody, or he looked passionately to a body, or he tasted somebody secretly while taking care of not being seen by somebody else: or you to examine that what he has. He who does this, He despises Jesus. And somebody asked him: 'And who preserves intactly that what he has received, Father?'. And he told him: 'As him who has made a hole in a wall and he has taken money from there and he has been deceived by enemies, likewise it has happened to this one too. This is because, as he has defeated that one, he has defeated this one too. By being defeated in the unimportant things he will be defeated in the important things as well".

19. He also said: "That man who searches for power, by doing wonders and healings and by having the whole knowledge and by resurrecting the dead, but he fall into sin, he cannot be worriless and that's why he is under repentance, because he judges other and the Judge, because of despite being him in may toils, by seeing somebody in all the sins and in all carelessness, and by despising him, his repentance will be in vain, because he has rejected a limb of Christ by judging him and by not letting the judgment to the Judge God"[158].

20. He also said: "All of us are like in a hospital. One is sick in his eye, another has a wound, and all the other weaknesses which exist. And some of them are healed wounds, but when the man eats something of what harms him, his sickness reappears. So is him who, while being into repentance, he judges of despises somebody. He must renew his repentance. This is for, they who are in the hospital and suffer because of diverse helplessness, if one shouts out about his illness, will another tall him: why do you shout out because of your illness? Won't everyone think at his own illness? So, if the passion of my sins was in front of me, I wouldn't see another man sinning. This is because, by lingering all of us like in a hospital, each of us guards himself, as the doctor told him, not to eat something harming his wound. So, woe to that soul who doesn't want to run away from all the sins, because of coming many troubles to him from them who envy him and who meet him. This is because it is difficult to anyone to achieve the long-patience and the thankfulness in all the things.

21. When the people were in Egypt, they ate and drank with pleasure, though they were serving to Pharaoh. But when the Lord sent them helper, namely on Moses, in order him to liberate the people from under Pharaoh, the people felt uncomfortable and troubled, and despite all the plagues brought by God upon Pharaoh, Moses didn't trust the helplessness of the Egyptians until the time came and God told him: "I will bring one more plague upon Pharaoh" (Exod. 11: 1), and you will tell to Pharaoh: 'Release my people, because I will step upon your firstborn'. And then Moses dared. And God told him: "Speak hiddenly into the ears of My people and let each of them to ask from his neighbor silver vessels and gold vessels and clothing and put those on the shoulders of your children and you will rob the Egyptians" (Exod. 11: 2). And they spend some of those for remaking the tent.

22. So, they were saying that the old men were saying this, because the silver and the gold vessels and the clothing, they are the senses which serve to enmity. And this is a sign that if the man doesn't part with his enmity, in order him to bring fruits to God, the cover of the resting from God won't come over the man. This is because the cloud didn't overshadow the tent as long as the tent still missed something, but the cloud only overshadowed the complete tent. It was likewise regarding the built-up temple, as long as it was missing something, the cloud didn't overshadow it, but only after the temple was complete and the blood and the fats of the total burnings were introduced in it and God accepted the goof fragrance, only then the cloud overshadowed the temple. Namely, if the man doesn't love God with the whole his mind, and if the man doesn't attach himself to God with the whole his heart, the cover of the resting from God won't come over the man[159].

23. He said also that if the mind wants to climb the cross before its senses to get rested and before him getting rid of his weakness, the anger of God will come upon the man because of the man starting something above his measure before being the man healed-up of his senses[160]. And if you heart has defeated the sin by nature, and if your heart has parted with the things giving birth to sin, and if you keep in front of you the torment with the knowledge of the help given you by God, the God will remain together with you, if you don't upset God in anything, but if you cry before God and say: "Your is the mercy, Lord, of [159] The temple as image and the church in reality is the house of God where the man meets God by bringing sacrifices to God or by bringing himself as sacrifice to God into Christ. The initiative belongs to God, for He was The One Who commanded to be built-up the temple, and His Son founded the Church. But the man answered those commandments by building those ones up. And Christ Who has built the Church up and Who brings Himself sacrifice as man within it, by attaching to Himself also the people who believe in Him, as His brothers, He is man but also God. In the temple as image, but in the churchly dwelling place as reality, the resting of God comes over the man. The man is ridded of his worldly worries, into Christ. The man feels himself protected by the shelter providing him with the eternal life through the love of God.

[160] In his word no. 30, Saint Isaac the Syrians says: "Before the mind having appeased the senses". But the apparent power of the senses is rather a weakness of the senses. This is because this is shown in their too strong attachment to the material realities. The man will more easily climb the cross, or he will be able to more easily endure the cross's pains, if his senses no longer live (because of weakness), with much intensity, the pleasures or the pains of the attachment to the material realities. The increased pains felt by a man with his senses, while the man is climbing the cross, without getting the man rid of their weakness, they are also a punishment from God, or they are an absence of the power from God within that man. And the increased pain can lead the man to rebel himself against the cross, as that thief from the left hand of Christ, or the man could try to get rid of the cross.

the One Who saved me, because I cannot escape the hands of my enemy without Your help". And if you take care of your heart and if you do not upset in anything either him who teaches you how God wills, that will actually be characteristic to Christ by nature. And He will guard you against all the evils. Amen[161].

Commandments Given to Them Who Have Rejected (the World)[162]

1. If you have rejected the world and if you have surrendered yourself to God[163], in order to repent yourself, you won't allow your thought to bother you for your previous sins, as they haven't been forgiven to you. And you won't despise His commandments, once you reckon that He hasn't forgiven your previous sins. Tou must keep the following things to your death and you must not despise them: guard yourself against eating together with a woman, and do not be friends with the young men, neither will you sleep while you are still young, on the same mattress with somebody, except with your brother or with [161] Without being strongly aware of the help coming from God, we won't search for the cross. Let's not trust that we can endure the cross without His help. But our awareness about the need for the help from Christ, it must be accompanied by our awareness of our sin, and by our awareness of our helplessness coming to us out of that cause, so that we cannot bear the cross by ourselves. "I bear the cross because of being I a sinner. But I am able to bear the cross for I have asked for Christ's help. He endures the cross within me. And only thus the cross will; be beneficial top me, for I won't be defeated by my sing of structing myself, or by my helplessness to bear my cross all the way up to the end". Abba Isaiah deepens us into the subtlest and most complex analyzes of the souly life, or better said of the spiritual life.

[162] In Codex no. 215, of the Collection of the Patriarchy (from Jerusalem), written around the end of the Century XVI, at p. 266, third Word has the title: "Of the One among the Saints our Father Athanasius, the Bishop of Alexandria, towards Them Who Have Rejected the World" (Monk Augustine).

[163] In the Codex mentioned above, this text is thus: "If you have surrendered yourself to Christ, why do you still want to walk within the world? Do not touch, do not taste, do not use that what you have renounced to, once you have started in love for Christ. If you have wealth and riches, why don't you have a woman too? If you have died together with Christ through Baptism, and if you have resurrected together with Christ through faith, you will search for the realities from above, there where Christ is, and you will keep His commandments. Guard yourself all the way to your death, not to make friends with the young people" etc. (Monk Augustine).

your Abba. But even with them, you will do that fearfully, and not recklessly. Do not disregard your eyes when you put on your clothes[164]. If you need to drink wine, you will drink up to three cups[165] and you won't transgress this commandment even for friendship. You won't dwell in a place where you have committed sin[166], and you won't despise your serving (your liturgy), in order you not to fall into the hands of your enemy. Force yourself to meditate on the Psalms, for that will guard you against the slavery to the defilement. Love all the unpleasant sufferings and your passions will be humiliated. Take care of not assessing yourself in anything[167] and take care for crying for your sins. Guard yourself against lying, because the lie banishes away the fear of God from you. Do not unveil your thought sin from or everybody[168], in order you not to offend your brother. Unveil your thoughts to your Fathers in order the grace of God to cover you up. If you see any offense, but not a mortal offense, you won't despise your brother, lest you will fall into the hands of your enemies[169]. Avoid getting enslaved to the things which you have sinned in, in order they not to be refreshed within you.

2. Love the humbleness and it will guard you against the sins. Do not love quarreling in order you not to be inhabited by all the evil. Surrender you heart towards obeying your Fathers and the grace of God will inhabit you[170]. Do not claim yourself as being wise, in order you not to fall into the hands of your [164] In Codex Sabbaiticus no. 408, dating from the Century IX, of from the century X, there follows: "Do not place your hand under within your bosom, because the body has many passions" (Monk Augustine).

[165] The monk Augustine gives in the notes also opinions of some other Fathers, that three cups of wine were too much (p. 88, his edition).

[166] The monk Augustine: "You won't dwell in a place where your heart fears committing a sin against God".

[167] Do not try to see how great have you become by doing some deed, or how much you have grown by doing that deed. Namely, do not cherish your own deeds.

[168] The monk Augustine gives in the note: "Do not unveil your thoughts to any man but only to those people who you have ascertained as being spiritual" (Isaiah the Syrian, The Word no. 7).

[169] The monk Augustine at note: "If you see someone of your brothers committing a sin but not a mortal sin, you won't despise him, you won't respect him less, you won't condemn him, because otherwise you will fall into the hands of your enemies" (at Anthony the Great, the canon no. 544).

[170] If you obey your Fathers, God will dwell within you, for the Fathers convey the commandments of God to you. Through your Fathers there is God speaking to you.

enemies[171]. Accustom your tongue to say: "Forgive me!" and the humbleness will come to you.

While sitting within your monastic cell, you should ceaselessly take care of these three things: handwork, meditation, and prayer[172], so that you will cogitate each day as your last day. And you won't commit sin against God[173]. Do not be greedy for food, lets your previous sins to come back within you. Do not be lazy at any effort, lest the works of your enemy will jump within you. Force yourself in your meditation and the resting from God will quickly come within you[174]. As a ruined home from outside the city becomes a stinky place, likewise the soul of a lazy beginner will become the room for any dishonorable passion. Force yourself to many prayers accompanied by crying and God might have mercy on you and He will disrobe you of your former man who committed sins. Unite yourself with this, and the toils and the poverty and the estrangement and the unpleasant suffering and the silence will give birth to your humbleness and your humbleness will bring you forgiveness of all your sins[175]. But powerful is God, our

The monk Augustine: "Do not reckon yourself as wise. Through pride your soul will get haughty and you will fall into the hands of your enemies" (Anthony the Great, the cannon no. 63).

[172] The monk Augustine: "When you sit within your monastic cell, you must take care of fulfilling these three: handwork, reading the psalms, and the prayers (Anthony the Great, the canon no. 65).

[173] The monk Augustine: "You must thing at and say within yourself: Will I remain in this world?". And by doing so you won't commit sin against God (idem, canon no. 66). "By waking ourselves up, let's reckon on each day that we won't last until evening; and again, by doing to be, let's think at the fact that we won't get up again… By thinking at that and by living so on each day, we won't either sin or having any lust" (St. Athanasius, The Life of Saint Anthony, G.P. 26, col. 872).

[174] The monk Augustine noted: "Do not run away from toils and the resting from God (the hesychia) will quickly be given to you" (Anthony the Great, canon no. 68).

We have here a paradox: The more efforts you make into the good things, the more quickly and the more surely it will come to you the resting of the quietude from God. By doing the good deeds you will liberate yourself from the worries about you, you will become indifferent into troubles. You will be satisfied with the good done by you.

[175] If the humbleness brings forgiveness of all the sins, the sin will consist of the absence of the humbleness. Through humbleness you know God and the reality of the world created by God and not by us. Humbleness means framing oneself as a dot on a huge personal and impersonal line and in dependency on the infinite life of the godlike Trinity. The pride is the irrational affirmation of the self-existence of this droplet. And if many human persons do that, they will try to bring a disorder in all the things. And this is the sin. The Monk Augustine, at note: "The first state of the virtue and the beginning or our salvation and of our surety, it is the kind Master, to strengthen us so that us to know and to do the due things, in order us to find the mercy together with all the saints who guard His commandments. Amen.

Another Word

God showed to Apostle Peter not to reckon any man as "defiled or unclean" (Acts 10: 28), for his heart was sanctified so that the whole man was sanctified. But to him who has the sin and the passions within himself, no one has been sanctified. But the sinner reckons every man as being according to the passions form within his heart. And if somebody tells him: that man id a good man, he will immediately get angry within his heart[176]. So, you must avoid criticizing somebody either with your mouth, or within your heart. This is because, the less the man takes care of himself, the more he will reckon in his heart that he is a friend of God[177]. But if the man liberated himself from passions, he will be ashamed of raising his eyes to the sky, in front of God[178]. In such as case the man will see him as being very far from God.

A man who has two servants and sent them to his field commanding them to harvest his wheat and he commanded them to reap seven hectare a day. One of them had forced himself to the best of his powers to fulfill the commandment fear of God. Through this will take place the cleaning up of ourselves and the guarding of the virtues. Not everyone who is baptized will be saved too, but only him who does the deeds of God. Obviously, neither him who is tonsured in monasticism won't be saved but only if the guards the things appropriate to the monk. So, disrobe yourself of indifference and of laziness and try not to fall into the work of the devil and remain in a certain place into patience, in order you to be saved" (In the mentioned Patriarchal Codex). The fear of God is an inward witness of the soul about the presence and the power of God.

[176] A man who lacks his kindness, he can't stand to be told about somebody else that that one is a kind person.

[177] The more one is careless in cultivating to himself a certain virtue, the more he will reckon himself as having that virtue like God has it.

[178] The passionate one, he is proud, he stupidly trusts himself, and he reckons himself alike to God. He who lack the passions, he will lack the pride too, and so he will realize his nothingness and that's why he will get ashamed of reckoning himself as able to know God. He who thinks that he can easily know God, he will lower God on his level and therefore he will actually no longer see God as God.

given him by the master, but he didn't succeed because that had exceeded his powers. The other one, because of being lazy, he had told to himself: "Who can fulfill this work in a day?" and he neglected his task, full of despise. And he slept for an hour, then he sat for an hour, and for another hour he kept his mouth open shifting himself "like a door on its henges" (Prov. 26: 14), and so he wasted the sunlight. In the evening their master came and he cherished the work of the industrious servant, and he threw the lazy one out of his house. So, let's not get scared of any tiredness and or any trouble, and let's use our power for working with the whole our heart. And I believe that God will receive us together with His saints. Sop, the man must pray in front of God, with much humbleness of his heart and of his body and he must not reckon himself as doing anything good in his work. And let him not believe the praises, neither must he get disturbed because of the heretics, and he must reconcile his heart with his enemies, and he must not allow any bitter word exit his mouth; he must not criticize them either in front of those who love them[179]. And at the end of all the things, the monk must close all the gates of his soul and he must guard his senses lest they will make him fall through them. And he must guard himself against them who bring him worldly news. Let him be satisfied with knowing his sins.

About the Mustard Grain

The mystery of the mustard grain, as the Fathers said, it asks us to live in its image. This is for it was written: "The Kingdom of Heavens is like a mustard grain, which the man took and hid in his field. It is the smallest among all seeds but when it grows, it becomes bigger than all plants and the fowls of the skied come and nest on its branches" (Mt. 13: 31-32). The grain of mustard is the man, and the birds are his virtues. The man must follow the mustard grain in everything. This is for, by saying: “It is smaller than all seeds”, he says this because one must lower himself below any man. But by that he becomes consummate due to his gentleness and due to his long-patience. And he is fiery (in growing up) for his cleanness, for not having any defilement into his body. And the things from within him are powerful for the hatred against passions. This is for he is upsetting to them who love the world. And he hast the feature of being working, if it is not hit or pressed down. About his unpleasant suffering he says: He who presses him down, he pricks him eyes for the trouble brought to his works. He must feed his dead limbs in order not to fall into stench. Let’s understand him and let’s follow him and let’s make our limbs alike him in decomposition, I order they not to become stinky and have worms. That’s why our Lord Jesue Christ made himself man in order Him to take care of us, so that us to be corrected through Him, according to Him and us to show that we are or not out of Him as seeds, and that we are out of His state, out of the humbleness of His heart, out of His gentleness and harshness. And characteristic to His mercy it is to strengthen us, according to His will. This is for His is the glory, of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost, now and forever and ever. Amen.

About Wine

1. The mystery of the wine is that of the man’s nature who wants to oppose to nescience, by guarding his work healthy, so that God to receive his work with joy. The lightly painted vessel (the barrel) it is an image to the cleanness of the healthy body having removed the ugly passion away from all its parts. This is for it is impossible to serve to any pleasure, as it is impossible too to pour the wine in a vessel that isn’t entirely painted or that has no strength in itself. Let’s examine us similarly, because we cannot be pleasant to God as long as we have within us some hatred or some enmity. This is because these ones impede the man from repenting. And in the beginning the wine foams having the image of the youth that is in motion until it advances and until it reaches a peace. But there cannot be made wine without grapes, neither can one make bread without dough. Likewise, the youth cannot advance in its honey without receiving from its fathers that dough according to God and until the youth bestows itself to God and it raises its sight towards God. That's why the youth must be left inside the house until reaching a settlement. Likewise, without quietude (hesychia) and without the unpleasant suffering and without the whole tiredness according to God, it will be impossible to the youth to come to this state. If we leave the wine with the things born within it, it will become vinegar. Likewise, the youth's nature if living together with the relatives according to the body, or among other people who are not of the same doing and will, it will lose the kind of life according to God as received from the fathers. And they bury the wine vessel into the ground in order not to be taken away by the wind and so to be lost. Likewise, it is the youth too: if it hasn't achieved its humbleness, all its toils will be in vain. If the youth taste the wine often, the wine's taste will be taken away by wind and it will be lost. This thing happens for many times to that man who shows his work. This is because all his work will be lost by the vain-glory. If they have left open the mouth of the barrel, the greedy workers of the vineyard will consume the wine. Likewise happens in the case of the much-speaking and of the frivolousness and of vanity. If they leave the wine in the way of the wind, that fact will lose the wine's image and nature. So, they hide the wine into storehouse and they place the wine under a cover. It is likewise regarding the quietude (hesychia) and the estrangement from anything. This is because it is impossible to the man to guard his toils without quietude and without non-consenting to the world's things

All of these happen to the wine until the wine will be pleasant to the worker of the vineyard, so that he will rejoice the fruits. The man must do all these things until his work will be pleasant to God. And as it is impossible to the man to dare within his heart, because of ceaselessly fearing, until the man meets God and until he sees whether his thing is consummate; and as the wine is put into the barrel, some droplets will fall on the ground if the wine has a careless master, likewise it will be lost the small thing of the man, or his fruits, it the man is careless. Let's therefore use our power, my brothers, in order to defend ourselves against those who harm us and the mercy from God and His grace will be with us, so that we will say:

"According to our weakness we have been guarding the things told to us by our conscience, but the power and the cover and the forgiveness and the guilt are from You. This is because, who am I in the hands of the cunning ones whom you have escaped me from? I have nothing to give You, because I am a sinner and I am unworthy of your gifts. You have escaped me from the hand of my enemies. You are my Lord and my God. And Yours is the glory and the mercy and the cover and the help and the mastery forever and ever. Amen."

About Those Ones Who Have Been Fighting and Who Have Become Consummate

1. These ones are the sign (the wonders) worked by Lord Jesus before climbing the cross. This is for He says: "Then Jesus answering said unto them: Go your way, and tell John what things ye have seen and heard; how that the blind sees, the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, the deaf hear, the dead are raised, to the poor the gospel is preached. And blessed is he, whosoever shall not be offended in me." (Lk. 7: 22-23). John, when he baptized our Lord Jesus, he took as image of this word that he who is baptized he must confess his deeds. So, the signs done by Lord Jesus are many. But "the blind sees" means that they who look at this world with hope, he is blind; but if he forsakes this world and if he looks at the waited for hope, he will have seen[180]. Likewise, "the lame walk" means that him who desires God and who loves the bodily cogitations of his heart he is lame; but if the forsakes those ones, and if he loves God with the whole his heart, he will walk[181]. Likewise, "the deaf hear", it means that if somebody is in scattering, he will be deaf through slavery and forgetfulness; but if somebody gather [180] Actually, him who looks at this world hoping for something, he is blind. If he doesn't admit but the reality of this world, he won't see that that means having form this world only the definitive death. And by not otherwise, he is blind. But he who hopes in a life differing from the world, he sees the reality.

[181] He who remains to this world he is lame, namely he cannot move away from this world. But he who loves God, he can walk, namely he no longer remains paralyzed within this world. He moves out of this world.

himself into knowledge, he will hear[182]. "The leppers are cleaned up" shows, for it was written in Moses's book, that "let him who is unclean not to enter the house of the Lord", namely everyone who has enmity towards his neighbor, or hatred, or envy, or speaking-against. But if they leave these, they will be cleaned. Finally, if the blind sees, if the lame walks, and if the lepper is cleaned, that man that died by these to the laziness, he will rise and he will be renewed, namely the Gospel will be preached to his senses which have been restrained by the holy virtues, for he has seen and he has walked and he has been cleaned. This is the answer given by you to him who baptized you.

2. This is the baptism, the unpleasant suffering into humble cogitation and into quietude (hesychia)[183]. This is for it what was written about John: "His clothing was made of camel hair and his waist was girdled with a leather girdle" (Mt. 3: 4). And he lived into wilderness. These are signs of the unpleasant suffering. This unpleasant suffering firstly cleans the man up and, if the man works it and if he gains it, he will force himself to come to the cross. The cross is sign of the future immortality, when in the first place will be shut up the, mouths of the Pharisee and of the Sadducees[184]. This is because the Sadducees impropriate the way of the faithlessness and of the despair, while the Pharisee impropriate the way of the cunningness and of the hypocrisy and of the vain-glory, according to the saying: "No one dare anymore to ask Jesus since then" (Mk. 11: 24). So "He sent Peter and John to prepare for Easter" (Lk. 22: 8)[185]. This is to us an image that, it the mind sees itself as unmastered by anything, the mind will prepare [182] He who is scattered with his mind he won't hear the voice of God Who shows him the way towards Him and the need for following Him. He won't hear that what is essential for his life. All the things get confounded in his hearing.

[183] Through baptism we pleasurably impropriate a life of suffering for sins and a quietude from the part of the agitation maintained within us by our sins or by our searching for pleasures which are invited to by the world seen outside God.

[184] He who accepts the unpleasant suffering for Christ, he prepares himself for receiving the cross too, and that is a crossing towards resurrection. This is for the cross, as willing receiving of the death for God, it is the last act of the non-cherishing towards the world, or detaching oneself form the world, in order to reach at God. This detachment from the world was shown by Christ when rejecting the faithlessness of the Pharisee and of the Sadducees and we too must show it in rejecting the faithless and the hypocrites.

[185] After the Lord Jesus Christ totally defeated those ones by word, He then passed to His last deed which He showed His love, as God, for people, namely the crucifixion. Or, after He showed Himself victorious over all the passions of the living man, he passed to conquer the death through death.

itself for immortality by gathering its senses (its feelings) in a unity and it will make them a body by nourishing them through the impartation with Him in an unseparated manner[186]. And again, Christ prayed saying: "If possible, let this cup pass away from Me in this hour" (Mt. 26: 28). This word becomes ours too, meaning that if our mind wants to climb the cross it will need much prayer and much tears, and to totally obey God on every moment, by asking for the help of God's kindness, in order Him to strengthen the mind and to guard it until the mind will be resurrected by the holy and undefeated renewal. This is because in the hour of the cross there is a great danger[187].

3. And these things are those which were fulfilled with our Master Lord and God Jesus Christ, for us, and He has become our image (example) in everything, as the Apostle said: "In order I to known Him and the power of His resurrection and I to be made partaker to His sufferings by resembling to Him in His death for, only, us to reach that resurrection from dead" (Phil. 3: 10-11). The gall he drank for us, it is to us towards destroying all the evil lust from within us, and in order us to shut our mouths up and for us no to allow our lusts to get out of our body and to be fulfilled. The vinegar He drank is for us to quench all our daring and all our vain-disturbance[188]. That spit which they spat upon Him it is for us in order us to quench all our desire for being pleasant to people and for us to quench all the glory of this world[189]. The crown of thorns intertwined and [186] That mind that is no longer mastered by anything form the world, that mind will prepare itself and it will gather its senses which were previously directed towards the world, and it will aim at a sole target: at preparing itself through death towards the crossing to the immortality of the future life together with Christ Whom we see as role-model in this. The senses have become a body to the mind, a body united with Christ, namely, in the same time of one body with Christ, through the impartation with Him. And Him Who has defeated the death through cross, He imprints to the body of him who has been imparted with Him, this urge towards death and towards crossing through death to the eternal union with Him.

[187] Properly-said, Jesus doesn't pray for Himself for that cup of the death to pass away, but He does that for us. He could endure that cup by Himself, but He impropriate our fear within Him, by asking for the help from His Fathers, in order Him to make us too to ask for this help on the moment of our cross. Only with the help of the Father we can defeat the cross which we have received it in order us to defeat it, after we will have defeated all the other egotistic passions of ours through our unpleasant sufferings.

[188] The gall drank by Christ is the image of the bitterness which we must drink because of being us disgusted by the bitterness brought by our passions within us, and the vinegar is the sourness of our passions making us to reject our passions form within us.

[189] The spitting which Christ was despised with, let's reckon it the spitting coming from people when we fulfill the will of God, and also as it is the true intention within the praises place on His head, it is an image which we must bear like the contempt shown us on each hour, by remaining us undisturbed while enduring the curses[190]. That reed which they were hitting His head it an image to us for, while always having on our head the cover of the humble cogitation, us to quench all the enemy's pride. And the saying: "Jesus was handed over to he whipped before being crucified", it is an image for us to despise all the human condemnations and all the trials. And the fact that "they shared His clothes among themselves and they cast lots", it has become an image to us for us too to despise all the things of this world, before us to climb the cross, according to Apostle's word: "Accept joyfully the stealing of your wealth, by knowing that you have a better wealth (existence) in heavens" (Hebr. 10: 34).

4. The man must do these things in order him to be able to climb the cross together with Him. This is because, if you do not do the things He did, according to your power as man, you won't be able to climb the cross[191]. And the saying: It was the sixth hour when He was crucified into the sourness of the heart against the sin, for our salvation, it is an image to us for us to strengthen ourselves against all our laziness and against all our lack of courage, until our sin will die within us, as it was written that "through cross He killed the sin and all the enmity within Himself" (Eph. 2: 16[192])[193]. And the saying that when it forming from people. Let's therefore receive the praise from people as also a lie, one equal, in reality, to a spit.

[190] The liar crown placed on His head in order to mock His imperial power, which they do not believed in, let's reckon it as the mockery brought to us when we serve to Christ Who is the true God. Let's show ourselves too, our quality as member of the Kingdom of Christ, with humbleness, despite that making His enemies laughing at us. In everything: in accepting the gall, in accepting the vinegar, in accepting the crown of thorns, let's reckon ourselves as united with Christ. He undeservingly receives those on our behalf, while we must receive those deservingly. But He received those for us, for in union with Him us too to have the power for receiving those. He receives the crown of thorns as an undeserved mockery, because He truly is Emperor, while we must receive that crown of thorns deservingly, because of us wanting to be emperors while we are not. But by receiving it, we will escape our pride of wanting to be emperors.

[191] In order you to reach on that cross that saves you, you must climb on that cross together with Christ. But in order you to climb on the cross together with Him, you must do or endure, previously, everything that He did and endured.

[192] In KJB we have: Eph. 2: 16: "And that he might reconcile both unto God in one body by the cross, having slain the enmity thereby:" (E. l. t.'s n.)

[193] He endures the sin impropriated by Himself in the sense that he took our guild for our sin, namely also the sourness towards the sin, as enmity against others. He killed all of these. He lives these feelings of ours without Him being their personal author, in order Him to killed came the nineth hour, He shouted out with a loud voice: "Eli, Eli, lama Sabathani" (Mk. 15: 34) it is ours, meaning that after enduring the pain for our passions until they will have been quenched, we will dare with the whole our humble-cogitation to shout out that towards God[194]. And in the fact that He yielded His ghost at sunset, it becomes an image to us that if our mind will be freed of all the hope in this world of the seen realities, we will have a sign of the fact that our sin will have died within us. And in the fact that "the veil was torn asunder" (Mt. 27: 51) we have an image for us, that if our mind is liberated the interval between our mind and God will disappear. And in the fact that "the stones crumbled and the tombs were opened" (Ibid 52) we have an image for us that, if that death comes to us, the whole burden and blindness and the things staying over our soul, they will be broken and the senses which kill and which bring fruits to the death will be healed up and they will rise undefeated. And being shrouded in a clean linen and being anointed with aromatic oil, it also is an image for us that, after that death it will come to us a holiness engulfing the man and resting the man into incorruptibility. And the fact that "they Put Him in a new tomb which has nobody been put in before" (Jn. 19: 4) and they rolled over the door a big stone, it also is an image for us that if our ming has been liberated of all of these and the mind will get Sabbathized (rested), the mind will be in another age thinking at the new realities and taking heed at the realities which there is nothing corruptible within, and the mind will think at the incorruptible realities. It is also said that: "There where the corpse is, there will gather the vultures too" (Mt. 24: 28). Finally, the saying: "He resurrected into glory, into the glory of His Father He ascended to heavens and He sat on the right hand of the glory for the highest" (Hebr. 1: 3), it is for us too, according to the Apostle's word: "So, if you have resurrected together with Christ, you will search for the things form above, there where Christ is sitting on the right hand of God, and you will cogitate at the things form heigh and not at the things from on earth. This is for you have died" (Col. 3: 1-3).

them, or to produce to Himself the feeling that He killed them, in order Him to convey that feeling to us too.

[194] We too shout out after a long suffering for our passions, humbly: "My God, my God, why have you forsaken me?". Properly-said, Christ didn't shout that out for Himself, but He did it for us. But He impropriated this shouting out of ours, in order Him to communicate it to us, with filial feeling and with understanding, and not with rebellion.

This is for powerful is His honored name Who has mercy and Who has become image to the saints in everything, in order Him to help our weakness to forsake all our sins[195] and to find mercy together with all the ones worthy of Him. Amen.

The Deed of the Crying[196]

1. Wow to me, woe to me, because of not being I yet liberated from the fire of the Gehenna! They who attracts me towards it they are still fructifying within me and they more within my heart and within all my heart's things. They who are sinking me into fire, they are moving within my body and they want to fructify. I haven't found out yet if I will go somewhere else, it hasn't been prepared to me the straight way, I haven't been liberated yet from the works of those form the skies and who will impede me (from advancing towards this target) because of the evil things from within me. I haven't seen the Savior yet as coming to save me from those. This is because their evilness is still fructifying within me. I haven't known yet a daring between me and the Judge. I haven't been declared yet as unworthy of death. I haven't parted yet with my evil deeds. He who does the evil he won't rejoice because he will be guarded into a prison. He cannot do the will of God because of being him chained with iron chains. Neither he teaches others because of being him fenced with a wooden fence. He doesn't feel the resting, because of being him in toils, neither he eats with pleasure, because of having his neck tied. Neither he cogitates within himself at doing the evil things, but he cries into the pain of his heart because of having him sinned in everything. About all the evils and the torments caused him he says: "I am worthy [195] It is admitted here a power of the name itself, the power for helping us to forsake our sins and to enjoy His mercy and the communion with Him, according to our poverty. When we utter the name of Christ with faith, Himself comes to us. His name is a bridge between Him and they who utter His name with respect. When somebody utters my name, I am attracted in the connection with him.

[196] With the crying starts the doing phase of advancing of the creation towards the union with God, though the crying isn't a properly-said deed nor a start for working the good. But the crying doesn't enjoy the evil either. This crying, united with our helplessness of forsaking the sin's state by committing the good, it is described in this Word.

of them", and he always cogitates at those which will be to him in the end. By cogitating at the punishment coming to him according to his sins, his heart still doesn't take care of not judging anyone, thought the tiredness of this torments eats his heart.

2. His meditation is a bitter sorrow. He doesn't strengthen others in order they not to get lazy. His preoccupation is to take care of what to eat. He knows the mercy of them who have mercy on him. But he doesn't taste their mercy, because of being him sad, and because he committed sin in all the things. Condemned, he doesn't answer angrily, but he endures the toils, saying: "I am worthy of them". But the laugher of his teeth (the glad carelessness) it is far from him, and he moves his head with sighs, and he thinks at the judgment chair in front of which he is going to show himself. If he hears words, he doesn't say about them as being good or bad. He doesn't' accept to hear those. If his parents are of a noble family, he will be even sadder because of thinking at the shame he will feel when they will see him in front of the judgment chair. If he knows that the judgment chair is prepared for him, he won't take heed at the many if they are good or evil. If others are ties together with him, he won't take heed at them either, nor he will cogitate together with them at what they should do[197], "because each one bears his own burden" (Gal. 6: 5). Being him attracted to hide his darkened face no man will put a word for him[198]. Because of fearing the torments, he confesses the things done by him and he reckons himself worthy to be judged for the done things.

3. So, for how long will I still get drunk without wine? For how long will I still be lazy, while having these in front of me[199]? The heart's dryness (sclerosis) had dried my eyes up and the worryingly meditation has dried up my cogitation[200]. And the [197] He who is in the state of crying for his sins he feels himself isolated, similarly to one who doesn't do the good. But he is not contrary to other, as being the last one. He doesn't make plans together with them who are sinners at their turn, on what they have to do in their situation.

[198] In the Latin text: He has his eyes glued to the ground (Monk Augustine). Him who has a darkened, uncommunicative face, no one asks him to show his face.

[199] For how long will I still only cry for my sins while still being lazy in getting rid of my sins by doing good deeds? This sorrow for sins without the attempt to get rid of them, it is like a drunkenness without wine.

[200] Cogitating at own sins without making the effort for removing their effects by doing good deeds, it is a dry (sclerotic) cogitation.

scattering of my heart has brought be the forgetfulness until the hour of the darkness[201]. The needs of my body have tied me and the lost of my freedom has made me to forsake the way (towards target). I haven't had a friend to talk to me about myself, neither had I have a gift to send it to others. Hearing about mu evil deeds wont' allow them to know me[202]. If I pray them, they won't pay me attention. This is because they see me as I haven't rested myself yet of my pains. This is because I do not pray them with a heart stretched towards them; because the worm of my sins hasn't gained a ceaseless presence so that that to move my heart[203]. The burden of my carelessness hasn't become ye heavy upon me. I haven't still known entirely the power of the fire, once I haven't fought not to fall into fire. There is a voice in my ears that the torment is waiting for me, because I haven't really cleaned up my heart. The wounds have become deep in my body, but they haven't yet become stinky so that to force me to search for a medicine to heal them. I cover the wounds caused me by arrows in order not to be seen by people, but I cannot stand the doctor to remove them. The doctor advised me to cove my wounds up but I have not a strong heart to endure their harshness. And the Doctor is kind and He doesn't ask me for payment, but my laziness doesn't allow me to go and see the Doctor. But the Doctor comes to me to heal me and he find me eating the things I need to get rid of my wounds. I he urges me to stop doing the present things, but the pleasure of the taste is deluding my heart[204]. When I eat, I repent, but my repentance

[201] Without the effort for making good deeds, the heart will get scattered in all sorts of thoughts. And this scattering will bring the forgetfulness about doing the good deeds. And the forgetfulness can advance until the total darkening of the cogitation so that the man will no longer be preoccupied with a meaning of his life and of the world. To this state reaches one who simply cries, for a certain while, for his sins, but he doesn't start doing good deeds which to be contrary to sins. And this scattering, this forgetfulness, and this darkening are accompanied by an increased dryness of his heart.

[202] A true friend speaks to me about myself, namely about my prayer and about my salvation, and not about things or about pleasures which will lose me because of getting me far from myself. But neither I have gained the gift of self-knowledge, in order I to send it to those who cohabit with me. My evil deeds do not unveil my true self for it is not me within them.

[203] Until I haven't crossed from the crying for my sins to the deeds which to diminish my sins, I won't be able to covey a good influence to others, namely my gift in this regard, even if I pray them to accept it. This is because they do not see me yet rested through my good deeds and therefore I to be able to communicate them my gift.

[204] The Doctor he is speaking here about is Jesus Christ. The wounded one, because of being mastered by his laziness, he doesn't go to see the Doctor in order the Doctor to heal his wounds caused by the unseen enemy's arrows. The doctor recommends the wounds to be isn't true[205]. He sends me food telling me: "Eat" it", and my bad habit doesn't allow me to accept it. At the end of all these things, I do not know what I should do. So, cry with me all my brothers who know me, in order to come to me that help that is above my power and to take me into its master and I to become worthy disciple of Christ Jesus. For His is the power in all the ages. Amen.

About Rejection

1. Let's take care, brothers, of ourselves: "For the time has grown shorter by now" (1 Cor. 7: 29). And somebody cannot take care of his soul until he still takes care of his body. And as one cannot look with one of his eyes at the sky and with the other of his eyes him to look at the ground, likewise the mind cannot take care simultaneously of the things of God and of the thing of the world. This is because, those things which do not help you when you exist your body, those things will be to you towards shame if you take care of them. So, you must have God in your thought[206]. This is for HE takes heed at everything you do. You must have God in your thought, for HE looks at your thought. Be ashamed of hiddenly cogitating at things which you feel ashamed of in front of the people. This is for "after its fruits will the tree be known" (Mt. 12: 33). But likewise, the mind is known out of seeing its thoughts and the rational soul knows himself out of his contemplation (seeing).

Do not reckon yourself as dispassionate (having not bandaged, namely the sins to be stopped. But the treatment is a little too harsh. When the Great Doctor comes, he sees the sinner eating with pleasure because the sinner thinks that that will get him rid of his wounds, and the Great Doctor advises the sinner not to use the things which are pleasant into this life, in order him to get rid of his wounds. But the patient is too deluded by the pleasure provided by those things.

[205] It is the same state of ambiguity of him who starts living the dissatisfaction for his sinful state, but he doesn't' have the courage of forsaking it. The food produces pleasure to him who still is in sins, but the beginning of the discontent because of sins it makes him repent for the pleasure he feels while eating, but it doesn't make him ascend above that pleasure.

[206] Monk Augustine, at note, in addition: "before eyes". In the Latin translation: "Fear God!".

passions) as long as the sin still convinces you[207]. He who has been given freedom, he won't think within himself at the things he commits contrary to nature[208]. Do not reckon yourself free as long as you still anger your Master. This is for the freedom wont' come to you until your heart still lusts for something for the world[209]. Take care of your body as a temple of God; take care of your body so that when it will resurrect to answer to God[210]. Fear God as one who is going to be held accountable, by God, for all the things done by you[211]. Cogitate within yourself[212] on each day at what passion have you defeated, before showing Him the things which you are asking for. As the field cannot bring forth fruits without water and without seed, likewise the man cannot repent without the humble-cogitation and without the tiredness of his body[213]. Through the mixing of the waves of the sky the seed will flourish, and the man flourished up by keeping the commandments of God. The faith into God and the fear of HIM, it is shown in the non-sadness of the conscience. If it has been sown, within you, the pleasure for fornication, you will sit within your monastic cell and you will [207] The sin convinces the man to commit it because of being into sin a false sweetness and within man there is an inclination to commit the sin. The man is not fully unmastered by that sin, namely fully strong. He has a certain passiveness within himself, relatedly to that sin.

[208] The passion means using the freedom contrary to nature. Because also the sin or the passion which the man is attracted towards, and which the man allows himself to be attracted to, they are contrary to nature. The man reaches into this state through Adam's sin, because the man wasn't previously kept unwillingly in connection with God. Still, the man hasn't been created to be unwillingly taken into mastery by sin for an unfree existence. But the man was able to accept to be mastered by sin. Christ was the only One Whom the sin wasn't been able to take into mastery, because He was in the same time a divine Person so that He remained always and fully free.

[209] The man cannot be free as long as he still angers God Who cannot be except fully free, because God cannot be mastered by anything, for He is above all the realities and He has everything. And the man, because of attaching himself to the world that is inferior to God, he angers God not because God is jealous on man but because the man doesn't enjoy God's limitlessness which God created the man for, or for the role of partner of His.

[210] Let's not take care of your body as of one that enslaves us and that get us far from God, but as of a body that is going to be resurrected, and therefore it exceeds the worldly needs, as a body that has started to be a temple to god and that it will fully become free at resurrection, when the body will be liberated from all the slavery to the material things of the world.

[211] Until the resurrection, we still have the passions of the pain, but if we endure those patiently, we will reach at resurrection without them.

[212] "Dialogizou": cogitate in a dialogue with yourself. All the thinking of Abba Isaiah is dialogical. My debts, my good deeds are destined to somebody else, either to man or to God. But through man I see God and God asks me for I to love the man, and so I to love God.

[213] In pride and in satisfying the body pleasures there is not repentance.

take heed at opposing you thought in order you not to be kidnapped by it. Force ourself to remember about God, that He takes heed at you and if you cogitate something within your heart, He will know everything.

2. So, you must tell to your soul" If you feel yourself ashamed of sinning in front of the sinners who are alike you, how much more must you feel ashamed in front of God Who sees the things hidden within your heart?". And out of this right-reckoning of your thought the fear of God will become steadfast and you will no longer be mastered by your passions. This is that what it was written: "They who trust the Lord, as the Mount Zion they won't budge forever for they live in Jerusalem" (Ps. 124: 1[214]). He who believes that there will be a judgment when he exits his body, he won't be able to judge his neighbor for any of his deeds, as one who must answer to God for all his own deeds[215]. This is for it was written: "We must show ourselves in front of Christ's judgment chair, in order each of us to take according to the deeds he did into body, either good or bad" (2 Cor. 5: 10). He who believes that there is a Kingdom of the saints, he will take care of guarding himself even in the smallest details and deeds, in order him to become a chosen vessel. This is for it was written: "The Kingdom of Heavens I like a fishing net thrown into the sea, that gathers all kinds of fish, and that was pulled out when got full"" (Mt. 13: 41-48). And the kind ones have been chosen for His holy Kingdom, and he has thrown the bas ones into Gehenna. He who believes that his body will rise according to nature (through the union according to nature with Christ) on the day of the resurrection, he must take care of cleaning his body up of all defilement. This is for it was written: "Who will change the body of our humbleness in order to make us alike the body of His glory, according to the work of His power" (Phil. 3: 21). On him whom the love for God is dwelling within, nothing in this world will ever be able to separated him from God. This is for it is written: "What will separate us from the love of Christ" The trouble or the tribulation of the famine or the nakedness or the danger or the sword?" (Rom. 8: 35). Powerful is God, in order us to be among them who haven't been separated by anything from the love of Christ, while they were in this world, in order all of us to find mercy through the power of our Lord Jesus Christ, for Him it is due the glory, together with the without-beginning Father and with of-life-maker Ghost, now and forever and ever. Amen.

[214] In KJB we have: Ps. 125: 1: "THEY that trust in the Lord shall be as mount Zion, which cannot be removed, but abideth for ever."; in ROB we have: Ps. 124: 1: "They who trust the Lord are like Zion Mountain; they won't budge forever as him who lives in Jerusalem." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[215] He who believes that there will be a final judgment for everybody for all their deeds (and this was said by philosopher Kant too), he won't judge anybody because of knowing that he will be judged for his judgments, which he can never be sure if they are right or not, and which cannot miss from, much pride and critics addressed to others.

About the Joy of the Soul Who Wants to Serve to God

1. First of all, I am embracing you into the fear of God and I pray you to fully satisfy Him in order that your tiredness not to be useless, but God to receive it wholly, and that to provide you with joy. This is for anyone who makes efforts and he gains out of this, he rejoices and he reckons as nothing the toils which he has been enduring, for he has learnt out of those. He who has married a woman, if she has been resting him and if she has been guarding him zealously, his heart will rejoice of her and he will trust her. He who has fought a war and he despised his death by fighting for his emperor, he has been advancing until he has been crowned. All of these are deeds belonging to this perishable life and they are committed here. But the man rejoices of them, for he has been advancing by fulfilling them. But how much joy must you cogitate that will have the soul who has started serving to God and who has consummated his work[216]? This is for at the exit from this world

[216] The monk Augustin gives in the note a fragment from Codex Sinaiticus 961, dating from Century XV, p. 318: "What one should cogitate about the joy that will come to the soul that has decided to serve God and to consummate his work? Actually, at that soul's exist from this world, his thing will go in front of him and the angels of God will rejoice together with him, for they will have seen him saved from the masteries of the darkness. This is for, at the exit of the soul from this world, the angels will accompany the soul and the powers of the darkness will come in that soul's way because of wanting to impede that soul and examining that soul whether that soul has within something characteristic to them. Not the angels will be those fighting for that soul but that soul's done deeds will defend that soul from all quarters, so that the darkness's powers won't be able to touch that soul. And when that soul's deeds will be victorious, the angels will sing in front of that soul until that soul will meet God into gladness. And then, on that very moment, the soul will forget about any tiredness and about any work his work will go in front of Him and the angels will rejoice together with him for seeing him escaped from the masteries of the world. This is for, when the soul leaves the body, the angels will accompany that soul and all the powers of the darkness will come in that soul's way, by wanting to take that soul under their mastery whether they find something of theirs within that soul. But then not the angels will fight for that soul but the very deeds done by that soul. That soul's deeds will surrender that soul and they will guard that soul so that the powers of the darkness not to touch that soul. And if that soul's deeds are victorious the angels will sing in front of those deeds until they will reach at God into gladness. On that moment the soul will forget about all the things of this world and about all this world's tiredness. Let's therefore all our power into working good during the short time from now, in order us to get our thing rid of all evils, in order us to be saved from the hands of the masters who attempt to take us with them. This is because of being they cunning and merciless.

2. So, blessed will be him whom there won't have anything of the enemies within, for that soul's joy and gladness and resting and crown will be overmeasure[217]. All the things of this world change, both they who work for life and they who were married, and all the things which I have been speaking about. My beloved brother, let's put all our power in our tears in front of God, so that His kindness will have mercy on us and so He will send us the power, until we too will defeat the masters of the darkness coming in our way, by the deeds committed by us. Let's take care with the whole our heart, let's earn to ourselves the desiring for God Who will save us from the hands of the Cunning one when the cunning one will come there in our way. Let's love to love the poor, in order that to get us rid of the love for money, when that will come in our way[218]. Let's did in this world. Let therefore, brothers, us too to fulfill our work, by working good in our short and harsh life from here, and let's shun our thing against all evil things (against all evil work), until our minds will get rid of the temptations coming in our way from the cunning ones. This is because they will examine powerfully all our things, because of being they evil and merciless. Blessed will be him whom they don't find anything of theirs in, for hi gladness and joy will be eternal.

[217] They will be above the measure that characterizes the created realities; they will be joy, resting, and glory irradiating out of the godlike joy, resting, and glory.

[218] The love for poor will come into the way of our soul at the time of the leaving from the body. The poor ones, by the mercy they elicit within us, they help us to be saved. The poor ones are allowed by the oikonomia of God to exist as well. If we do not pay attention to the living in peace with everyone, small or big, in order that to guard us against hatred when the hatred will come into our way[219]. Let's love all of our brothers by not having us any hatred within our heart towards anyone, neither to pay somebody evil for evil (Rom. 12: 17), in order that to guard us against Belial when he will come in our way. Let's love the humble cogitation in everything, by enduring the word of our neighbor also when hitting or condemning us. This is for this will guard us against pride when the pride will come in our way[220]. Let's earn the honor from our neighbor by not criticizing him in anything. This will guard us against the speaking-of-evil when that will come into our way. Let's despise our need for the world and the honoring of the world, in order us to be saved of the world's criticism when it will come in our way[221]. Let's teach our tongue how to express the mediation at God, and how to speak the righteousness and the prayer, in order that to guard us against the lie when it will come in our way[222]. Let's clean up our heart and our soul of lusts, in order us to be saved of uncleanness when it will come in our way[223]. This is because of all of these trying to master our soul when leaving our body. But the virtues will help our soul, if our soul have achieved them. Who among the wisemen won't willingly surrender his soul to death in order him to escape all of those? Let's therefore use the whole our power, and great is the power of our Lord poor, we will despise this plan of God with them, and so we will despise their sending by God in front of us, God intending to determined us to become more human and us to get rid of our dryness of our egotistic avarice, by the presence of the poor, namely us to be saved.

[219] Like our avarice will surrender our soul to the hell when leaving our body, likewise will the hatred do that too, if we haven't been living in peace with our fellow humans. These things will be unveiled at that time, but they will be unveiled by enemies and by demons who promoted them within us by using the things tempting us within world. This is the sense which we say that the demons have become masters of the world because of closing up the world's transparence for God as work of God, by their existence "in the world's skies" (t.'s n.).

[220] The pride had by us while living within world it will come in our way when our soul will leave our body. But the humble cogitation which we have been answering our pride with, it will guard us against the pride.

[221] If we have bene loving the world, at the exit of our soul that will cast an unfavorable light upon us, and that will stop us from entering the light or God.

[222] The lie practiced by us will come in our way accompanying our soul at the exit from our body.

[223] If we haven't cleaned up our heart and our body of uncleanness that too will come in our way when our soul will leave our body.

Jesus Christ to help our humbleness[224]. This is for He known (that him whom He helps) that is a man and He has given the man the repentance to the last of his breath[225]. Therefore, you will direct your thought at God so that God to guard you. Do not pay attention to your need for the world, in order you to be saved when you will forsake the things of the world and you will leave the world[226]. And the things done by you for God, you will find those as a good hope at the time of the need. You must hate the world's words, in order your heart to see God[227]. You must love praying incessantly, in order you heart to be enlightened[228]. You must not love the laziness in order you not to get sad when reaching the resurrection of the righteous. You must guard your tongue in order your heart to get enlightened. Do not love the laziness and the fear of God will inhabit you[229]. You should convey now (this fear) to the blind rich man in order you not to be despised among saints and deprived of their goods. You must have lusting for food, in order you not to be impeded by Amalec[230]. You must not hurry up in your services (in your liturgies) in order you not to be eaten by the wild beasts[231]. You must love the believers in order they too to have [224] Monk Augustine: "To help the man's weakness". But this can be understood also as the more power the man gives, the more he will become humble, and vice-versa: he who takes pride he will weaken in his power of shunning from sins.

[225] The repentance too is from the power of Christ. But the repentance is a testimony of the man both about his weakness and about the power for overcoming the sin committed because of weakness. The humbleness is a power into helplessness. The humbleness is a power from God given to the man in order the man to admit both his helplessness and his hope in God.

[226] The man won't be saved if he places his hope in the world's things; the man won't be saved by earning the world's things but by despising them. This will be seen at the exit from the body when the man leaves all the things of the world behind and if it is seen whether the man has attached himself too much to the world and too less to God, he won't be saved.

[227] You must hate those world's words which are praised or adorned more than necessary, which it is shown to us through that by the ideas about the world we can achieve everything, or that the world's pleasures are infinite. Only if we can see that the world is not the ultimate reality, we will be able to see God beyond the world.

[228] Here we can see the practice of the incessant prayer even in the Century IV, and the faith that the incessant prayer brings the light of Christ within heart, hinting at the practice of the hesychasts form Century XIV. The prayer keeps Christ in our conscience as a luminous light, or as meaning of our life.

[229] The fear of God means feeling the presence of the almighty God Who can give us the eternal happiness, but he also can leave us, in we do not do His will, also in the eternal happiness. And only our industriousness for fulfilling His will; it keeps woke within us the feeling of His presence.

[230] Let not your covetousness impede you from reaching at God.

[231] In order you not to be eaten by the demonic wild beasts.

mercy on you. You must desire for the saints in order their zeal to eat you up.

3. Remember the Kingdom of Heavens so that, by desiring it, you to be gradually attracted towards it. Think at the Gehenna in order you to hate the deed dragging you there. Waking yourself up in the morning, on each day, thing at the fact that you will be held accountable by God for any of your deeds and so you won't commit sin to HIM and so the fear of God will inhabit you. Prepare yourself for meeting God and you will do His will. Examine on yourself here, on each day, what you have tardy late in, and you won't feel fear in that hour of the death's sufferings. Let your brothers see your deeds and they won't envy you. Examine on yourself daily to see what passion have you defeated, but you won't trust yourself. This is for the mercy and the power of God actually did that for you. Do not trust yourself as being a believer to the last of your breath. Do not get haughty in your thought that you are good, because you cannot surrender yourself to your enemies[232]. Do not trust to yourself as long as you are alive, until you haven't crosses over all the masteries of the darkness[233]. Look, brother, with watchfulness, at that ghost bringing sadness to the man, because that ghost directs at you many of its traps until he will make you helpless. This is for that sadness according to God it is your joy of seeing yourself in the will of God. And that is the upset of the enemy. This is because he who tells you: "Where are you going to run, because you have not repentance?" it is the enemy. And he tells this to the man in order to determine the man to reject the restraint. But that sadness according to God it doesn't oppose the man but it tells to the man: "Do not fear, but come again" (to me). This is for by seeing that the man is helpless, it strengthens the man again, by telling him: "You have your heart sapient towards your thoughts and these ones will be eased to you"; unlike that, he who fears those will melt down under their burden. This is because he who fears their works, he shows himself as disbeliever to God. But not [232] He who trusts himself he actually trusts the devil. This is because the devil makes one take pride of his own deeds, or for he has overcomes some passion is his.

[233] If you have crossed over all the masteries of temptations of the darkness, you won't trust yourself anymore; trusting yourself is too a proof that you are slave of such a mastery of the darkness and of the fact that you haven't realized that you are not free of all sins due to yourself, namely you still are submitted to your egotism and you still aren't totally surrendered to God.

assessing oneself (not trying to find out what measure have you reached at) and having oneself unknown, it shows the man as not-pushed by his passions towards fulfilling his wills, but to fulfill God's wills[234]. But he who wants to say more things by word, he shows that the fear of God isn't within him. This is for the fear of God is guardian and helper of the soul, and it is a strengthening of the inward will for losing all its enemies.

4. He who searches for the honor of God (from God), he aims to lose all the uncleanness from within himself. This care into knowledge it will cut off his passions[235]. This is for it was written: "The worry will come over the wise man". He who has weakened, he knows the health[236]. The crowned one has been crowned for defeating emperor's enemies[237]. There are passions and there are virtues. But if we are lazy, we will be proven as traitors[238]. The heart's manhood is a help granted to the soul in order the soul to be according to God, while the laziness is a help towards evil (form the evil). The power of those who want to achieve the virtue consists of the fact that, if the fall they won't lose their courage but they will again take care of themselves to [234] That sadness that is not according to God it takes place when, at the urge of the enemy, one lives the fact of not repenting and of forsaking the restraint. But the sadness according to God won't oppose the man, but the man feels that God called him to Himself and God strengthens the man's heart against the mentioned thoughts which come from the enemy. He who trusts himself and who measures his progress, he actually isn't in a connection with God, namely he doesn't feel the sadness when tempted by enemy to get discouraged and to leave his restraint. So, it is better for the man has a sadness when such temptations come and to reckon that he doesn't know himself, that him to trustfully "measure" on himself. We have here very subtle analyzes of the paradoxical states of the soul. The heart if the conscience full of feeling, or the man who can see his thoughts as opposed to it.

[235] A little earlier it has been criticized the will of the man for knowing himself. Here it is asked for that knowledge. It is good for the man to not claim that he knows his progress into virtues, but it is equally good for the man to know his passions or his helplessness.

[236] In the need for taking care of yourself it will be shown your wisdom. In living your weakness or your sickness, you will realize the values of the strength of the health which you don't have. In these formulations it is continued the description of the paradoxical state of the man who feels a joy in that sadness that he hasn't reached his consummation yet, but he fights for reaching it.

[237] He who fights for the crowned emperor, he too will be crowned. But that doesn't mean that he crowns himself.

[238] There are virtues and passions to us because we haven't the quality of unchangeability into good. Only God has that quality. But it is normal to us to persists into virtues. By impropriating the passions, we will become traitors to God and to our nature. And that happens to us by laziness. This is for the laziness isn't characteristic to our nature.

get up[239]. The tools of the virtues are the bodily toils into knowledge; the passions are born out of laziness (carelessness). Not judging the neighbor is like a wall erected into the knowledge against them who wage us wars, and judging our neighbor tears that wall down into nescience[240]. Taking care of his tongue proves the man being a doer, while the lack of education of his tongue means that that man hasn't the virtue within himself[241]. The mercy gives birth to the overlooking, through knowledge, of others' mistakes, and it leads one to love, and the absence of the mercy shows that within that man there is no virtue[242]. The love gives birth to cleanness[243], the scattering gives birth to passions, and the dryness (the callousness) gives birth to anger. The ascesis of the soul consists of hating the scattering, and the ascesis of the body consists of poverty. The falling of the soul is shown in loving the scattering, and the correction of the soul is shown in the quietude (hesychia) united with the knowledge[244]. Sleeping [239] One reaches the live into sins and into passions by falling, by carelessness, and by laziness, namely through a weakening of the nature. One reaches to good deeds and to virtues by raising himself up, by taking care, and by an active effort. And the nature has the possibility for the las three mentioned ones even after falling. The nature has also the possibility of the evil ones but they are not characteristic to the nature as the virtues are. This means that is more characteristic to the human nature the effort towards good than the laziness and the carelessness making the human nature to fall. The passions represent a falling off the nature, while the virtues are a strengthening into the nature. That's why the passions are lived like a torment, while the virtues are lived like a joy. But neither the passions destroy the nature entirely. The nature still can rise again. The nature can raise but only through God. It is characteristic to the normal nature to maintains itself into itself and to ascend on its normal stage by the help from God.

[240] Not judging another is like a wall defending me, through the true knowledge, against them who wage me war. This is for the non-judging of others it is a true knowledge of my worthlessness. And judging others will tear down my defense wall, by my nescience. This is because judging another means not knowing myself that I am not good so that I do not have the right to judge him.

[241] He who takes care of his tongue, he shows that he forces himself to do the good deeds, while him who do not take care of his tongue, he shows that he hasn't the virtue within himself so that the virtue to master his tongue. That man who has strengthened the good within himself, he won't speak in an unbridled manner. The talkative, the chatty, he shows that he isn't strengthened into the good things and he is not preoccupied with them.

[242] The mercy determines us to overlook other's mistakes by knowing ourselves as submitted to the sins. The mercy leads us towards love. The lack of the mercy means the lack of the virtue.

[243] If I love somebody else, I will get rid of the passions which the egotism is manifested in.

[244] The soul elevated out of falling is shown in his peace united with the self-knowledge. The scattered one doesn't know on himself and he doesn't have peace.

enough is a disturbance of the body[245], and taking vigil with measure is the salvation of the heart[246]. The much sleep thickens the heart, while taking vigil with measure thins the heart[247]. But it is better for you to sleep in silence and into knowledge, than to take vigil vainly[248]. The crying without disturbance it banishes away all the evils. Non-offending the neighbor's conscience gives birth to humble-cogitation[249]. The glory from people will gradually give birth to pride. Loving to loosen yourself will banish the knowledge away, while the restraint of the belly will humble the passions[250]. Lusting for pleasant foods will easily wake the passions up. Adorning one's body is a catastrophe of the soul, while taking care of the body according to the fear of God it is good[251].

5. Cogitating at the judgment of God gives birth to the fear of it within heart, and trampling on the conscience banishes the virtues away from within heart. The fear of God banishes away the indifference (laziness), and the absence of the fear strengthens the indifference (the laciness). Guarding one's mouth wakes up the understanding of God, when that mouth keeps its silence into knowledge[252]. And the much-speaking gives birth to laziness and to stupidity. Renouncing to your own will in favor of your neighbor means that your mind

[245] Paradoxically, sleeping enough brings a disturbance, a confusion within body. Monk Augustine adds "of passions" (a disturbance caused by passions). This is because too much bodily resting gives birth to lusts and to passions.

[246] He didn't recommend the total deprivation of sleep but he recommended one to take vigil with measure. This brings salvation to the heart by peace and by self-control.

[247] The much sleeping thickens the heart, namely the feeling. The much sleeping makes the man lacking of sensitiveness, while taking vigil with measure makes the man sensitive towards passions.

[248] Sleeping into knowledge, using the sleep with measure, by preserving the sensitiveness as also the self-knowledge, it is better than taking vigil without thinking at God.

[249] When I do not offend another's conscience, I show that I do not reckon myself as a big deal. By continuously practicing this behavior, I will progress into humble cogitation.

[250] The more you want to loosen yourself, the more you will fall off the true knowledge. This is for you won't know yourself in depth and in the sensitive relationships with other. But especially the looseness concerning the eating will banish the knowledge away, while restraining the belly will weaken the passions.

[251] Abba Isaiah doesn't ask for an exaggerated weakening of the body. He only asks for the body not to be adorned and staffed with food. But he asks us to take care of the body while thinking that the body if from God towards being us too able commit good deed through body, it is a good thing.

[252] The silence of the mouth is a sign of the knowledge of God and of understanding God. Then the mouth is silent, for the man realizes that God cannot be expressed. (E. l. t.'s highlighting) sees his virtues, while favoring your will over the will of your neighbor shows the nescience[253]. The meditation accompanied by fear guards the soul against passions, and uttering the world's words darkness the soul by depriving the soul of virtues[254]. Loving the matter disturbs the mind and the soul[255], while the obedience renews the mind and the soul[256]. When your silence doesn't stop you from expressing your thoughts, you are proven to be one who searches for the glory from the world and for the world's ugly glory. And he who dares to unveil his thoughts to his Fathers, he will banish such thoughts away from him[257]. As a house not having either door or windows it can be entered by any snake wanting that, likewise is him who fulfills his ascesis but he doesn't guard it[258]. Like the rust consumes the iron, likewise the honor will consume you heart if you trust the honoring[259]. Like the weed intertwines with the vine destroys the vine's fruits, likewise the vain-glory destroys the monk's ascesis if the trusts his vain-glory. Before all the virtues there is the humble-cogitation, and before all the passions there is the belly's covetousness. The result of the virtues is the love, and the result of the passions it the self-justification (to reckon oneself as just)[260]. Like the worm eating the wood it destroys the wood, likewise the evilness (the sin)

[253] Monk Augustine, at note: "Affirming your will more than another's will it is a sign that you are mastered by nescience". Affirming your will means that you do not know your own sins and weakness.

[254] The worldly words, the words stranger to God, they will show a lacking-of-virtues soul. The absence of the virtues from within soul it will show the soul as darkened, namely lacking of knowledge. This is the soul that is mastered by passions. The soul won't be mastered by passions if the soul mediates in the fear of God.

[255] We love the matter when we love the bodily pleasures. And that disturbs the mind and the soul, because of no longer having the knowledge of the realities and of God, out of which are explained all the realities.

[256] When I live the humbleness in my mind and in my soul, I realize that there is a supreme Person-like reality.

[257] Telling your worldly thoughts to others means that you want to impose your thoughts and to impose yourself upon others, in order you to gain the glory from the world. But when you unveil your thoughts to the spiritual fathers, you express your stance as condemning your thought and you want yourself to be strengthens into condemning those thoughts of yours. Then you get rid of those thoughts of yours.

[258] To what avail will you build up a souly house through ascesis, if you let that house open by bragging with it?...

[259] The honoring, if you trust it, it will make you no longer be aware of your smallness and you will no longer fight for strengthening yourself into good.

[260] Justifying oneself means thinking that he is right in everything he does, namely including here the evil.

from within heart it will darken one's soul[261]. Throwing one's soul in front of God it gives birth to enduring the reproaches without undisturbed; and the soul's tears will be clean of all the human things. And he who cannot criticize on himself, he won't be able to endure (others') anger either[262]. He who mixes his word with the worldly words, he will disturb his mind and he will shame his mind up when his mind prays to God without having the daring (of the full trust in God). Living the world as necessary, it will make the soul to get darkened, and if one doesn't see any need for the world, it will bring the knowledge[263]. Loving the ascesis means hating the passions, while the laziness brings the passions tirelessly[264].

6. Do not attach yourself to that life that is united with others' life and your thought will get appeased within yourself. Do not trust your power and so the help from God will come to you. Do not have enmity on any man, because if you do otherwise your prayer won't be accepted. Reconcile yourself with everyone, in order you to have daring when praying. Guard your eyes and so your heart won't see the evil things. "He who looks at somebody with pleasure, he commits adultery" (Mt. 5: 28). Do not want to hear some reproach that makes you sad, in order you not to pay that back within your heart. Guard your ears in order you not to gather wars within yourself. Word your handwork, in order the poor to find bread. This is because non-working is death and falling of the soul. The ceaseless prayer abolished the slavery[265]. And the laziness that increases gradually, it is the mother of the forgetfulness[266]. He who has the death near into his waiting, he won't sin much. But he who waits for death to come after a long time, he will entangle himself in many sins. God takes care of cleaning the sins on the whole road of him who prepares himself for giving account of his deeds, but him who despises this and says: "I have time

[261] The evil equals the darkness. This is because the evil is the egotism. But him who reckons himself as everything, he will no longer see anything.
[262] He who is able to criticize on himself, he can endure other's anger too, without difficulty.
[263] The true knowledge is the knowledge of God, that explains everything. He who reckons the world as necessary, he doesn't see that everything he needs comes from God, and therefore he doesn't have a true knowledge.
[264] The ascesis defeats the passions while the laziness brings the passions back.
[265] The ceaseless prayer liberates you from all the worldly worries. In prayer you feel yourself free of worldly worries, for you surrender those worldly worries to God.
[266] The laziness makes you forget about the duties to do the good deeds. Or, the forgetfulness brings you the laziness to do the good deeds.

until reaching my end", he lives in sins. Before doing, before fulfilling something on each day, you must remember to always cogitate where you are and where you would want to reach when existing your body, and to nod be lazy within your heart not even for a way. Cogitate at the honor received by the saints and at their zeal, in order that to gradually attract you. And you just cogitate as well at the condemnations given to the sinners and you will always guard you against the evil things.

7. Accept the advice from your Fathers and you will live in peace for all the time[267]. Take heed at yourself and if your thought troubles you because of your brother being upset with you, you won't despise that thought but you will prostrate in front of your brother and ask him for forgiveness with a sad voice, until you will persuade him (to no longer be upset). Take heed at not having a dry heart towards your brother, because all of us live under the force of our enemy. If you cohabit with brothers, you won't command them anything, but you will toil together with them ibn order you not to lose your payment. If the devils trouble you regarding the food and the shelter your poverty, by tempting you to some condemnation, you won't answer them anything but you will surrender yourself to God with the whole your heart and that will rest you. Take heed at not despising the fulfillments of your services (of your liturgies), for these ones bring light within your soul[268]. If you have done good deeds, you won't brag with those. But also, if you have done many evil deeds, you won't allow your heart get exceedingly sad, but you must insist to your heart not to allow itself to be convinced by them whom you have done those evils, and so you will be guarded against their pride, if you are wise. If you are troubled by the thought of the fornication, you will ceaselessly torment your body by humbling yourself in front of God, and you won't allow your heart to believe that your sins have ben forgiven, and thus your heart will be rested[269]. If you are troubled by envy, you must recall that all of us are limbs of [267] That monk that follows the advice of his spiritual Fathers, he will live all the time rested of worries, or of questions, if he applies in practice that what he is told to do.

[268] Not the egotis6tic living brings the enlightenment within your soul, because of this one locking you up into the darkness of a meaningless living, but the good done by you to others out of your responsibility towards God.

[269] Again, a paradox, or a seemingly contradictory affirmation, namely you not to believe that your sin (thought) of fornication has been forgiven to you by God, but right that will give you resting form that thought, in order that thought to no longer tempt you.

Christ and that honoring or condemning our neighbor belong to all of us, and so you will find resting[270]. If the covetousness of your belly tempts you with the lust for pleasant foods, recall the lack of food and you will be rested. If the speaking-of-evil about you, done by your brother, it bothers you, you must avoid answering him and you will find resting. If the pride masters you, think at the fact that your pride will reduce all your efforts to nothing, and they who allow themselves to be overwhelmed by their pride are unable to repent, and so you will get rested. If the contempt coming to you from your neighbor wages war within your heart against him, you must think at the fact that God surrenders you in the hand of your enemies (in order you to fight) and you will find resting[271]. If the body's beauty attracts your heart, you must think at the body's diminishing and you will find resting. If the pleasure of women is very sweet to you, you must think at all the women who dies before and where did they go, and you will get rested.

8. The discernment gets us rid of all these temptations, by comparing and by discerning them. But it will be impossible to you to achieve the discernment, if you do not cultivate it through the followings: firstly the quietude, the quietude gives birth to ascesis, the ascesis give birth to crying, the crying gives birth to the fear or God, the fear gives birth to humbleness, the humbleness gives birth to caution, the caution gives birth to love, and the love gives birth to the non-ill and dispassionate soul. After all of these the man will know that he is not far from God[272]. So, he who wants to reach all these virtues, let him be worriless about any man and let him prepare yourself to die[273].

[270] If I think at the fact that all of us are limbs of Christ, I won't envy him whom I see as being more honored than I am, for the whole honoring brought to that limb of Christ will affect the whole Christ's body, namely it will affect me as well, as a limb of the same body. Neither will I condemn somebody else, in order I too not to suffer because of the condemnation brought him by me, because both of us are limbs of the same body.

[271] God lets you, by being you despised by your neighbor, to be submitted to the enemy's temptation, in order that to occasion you to endure that contempt without you getting upset.

[272] The discernment of the right-reckoning is, according to Abba Isaiah, superior to all of these. The "non" is placed at note by Monk Augustine. If text we have: "Her is far from God".

[273] Between love and the worriless regarding the people, there seems to be a contradiction. But that is not so, if we mean by worriless of anyone the absence of the will of being praised by people. I want to pay the man the whole my attention, but I want no attention in exchange. I will be able to reach this disposition if I think at the fact that the close death deems unimportant all the things given to me by people within the world. These two uphold my ascension through the mentioned virtues.

An on each time he prays, let him understand what is that that separated him from God and he will remove that and so he will despise the world (the whole living within the world). And the kindness of God will quickly bestow him these virtues. But you must know that that man who eats and drinks with indifference, and who love something among the things of the world, he won't reach those virtues but he only deludes himself. So, I pray everyone who want to give the repentance to God, to guard himself against drinking too much wine, because that renews all the passions and it banishes away the fear of Gor from within one's soul. So, you smut ask God - with the whole your power - for sending you the fear of Him, for by desiring God to be destroyed all the passion waging war to the poor soul and which want to separate the soul from God so that the passions to master upon the soul. That's why the enemies put the whole work to wage war to the man. So, you smut not search for resting, brother, as long as you are in this body, neither must you trust yourself despite seeing yourself at some time as non-warred by passions. This is because the enemies cunningly top your passions for a while, in order to determine the man to think at the fact that he has detached his heart from his passions and that he has reached his resting, so that they could suddenly jump upon the poor soul and to kidnap that soul like on a sparrow. They do that by thinking at the fact that if they determined the man to reckon himself stronger that any sin, they would mercilessly humiliate than man by making his forgiveness even harder that for his first sins which he prayed for to be forgiven to him.

9. Let's therefore persevere into the fear of God, and let's guard our doing by fulfilling, by keeping all the virtues which impede the evilness of our enemies. Thus, the toils and the efforts of this short time do not guard only against evilness, but themselves prepare to us the crows of our soul before existing our body[274]. Our Teacher, our Holy Lord Jesus Christ, by knowing their harsh mercilessness, and for He had mercy on the mankind, He commanded with an attentive care to the heart, saying: "Take vigil on every moment, because you do not know what hour the thief will come" (Mt. 24: 42-43). Let's take vigil lest the thief will come and find us asleep! Teaching His disciples He told them: "Take heed at not burdening your hearts with food and with drink and with the worries for this life and that hour to come unannounced upon you" (Lk. 21: 34). By knowing that the evil ones are stronger than we are, and by showing to His disciples that the power belongs to Him, he told them not to fear: "Behold, I am sending you like some sheep amid wolves" (Mt. 10: 16). But He commanded them not to take anything with them for that travel (Lk. 9: 3). This was because of not having the discipled anything belonging to the wolves, so that the wolves couldn't eat them. And when they came back healthy for they kept that commandment, he rejoiced together with them thanking to God and Father for them. And He strengthened their heart by telling them: "I saw satan like a lightening falling off the sky. Lo, I have given you power to step over snakes and scorpions and over all the power of the enemy and they won't harm you" (Lk. 10: 18-19). So, He gave His Apostles the mastery and the power for fearfully fulfilling His commandment.

[274] Monk Augustine gives in the note to Codex Sinaiticus: "Brothers, let's take care of ourselves, for the time is short… and if the soul will remain into fear, the soul will become steadfast into our Lord Christ Jesus, against the evil temptations".

10. But these words are not given only to those ones, but too all the ones who fulfilled these words. This is for by loving them He told them with consummate love: "Do not fear, little flock! For your Father deigned to give you the Kingdom. Sell your wealth and give alms and you will have unworn wallets and undiminished treasures in heavens" (Lk. 12: 32-33). And after they guarded this word too, He told them: "I am giving MY peace to you, I am leaving My peace to you" (Jn. 14: 27). After convincing them about this, He also told them: "He who loves Me, he will keep My commandments and I and the Father will come and dwell Him" (Ibid 23). And by making them not-fearing the world, He told them: "In the world you will have troubles, but dare, for I have overcome the world" (Jn. 16: 33)[275]. And strengthening them not to get discourages into troubles, He spoke them about the joy they were to have within their hearts: "You are the ones who remained with Me in My trials. And I appoint you, as My Father appointed Me, you to eat and to drink together with me at My table" (Lk. 22: 28-30). But He didn't tell those to everybody, but only to them who remained with Him in trials. But who were them who endures with Jesus in trials, if not they who remained steadfastly in the troubles contrary to nature until they defeated those? And He told them these while climbing the cross. So, he who wants to eat and to drink at His table, let him climb the cross together with Him. And the cross of Christ is the restraint from any passions, until those passions will be abolished by restraining[276].

[275] By assuring them that through their love for Him they will have Him and the Father within them, Christ gave them the courage not to fear the troubles from within world. In Him and into the Father they were to have peace, despite all the troubles coming from the world. And in that peace had by them, through the presence of the Trinity within them, they were to defeat the world.

11. That's why His beloved disciple[277] by abolishing them, he dared to say: "I crucified myself together with Christ. And I no longer live, but Christ lives within me" (Gal. 2: 20). So, within them who have abolished the passions within themselves it lives Christ. The Apostle comforting his sons, he told them: "They who belong to Christ, they have crucified their body together with their passions and with their lusts" (Gal. 5: 24). And writing to Timothy, his son, he told him: "This is for if we died together with Himm we would also resurrect together with Him. If we endure together, we will also reign together". If we deny Him, He will deny us too" (2 Tim. 2: 11-12). But who would be they who deny Him if not they who did their needs according to the body by despising the Holy Baptism? This is for through His names it has been given to us the forgiveness of our sins, and through our envy the enemy comes again through sin. Our Lord Jesus Christ by knowing that our enemy's evilness if big, He has added to us the repentance to the last breath[278]. This is because, it there wasn't repentance, nobody [276] The cross is the killing of all passions by enduring it. Christ didn't remove the pains as consequences of our passions which He bore willingly, but He endures the pains and He totally defeated the pains though death. We, with the help of His power of suffering, we still can defeat the pains together with the passions which caused the pains within us, passions which weren't within Him. But we defeat the not by dying on the cross as He did, but by souly dying towards them together with Him.

[278] God, by knowing since the beginning the evilness of the devil and the fact that through the devils' temptation we were to fall into sins, He has given to out nature also the possibility of the repentance. The devil doesn't have this possibility because his evilness has different proportions and it is not due to some foreign temptation, but it is due exclusively to his will. Within us the sin hasn't been born exclusively through our will and it neither erased any possibility of good, namely the regret for the perpetrated evil. The regret for the committed evil doesn't mean also the possibility of the total coming back, through ourselves, to the good. We are helped by God to do that. But the help from God is united with our regret for the forsaken good, or with our desire for good. The good is not forcedly imposed to us. The help for the full coming back to good, for exiting the sin, namely for salvation, it has come to us would be saved. The Apostle knew that somebody can sin after Baptism too, so he said: "Let him who steals to no longer steal" (Eph. 4: 28). Therefore, for we have the seal of the Baptism, let's force ourselves to forsake our sins in order us to find mercy on that day. This is for He has come closer and He come "sitting on the throne of His glory and all the nations will gather in front of Him" (Mt. 25: 31-32); and each of us will be shown by the light of his candle that will be in his hand. So, the candle of him who has no oil will quench and he will be thrown into darkness, but him whose candle will lighten he will enter together with Christ His Kingdom[279].

12. Lets' force ourselves, my beloved ones, to fill up our vessels with oil until we still are into body, in order our wick to illuminate, in order us to be allowed to enter the Kingdom of God. And the vessel is the repentance, and the oil form it is the working of the virtues, and the illuminating wick is the holy soul. And that soul hat has become bearer of light by his deeds, he will enter the Kingdom of Christ together with Christ, and the soul darkened by his evilness (sin) will go into darkness[280]. Therefore, fight brothers because our time has drawn closer. So, blessed is him who has this worry. This is for the fruits have got ripen and the time for harvesting has come. Blesses is him who has saved his fruit, for he will be gathered by the angels into the eternal barn[281]. But woe to them who have become tares through Christ. This is for, by uniting ourselves with Him as man, we united ourselves with Him as God.

[279] The repentance, whose possibility has been given us by God in order us to receive the help from His Son when He were to embody Himself, it is like a candle. We must fuel up the light of that candle with the oil of our good deeds. And only if we will be lightened by the light of our candle that comes to us through Christ Who is the source of light of everybody, only then we will be able to enter the Kingdom of the Light. Only if we will be lightened by knowing and by accepting Christ as the Light of the world, as meaning of our existence, by the fact that Christ shows God as a loving Father, and as having a loving Son, we will be eternally partakers to light. The repentance is the lightened candle which illuminates our being, for through it we see how we should be and we see also our connection with God and with our fellow humans.

[280] The darkness of the hell is the product of the devils who do not know God. So, the positive sense of the existence increases the darkness in which have started to live those souls who haven't wanted to know God, for God explains the existence and He gave happiness out of His love as fulness of life.

[281] The soul himself when has got ripen, when has got matured, it is the fruit that will be brought by angels into the storehouse of the living souls who are reciprocally loving and loving of the Kingdom of Heavens. And every soul who hasn't brought forth such matured fruits, he will be the tares thrown into the eternal fire. The material things piled up from this world will rotten, as in a fire, in this very world. Nobody takes the material things into because they will be inherited by the fire[282]. This is for the inheritance of this world, earned out of it, which are the silver and the gold and the houses and the clothes, they not only that determine us to sin, and we forsake them by leaving into the life to some. While the inheritance from God is immeasurable. "No eye has seen it, neither the ear heard it, not it has ascended to the man's heart" (1 Cor. 2: 9). And God has bestowed His inheritance to them who obey Him in this short time. And these ones earn it for the bread and for the water given by them to those in need; and for the love for people and for the cleanness of the body and by the fact of not perpetrating evil to their neighbor; and for the other commandments kept by them. This is for they who keep God's commandments have resting in this age and they will be blesses by people; and when they will exit this age, or this body, they will receive an eternal happiness. And they who have fulfilled their will s in sin and in unrepentance, and who lived in the scattering of the pleasure[283], by committing their evilness through delusion and by showing their frivolity through their words and by shouting out proudly their battles and by proving the fact that they are not founded on the God's judgment, and they also prove their mercilessness towards the poor, and all other sort of sins, so that they will have their faces full of shame and they will be despised by people while still in the present age, and when they will exit this world they will be accompanied into Gehenna by their condemnation and by their shame.

But powerful is God to make us worthy of thriving in the eternity. But by bestowing themselves to others, the material things receive an eternal value, for thought this bestowing the souls have shown their love for the people who needed those material things, during this short time, and the material things produced in the receivers the love for the bestowers. The people are eternal through their soul, and by resurrection they will raise their body too to a spiritualized life. The spiritual relationships among people in this world, either loving or unloving, they will be eternally lived forever, and they will bring happiness in the first case or unhappiness in the last case. In this world we can lie down the foundation of the eternal happy communion among us, or the foundation of the eternally tormenting egotism.

[283] New characterizations of the repentance and of the pleasure. The repentance being a regret for the sins of the egotism, it is also a forcing to coming back into communion with the others. And the bodily pleasures are accompanied by a scattering of the cogitation. They make the man not to focus on himself in order him to see the joy brought him by committing good deeds towards another. Therefore, the pleasure impedes the self-knowledge of the man, knowledge that is a light projected within man by grace, and also projected in the man's relationships with all existing realities, including God as well.

deeds pleasant to Him, and us to guard ourselves against all evil things, in order us to be saved on that hour of the examining that will come over all the world. This is for our Lord Jesus Christ won't be too late to come and bring the reward. Ane He will send the unbelievers into the eternal fire, and to His owns He will give the due payment and they will enter together with Him and they will rest themselves into His Kingdom forever and ever[284]. Amen.

The Word XVII

About the Thoughts of the Rejection and of the Estrangement

1. Before everything, the first fight is that that accompanies the estrangement or the leaving alone, when you forsake everything and you leave for another place, taking with you your consummate faith and the hope and a heart strengthened against your deeds. This is because, by doing that, your thoughts will surround you in many circles and they scare you with many temptations, with the harsh poverty and with other imaginings, and they make you wonder what will you do if you fall into those, because you have nobody to take care of you. The kindness of God tests you, in order to be proven your zeal and your love for Him. Finally, if you are forsaken alone within your monastic cell, thoughts of fear will be sown within you, and those thoughts will tell you that not only the estrangement saves the man but also the keeping of the commandments does that, and it will come into your mind the memory of some people who were close to you according to the body, and those thoughts will make you wonder: "Aren't these too servants of God?". There will be brought within your heat fears about the uncleanness of the air, about the heaviness of your body, and also about the weakening of your heart because of deprivations. But if there are love and hope within you, the evilness of these thoughts won't engulf you and your zeal

[284] Into the Kingdom of Christ there is the resting which Christ is asked for during the Orthodox burial service. That resting is the resting of the bodily needs, but also of the temptations from the evil, for they from there who will be definitively strengthened into their love for Christ and for one another, that is, in the same time, a great and uninterrupted joy.

towards God will be shown within you, namely the fact that you love God more than the resting of your body. And on them who endure (the troubles) the hardship of the estrangement, this hardship brings them to hope and the hope guards them against the things of their body. This is for you are not required only the estrangement, but you must prepare yourself to fight your enemies and you must know to throw away each of them at the right time, until, by reaching the resting of the dispassion, you will be liberated as one who will have defeated each of them one at his time.

2. I reckon that it is a great and honored things to defeat the vain-glory and to advance into the knowledge of God. This is because, he who fall into the ugliness of this evil passion or the vain-glory, he will get far from peace and he will dry his heart towards the saints and at the end of his evil deeds he will fall into the cunning pride and into the care for lying. But you, the believer, you smut have all your efforts hidden and you must take care with the toil of your heart and of your tongue, of your tongue not to unveil your toils and so to surrender those to your enemies[285]. This is because he who has defeated and who has rejected all his body's passions and all his body's fallings through repentance, he has prepared his soul for becoming saint, so that to hand his soul undefiled over to God, in order him to be found worthy of being made a temple of His[286]. But him who loves the glory from people it will be impossible to be dispassionate. This is for desiring for glory from people it will make the envy too to inhabit him. One like this has made his soul able to obey many temptations and his heart is torn apart by devils, so that he won't be able to ceaselessly fulfill the wills [285] All of us, as much as we can, we must keep hidden our toils for doing the good deeds, in order us not to fall into the passion of the vain-glory. We are tempted to make our achievements known especially through our tongue. But that means surrendering our achievements to our enemies so that they will be able to use them against us, or to make people praising us so that we to take pride of our achievements. And the enemies use our achievements for tuning them back to us associated with the temptation of the pride.

[286] The highest destination of the body is that of being made temple of God, in order God to work within is and God to whose Himself through it. This doesn't' mean a passiveness of the body. The body must be brought by the soul to a state of refusal of pleasures, and to a joy for the clean things committed through body by the soul, and through the soul committed by God. The hand of Christ wasn't totally passive when He touch by His hand, with mud, the blind's eyes. The wills of the soul as surrendered to God and manifested through body won't disappear. Both the soul and the body participate joyfully to the work of God committed through them.

of God. And his end will be his perdition[287]. But to him who has achieved the humble-cogitation, God will unveil his sins so that he will be able to know his sins[288]. Out of him who has the crying together with him, there will get out the seven devils and his soul will be nourished with the honor and with his virtues. One like this won't be preoccupied with condemning the people. This is for the memory of his sins is one with all his weapons guarding him against anger and hatred and it will help him to escape the evils coming upon him. But how could not be touched by some condemnation which to plainly be unveiled to him in front of God, him who still is mastered by his sins? So, when you cannot stand the word of your neighbor and you want to avenge yourself on him, painful wars will be stirred up within your heart because of the heard words and you will be saddened by the things uttered by yourself. And the slavery will overtake you into its mastery and it will make you bless them who appease themselves in an isolated manner, and it will harshen you heart towards the people close to you, as towards ones who are outside the love. But you must rather fight for achieving your long-patience, which is victorious together with the love and which heals the sadness with the reconcilement. And these ones will be bestowed to you by your prayer to God. This is for the love and the long-patience abolish the anger towards the ones who are of the same nature; and if those ones persist within you, instead of getting angry against your neighbor you will get angry against the devils, and you will reconcile yourself with your neighbor, by having the crying and the humble-cogitation within yourself. And he who can endure, for God and for the peace of his thoughts, the word of the hostile and non-understanding man, he will be called as sons of God, and he will be able to achieve the peace of his soul, or his body, and of his ghost. This is for if these three will consent together, they armed against the law of the mind will cease (the war) too, and the slavery to the body will be abolished. He whom this will happen within, he will be called as son of God and the Holy Ghost will dwell within him, because he has become His, and for he won't ever be separated from Him[289].

[287] He who fulfills only his wills, he will live a tearing apart of his heart, because of not being able to always fulfill his wills. In the end he will live a complete slavery, by ascertaining that he is totally unable to fulfill his wills, and he is mastered by his passions, of by law, or by others people. And this is a real perdition of his as own person.

[288] He who knows God he knows his sins, and vice versa. On the opposite, he who doesn't know God he doesn't know his sins. This is because whom he would commit sin against? That one doesn't know himself, neither can he start walking on the way to correction.

3. Blesses are them whose toils have been made into knowledge. This is for these ones have rested them of any burden and they have defeated the evil work of the devils, especially of those of the cowardice which impede the man to do any good things. Thet try to bring laziness sin that mind that perseveres into God, by trying to get that mind far from this way[290]. I reckon that if there is within us the love and the patience and the restraint, the devils won't be able to do anything evil within us, especially if the mind knows that the laziness is that one that destroys everything. And you will despise the laziness if you have forsaken all the seen matter[291]. Be awake towards the devils of the sadness, lest for your deep poverty and trouble you won't be able to reach the great virtues consisting in not assessing yourself and of being able to bear the cursing and of not being noticed in all the aspects of this world[292]. If you do not fight for gaining these ones, the renunciation to them it will bring crows to your soul. This is because not they who have rejected and who has become poor on the seen plan are actually poor, but they who have become poor of all evilness and who always hunger for remembering God[293]. Neither they who have seen troubles will achieve the [289] One will not be able to have peace with his fellow humans if he doesn't have the peace within himself. This is a peace between mind (ghost), feeling (soul), and body. But the inwards peace comes out of the peace with God. And the peace with God is brought within man by the Holy Ghost Who brings the whole man's inward content to a consent. This is for we can achieve our inward peace only into God.

[290] In making the efforts for defeating the evilness from within himself the man must use his mind that has the knowledge of God, for that gives power to the man to fight against his sin as narrow egotism and as founded on the non-knowing the existence and the existence's meaning.

[291] You won't be conquered by demons if you despise the material matter understood as reality in itself and as means for pleasures. Actually, the material matter doesn't' exist in itself, but only in connection to spirit from within man, and especially in dependency to God. The "seen material matter" is the immediate mater. This is for the universal material matter, unseen in the immediate closeness, it is not a temptation to the body.

[292] Let's shun ourselves form that sadness that is united with our desire for assessing ourselves in order to see how big we are, as also from that sadness brought to us through others' reproaches or by the fact of not seeing our name tied to the special events of the world. These states are brought by the devil of the sadness.

[293] It doesn't suffice to us to be poor of material things, on the seen plan, but we must also search for the poverty of praises from others, as also we must search for the poverty in evil deeds which believe about, because of our egotism, that they enrich us spiritually. Let's dispassion (the liberation from passions), but they who take care of their inward man and who cut off their wills, they will take the crown of the virtues[294]. If you take care of commandments with a hot heart, you will understand them who trouble you and why they trouble you, by urging you due to laziness to move somewhere else without a cause, so that you will remain there where you are. This is because they disturb the mind in order the mind to move among many things, but also in order the mind to get lazy. But they who know their cunningness they will remain undisturbed and thanking to God for the place given to them where they to suffer. This is for the patience and the long-patience give thanks for toils and for hardships, while the people loving the laziness and the boredom and the resting, they will search for places where they to be extolled, but the glory form the man it will weaken their senses and the slavery mandatorily brought by passions it will take them into mastery, and, consequently, they will leave their hidden restraint through scattering and through satiation[295].

4. And the saint said again: If the mind wants to climb the cross before the weakness of the senses to have come to an end, the anger of God will come upon that mind because of that mind having started something above its measure, because of not having healed firstly its senses. If your heart gets disturbed and you do not know how to gather it together, you will know that your deed attracts your mind to disturbance, willy nilly, and the disturbance is a state contrary to the nature from within Adam. If your heart hated the sin ad it forsook the things which give birth to sin and if you placed the eternal torment in front of you and if you estranged yourself from the things always be hungry for remembering God. let's always reckon ourselves as poor in this regard. This truly enriches us.

[294] It doesn't suffice to one only the liberation form passions as liberation brought by troubles, but he also needs to take care of his inward man and to renounce to his wills in order him to achieve the virtues. Here too we have a paradox, for only by renouncing to the won will we can gain the virtues, which are the result of an intense effort. But actually, the greatest effort is that of renouncing to the own will and to fulfill God's will.

[295] When the senses get weakened, they mix the evil within their perceptions. It is here about a moral weakness of theirs, and not about a physical weakness of the senses. This makes the man to be taken into slavery by his passions. He who endures and restrains himself, he will manifest more power in his senses for having his mind focused and unscattered. A scattered mind allows the weakened senses to be invaded by the things bringing a weakening to the mind. The senses which have a moral feeling upheld by a strong mind, they will clean the passions from within perceptions.

dragging your mind towards sin and if you prayer the Maker into knowledge for Him to remain with you without you upsetting Him in anything, you would be able to cry before your maker saying: "It is characteristic to Your mercy You to save me, because I cannot escape the hands of my enemies without Your help"; while saying these, you must take heed at your heart in order not to upset him who teaches you according to Christ, so that you to be in the state conform to the nature of Jesus[296]. This is because if the man did everything without achieving the humbleness and the obedience and the patience, he would still deviate to that what is contrary to nature[297]. So, the man must surrender the whole his heart to obeying God, and the man must pray truly God, saying: "Lord, I am in front of You, make me worthy of Your will, because I do not know what is useful to me. Be you the One Who fights, because I do not know they evilness"[298]. And if you work according to Christ's nature, He won't let you go strayed in something. But if you do not fulfill but a sole commandment, you haven't surrendered yourself yet to obeying Him and He woo won't take care of you. This is for as a little place cannot help him who works for cleaning that field up of tares, and that's why if he sows the seed in that field he won't be able to make sprouting the things according to the nature together with the things contrary to nature because the last ones will chock up the first ones, because of having the last ones deeper roots, likewise, if [296] When we are into sin, we are in a state contrary to nature, as inherited form Adam. When we do the will of God, we will have been elevated to the state conform to the human nature characteristic to Christ. Our nature as assumed by Christ and as partaker to the powers coming from His as godlike Person, it will be brought back into that what is characteristic to our nature. A sit is characteristic to the body to breath clean air, likewise it is characteristic to the human nature to be nourished by the godlike powers. It is characteristic to our nature to rejoice of the godlike help and to be aware of that. Here the Orthodox teaching differs from the catholic teaching, according to which the "pure nature" is that lacking the godlike power.

[297] If the nature was in its proper state by doing everything without the help from God, the nature wouldn't need humbleness or obedience or fear of God or prayer. But if that was the case, how would the nature be into that what is characteristic to the man?

[298] The man cannot do the deeds characteristic to the man because of not being him able to liberate himself from the enemy's powers without the help from God. The man doesn't' even know what is beneficial to him without being him enlightened by the light from God. That's why, the man's will in itself doesn't know what it has to do. That's why the man prays to God to unveil him His will, so that the man to know it and to fulfill it in his own interest. The man doesn't know through himself either the evilness as coming from the devil and as being evilness. The man thinks, because of his pride, that everything he wants is good, and so he submits himself to temptations.

you do not clean yourself of your bodily wills, you won't be able to guard yourself against the sin, if you do not guard yourself against the things which give birth to sin.

5. And these ones are the weakness of the soul, that is the evil mother of the sin. And this idleness will give birth to a will favorable to itself. And this one and its looseness will give birth to contempt[299]. That heart that wants to live by itself, it will give birth to the collaboration with the world, it gives birth to your urge to search for the things which do not differ from you, it gives birth to your desire for giving your hearing to him who speaks evil about others, it gives birth to your impulse for hearing words and to convey the words you heard to others, it gives birth within you to your impulse for searching for the world's things, it gives birth to your impulse for teaching him who doesn't ask you for that, it gives birth to your impulse for biting your neighbor and it gives birth to many other evils. If somebody has truly advance, of if the wants to advance, let him guard himself with knowledge against the things which give birth to sins, and let him guard himself against those sins which weaken the man through themselves. And he who fights, he will see these and the bitterness brought by these, unlike him who despise s the fight and so he prepared the eternal torment to himself. He who fears the weakness of his body he won't reach that according-to-the-nature state. But if he falls in his knees in front of God in all his toil, powerful is God for resting him[300]. Thus, like Ghedeon, if he hadn't broken the pitchers, he wouldn't have taken the candles in his hand and he wouldn't have seen their light (Jud. 7: 19), likewise if the man did not despise his body, he wouldn't see the light of the godhead[301]. Likewise, if the mind is strengthened and it is

[299] The own will isn't narrow and it doesn't want to be restraint, but it wants to do everything. This will for looseness, which is reconciled to laziness, and which doesn't want to be commanded to do anything, it despises the restraint imposed to it by the will of God, a restraint that, on the other hand, it deepens the man into the spiritual realities which are the good realities.

[300] He who fears the weakness of his body he won't fight to clean himself of the passions which bring him to the non-conform-to-nature state. But is he fall into prayer to God, and if he asks God for help, God will give him power to fulfill the oils of cleaning himself up of passions and him to feel rested even in toils.

[301] We have here a continuation of the idea that the man doesn't accomplish himself as man except into God, and by surpassing his body as existence in itself. When the man remains alone and separated from God, the man doesn't see the godhead and he doesn't willingly prepared to follow the love that quenches all the body's passions, because of being "long0patient and kind" (1 Cor. 13: 4), that heart will hate the envy and the pride and it will cogitate according to the nature and it won't allow anything contrary to nature to master it, but it will powerfully oppose the things which are contrary to nature, until it will remove those form nature. And if the true mind becomes a chief of the soul, these things won't happen when the soul remembers all the injustice perpetrated by himself contrary to nature during the whole time when he has been mixed with the natural things[302].

6. Our Master Jesus Christ, when He had mercy on His Saints, he separated the thieves on the cross. This was because He was in the middle between the two crucified thieves. And the one from the left hand get disturbed, by knowing that the thieves' ugly friendship had come to an end, because of seeing the thief form the right hand who was looking at Christ with humbleness and with fear, saying: "Remember me, Lord, when you will come into Your Kingdom" (Lk. 23: 42). So, it is clear that they were no longer friends, neither the one from the left hand will any longer be able to pull the one from the right hand back to the evil thoughts. They who haven't reached this state yet, they fall and they rise together, like those ones, until the mercy comes to them. So, it if good for each one to take care of understanding his things with fear and with humble cogitation, as the one from the right hand did. This is for the humble cogitation gives one power to endure the contempt. So, when one part with the one from the left hand, he knows exactly all his sins he did to God. This is because one won't be able to see his sins if he doesn't with them through a painful separation. They who have reached this measure, they have found the crying and the prayer and the shame in front of God, by broaden his knowledge. The man who lives by himself he gets weakened because of being taken into mastery by his passions.

[302] Iail, the wife of Ahasuerus, she kills Sisara, who was the enemy of Haver, it is the mind that, because of love for that what is characteristic to the nature, it will kill the pride installed within it, and there will remain only that what is according to nature. That is a fight fought right within himself buy the man, against the evil that has entered within himself, in order the man to remove the evil from within himself. But the man fights this fight with the help from God, like Iail killed Sisara using as tick form the holy tent. In continuation will be affirmed that the good and godlike things are according-to-nature, unlike the absence of the good and godlike power within man it will lower the man's nature to that what is contrary to it.

remembering their ugly friendship (with other) into passions[303]. But powerful is God to strengthen them who hiddenly work into the humble cogitation. And God's is the honor and the glory forever and ever. Amen.

About the Forgiveness (not-Keeping-in-Mind) of the Evil

1. The All-Saint Apostle Paul commanded to his sons, telling them: "The Lord is nearby. Do not burden yourself with any worry. But into everything, through prayer and ask, with thanksgiving, let your asks be shown to God. And the peace of God will master within your hearts" (Phil. 4: 5-7). And in the whole Gospel according to mark, our Lord tells to his disciples: "Forgive the sins of them who did wrong to you, in order your too to be forgiven by your Father (Mk. 11: 26; Mt. 6: 14). The word of the Lord is fearsome, because if you do not see your heart clean towards everyone, you won't ask God for anything because otherwise you will reproach to God, because you are sinner and being upset with your neighbor, you still tell Him Who knows the hearts: Forgive my sins". One like this doesn't pray with his mind, but with his lips, into nescience. This is because him who truly wants to pray to God with his mind, into the Holy Ghost and with a clean heart, he examines, before praying, his heart, whether or not his heart is unburdened by any worry about the man. And if he doesn't do that, he will deceive himself. This is because, in such a case, there will be nobody to listen to him, because his mind doesn't pray but it only fulfills the habits according to the canon. But he who wants to work cleanly, he will firstly examine his mind on what his mind has within. Thus, if you say: "Have mercy on me", you too should have mercy on him who prays you; and if you say: "Forgive me", you too, the unworthy one, you should forgive too. And if you say: "Do not recall my sins", you too must not refuse forgiving the sins of your neighbor. And if you say: "Do not recall the evils did by me either willingly or forcedly – thought there is not forced circumstances – you must not think anything against any man. If you haven't reached yet to do these, you will pray vainly. This is because God won't listen to you, according to the Scriptures, when you ask Him: "Forgive me". You also say into your prayer, according to the Gospel according to Matthew (6: 12): "And forgive us our sins as we too forgive them who did wrong to us", and in the Gospel according to Luke it is said: "If you forgive to the people their sins, your Father from heavens will forgive you too".

[303] One doesn't' know his sins until he parts with them. This is because, until the man still commits his sins with pleasure, he won't know God towards Whom certain deeds are sins. In pantheism there are not sins. That's why there is no humbleness, no prayer, and not crying for sins. The thief from the right hand reached all of these. The thief from the left hand he remained in darkness, in indifference, and in pride.

2. I have given you the whole my love, so that, that that you want to be done to you by God, you to do that firstly[304]. And by doping this, you will be liberated on the measure you have done this to the people[305]. This is for, if you have cleaned your heart towards all the creatures, by not keeping in your mind the evil done to you by any of them, you smut guard that what I have told you. This is for God has told you a true thing and not only words of the tongue. That's why anybody ties himself to the Gehenna and he unties him from there, because of not being anything more rigid (assertive) than the will, either in leaning towards death or in leaning towards life. Blessed are therefore, they who have been loving the eternal life for they won't collide with anything. This is for the fight is into tiredness and into the hidden sweat of the heart, towards that thought that pressures upon you, in order not to allow the arrow of that thought to hurt you. And in this case, your toil will consist of healing your heart, if you do not have your sins always in front of you. And if you want to hear what harm has been done to you by somebody, your toil will consist in opposing your good will to that, in order you not to answer that by defaming him within your heart, either by judging him or by speaking evil of him, or by surrendering him into the mouth of others and cogitating, in the aftermath: "There is no evil within me". But if there is the [304] Christ has given the whole His power to the man, out of His love, in order that everything the man wants God to do to him, the man to be the first to do that. Without this gift of the love, the man couldn't be able to do to another that what he wants God to do to him, neither after God has done that to the man and impressed the man by that deed. All the less could the man to do to somebody else that what he asks God to do to him, before asking God for doing that to him. Actually, we will see all the forgiveness granted us by God only at the final judgment. But we must show now this forgiveness to our neighbor.

[305] At the final judgment we will be forgiven to the extent we have forgiven others.

fear of Gehenna within you, and if that fear will defeat the evil which want you to avenge on your neighbor, that fear will tell you: "You the unworthy one, pray for your sins to be forgiven, because, lo, God have been suffering you until today, and God hasn't shown your sins to you, but you, by keeping your enmity upon your neighbor, you throw him into the mouth of the people; this is because by having your sins shown or unmoved, you do not allow you to be tamed by any forgiveness. So, if your heart will get softened and if you will guard yourself against evils, the mercy of God will be with you. If you evil heart will remain harsh towards your neighbor, that means that you will haven't been brought yet before God by recalling God. Forgive me. This is because I am totally poor and humiliated by my sins. But I am writing you these things by making my heart to get ashamed. This is because, if the man doesn't reach that state according to the nature of the Son of God, all the toils of the man will be in vain[306]. This is for the farmer by sowing his seeds, he expects a multiplication of those seeds. But if he works under the wind, his sadness will always master upon his heart, because of the loss of seeds and for the uselessness of this toils with the field.

3. Apostle Peter, crucified in Rome, he prayed for being crucified with his head down, for he wanted to show by that the contrary mystery of the nature that masters over everybody. This is for he showed that any baptized man must crucify his evil state which are contrary to nature, states which took Adam into their mastery and threw Adam off his glory into the evil condemnation and into the eternal shame. So, there must be manly warred with the mind and hated all the see realities contrary to each man and they must be combated with the most bitter mouth and to the very end. And these are the evils mastering all the sons of Adam: the earning, the honoring, the resting, the praising with the things you will forsake, the adornment of the body in order the body to be unharmed and beautiful, and the search for a beautiful coat. These ones feed the pleasure which the snake threw it into Eva's mouth. Out of these we know that we too are sons of Adam; out of the evil thoughts which have made us enemies to God[307]. Blessed it, therefore, he who has crucified himself and he has died and he has been buried for the knowledge of God. And by following the holy traces of Christ Who has made Himself man for us, let's make ourselves like Him through our humbleness and poverty and by abolishing all the reproaches and the dishonor by patience, so that we will no longer be troubled because of our body, neither will us be afraid of the evil's traps, but we will have peace with everyone[308]. He who wanted to abolish those evils by unforcedly embracing them, he is like Christ, son of God and brother of Christ. May God bestow all of us to be in the number of the chosen ones of His and us to earn the eternal goods into our Lord Jesus Christ Whose is the glory and the mastery forever and ever. Amen.

[306] If the man doesn't reach a sinless state, namely to a state that is according to the nature, a state identical to that of Christ's human nature, all the man's toils will be in vain.

About the Illnesses of the Soul

1. It is pleasant to me I to shout out together with Prophet Isaiah: "You will endure, and like that one who gives birth I resisted; I will uproot and I will dry up" (Isa. 42: 14). If you knew yourself, namely that the spring of the Holy Ghost flows within you, your enemy would be surely scattered and they would surely die. And our Savior says: "Neither will they say: behold it there! For the Kingdom of God is within you" (Lk. 17: 21). There are some people who say how many realities belong to the Kingdom of God, but they do not fulfill that what they say[309]; and there are others who do those, but they knew about [307] These ones are evil when making us to find bigger pleasures than the pleasures provided us by the thinking at God, or bigger than the pleasures provided us by the helping of others out of love.

[308] Going together with Christ all the way to death in suffering the reproaches, the reproaches will no longer have power to upset or to divide us and therefore we will have peace among us in the wake of that, for the reproaches won't be able to harm us any longer.

[309] Monk Augustine, at note: "There are some people talking about the things of the Kingdom but they do not work those things; and there are others who work the things of the Kingdom but not into knowledge. But those whom the word of the savior was within: "The Kingdom of God is within you", they are only a few and difficult to find, namely those whom the Holy Ghost of God has come within, so that they have been truly born out of God, according to the word of Apostle John, and, by rejecting the earthly image and by putting on the heavenly those only a little and from far and there is very little of the Kingdom of God within them, ads the Savior says. But the Holy Ghost comes within them whom it is being fulfilled within the word of John the Evangelist that says: "He gave them power for they to become of God, within them who believe into His name, that is not out of blood, neither it is from the will of the man, but they have been born out of God" (Jn. 3: 16). These ones have been freed of the trouble that engulfed Eva: "Into pains you will give birth to sons" (Gen. 3: 16). These ones have been freed of the bitter decision imposed upon Adam: "Cursed is the land into your things" (Ibid 17). These ones are they who have received the gift that was received by Mary: "The Holy Ghost will come over you and the power of the All-High will overshadow you" (Lk. 1: 35). This is because, as the trouble has been engulfing Eva and her seed up to this day, likewise the joy has been engulfing Mary and all the good Christins, and it will forever do. So, in a different manner, we are sons of Eva and we have known her curse upon us because of our evil thoughts; and, in a different manner, we must understand that we are sons of God for the good thoughts of the Holy Ghost and for the sufferings f Christ, if we truly have those within our body[310]. This is for it was written so by Apostle: "Examine yourself... don't you know that Jesus Christ dwells within you? Except if you are worthless" (2 Cor. 13: 5). This is because "I have been bearing the image of the earthly one" (1 Cor. 15: 19), so that we have known that we are her (of Eva) sons out of the thoughts of the material matter, thought dwelling within us and which are weaknesses of our soul, while they who bear "the image of the heavenly one" know that they are sons of God through the Holy Ghost Who dwells within them. That's why Isaias shouts out: "For your fear, Lord, I have taken into my womb and I have lived the labors of birth and I have given birth to the ghost of image, they have been transfigured from glory to glory and they have Christ inhabiting them through faith. Withing those ones, both they soul and their body has been united, unstained, with the Ghost through the work of the Ghost, and they remain innocent and unrebuked by their conscience, and they are crowned with the peace of God within their hearts. These ones can no longer be harmed by the enemies" (Everget., The Second Book, chapter no. 2.).

[310] If we really impropriate the sufferings of Christ, namely His pains for our sins (pains which Christ was the first to impropriate), we will get rid of our sins as Christ defeated our sins through His sufferings. But this freedom of sins come to us from Christ, by being us too born out of the Holy Ghost as Christ was. This birth takes place at Baptism. The presence of the Holy Ghost within us it instills to us too, the state and the thought of the brotherhood with Christ.

the salvation Who I have brought on earth" (Isa. 26: 17-18). And the Ecclesiastes also wrote: "As the bones take shape within the womb of a pregnant woman, likewise you do not know the things done my God" (Eccl. 11: 5). This is for, as the Holy Virgin bore the Son of God within Her body, likewise they who receive the gift of the Holy Ghost they receive also Christ within their heart. This is for, as the Apostle says: "He to give you, according to the richness of His glory, so that you to get strengthened with power through His Ghost into your inward man, in order Christ to dwell through faith within your hearts, you to be rooted and founded on love, in order you to be able to know Him together with all the saints" (Eph. 3: 16-18)[311]; and again: "We have this treasure in clay pots, in order to be seen that the overwhelming power belong to God and it is not from us" (1 Cor. 4: 7)[312].

2. If you have finally reached here, you will be transfigured into glory in the same way and the word of the Apostle will be fulfilled with you: "And may the peace of God master (to be a coronation) within your hearts" (Col. 3: 15)[313]. This means also that "the Ghost of God dwells within you" (Rom. 8; 11). And, consequently, "out of darkness shone the light without your hearts towards the shininess of the glory of God" (2 Cor. 4: 6)[314]. And if this has been done, "let your waists

[311] The true knowledge of all the dimensions of the existence, or the width, or the broadness, of the depth, and of the height of the existence, it comes to us through the Holy Ghost and through Christ Himself. Locked up within yourself, with pride, we have no real knowledge. If it hadn't been shown to us, through Christ, that God is a Father Who has from eternity a Son, namely that God is a God of the love from eternity, and out of His love God sent His Son to the people who were created out of love, in order God to make the people brothers of His Son according to the grace, and God to elevate the people, escaped from death, into an eternally happy communion with Him, where would have been known these deep and high meanings of the existence from?

[312] The eternity, the happiness, the joy, and the richness of our spiritual life come from God and not from us. The clay pot of our soul too, it is from God. But our body has been given to us in the fewness of its power, in order our weakness to be seen when we remain into ourselves.

[313] The peace doesn't grow up out of us, but it comes within our heart from God, ad a coronation. But if the peace comes as a crowning, it means that it will due also to an effort of ours. In all the good things there is an encounter, or a together-working, between God and the man. But hasn't been God Who has given the man the power to collaborate with Him? But the man can also not to use the collaboration power given to him.

[314] The Ghost makes to shine "from darkness", within our hearts, the light of the knowledge. By ourselves we are a darkness. But within us there is a thirst for light and a capacity for becoming bearers of the light of God, a light coming within us through the Holy Ghost. God is the whole light. In God there is the whole meaning of the existence for God is the limitless and eternal conscience. But we too are capable of receiving the light; we have been given a be girdled and your torches be lit. And thus, you will be like those servants waiting for their Master who turns back from a wedding" (Lk. 12: 35-36)[315]. You must do that, in order your mouth not to be shut up then, because of you not having any answer to give in the middle of the saints. And if you know whether your vessel has oil, as the wise virgins (Mt. 25: 4), you will enter the wedding room together with the bridegroom and you won't be left outside. That means that you feel that your ghost and that your souls will unite with Him without defilement and they will rise unstained on the day of the Lord Jesus Christ, and you won't be accused or rebuked by your conscience. And if you have become a child according to eth word of the Savior Who says: "Let the children come to Me, for theirs is the Kingdom of Heavens" (Lk. 18: 16; Mt. 19: 13), you will have truly become bride of His and His Holy Ghost will have inherited you, while you still are within body. And if not, you will have to expect sadness and bitter sighing, because of the shame and of the condemnation will accompany you, in front of the saints. And you smut know that like the virgin by waking herself up on every morning, she has no other care except to adorn herself for her bridegroom, and she looks for many times into the mirror to see is isn't any stain of her cheek and so she to be unpleasant to the bridegroom, likewise, the saints take much care during night and day to examine their deeds and their thoughts in order to see if they are under the yoke of God and of the Holy Ghost, or not. So, fight, brother, carefully, with the tiredness of your heart and of your body, into knowledge, in order you to earn the eternal joy, because of being rare those who are found worthy of it and who have gained the "sword of the Ghost" (Eph. 6: 17) and who have liberated their souls and their senses from "all the defilement" or the passions, as the Apostle said (2 Cor. 7: 1). "But powerful is god to help our conscience capable of receiving and of bearing - like a hand – the light come within us from God. But this light, or knowledge, it is full only for being the light of the knowledge of the glory of God Who gave us too the eternity. If we have been lightened only ads some passing existences, or even if God had been illuminated only as a passing conscious person had come out of an eternal unconscious essence, that wouldn't have been a full light, because of not being a light of the eternal glory of God. Only in the light of the eternal glory of God or of an eternal meaning of God, the man too is enlightened by an eternal glory (or by an eternal meaning). Only out of the eternity of God it comes to the man his eternity.

[315] But each man, as a servant who has lit up his light from his Master, he too must take care of holding in his hand that lit light, until his Master will turn back to the last judgment.

weakness" (Rom. 8: 26), for us to be found worthy of reaching together with all his saints. Amen.

About the Humble Cogitation

What the humbleness is? Humbleness is one to reckon himself in front of God that he is sinner and that he does nothing good. And the deed of the humbleness is the silence and not to assess yourself in any regard[316]; and it means one not to quarrel; and obedience, and keeping his look down, and having his eyes dead; and guarding himself against lying; and not allowing himself to be caught in vain-speaking; and not to resist his superior; and not to want to impose his word; and enduring defamation; and hating the resting; and forcing himself to ascesis; and upsetting nobody. Take care, therefore, brother, to fulfill these things thoroughly, in order your soul not to become dwelling place to all the passions, and you not to finish your life fruitlessly forever and ever[317]. Amen.

About Repentance

1. Abba Isaiah was asking about what the repentance is, or what does it mean running away from sin. And he answered, saying: There are two roads: one road is of the life and one road is of the death. He who walk on one of them, he won't walk on another. And he who tries to walk on both these roads he will be reckoned as walking on none of the two roads, neither on the road leading to the Kingdom nor on the road leading to the eternal punishment. If one like this one dies the judgment of [316] The humbleness consists of not one assessing himself in order to ascertain where he has reached to through some of his deeds. And that is not humbleness one to always compare his deeds to somebody else's, in order to ascertain how great he is. Humbleness means not taking your deeds in account.

[317] Let's not go fruitless to the eternal life. If that was the case, what would we look at? What would we have contributed with to the common content of the eternal life thanking to one another?

God is that one of the One Who has mercy[318]. And he who wants to enter the Kingdom he must guard the Kingdom's deeds. This is for the Kingdom is the stopping of all sins. The enemies sow their thoughts within that one, but those thoughts won't sprout out. This is for if the mind reaches to look at the godhead's sweetness, their arrows will no longer be able to pierce it. This is for then the mind will be dressed up in all the weapons of the virtues which will guard the mind and which will take care of the mind, and the virtues won't allow the mind to the disturbed, but the virtues will make the mind remaining with its sight into the knowledge of where to run away at, and into the discernment between the two ways so that the mind will love one while it will run away from the another. So, if somebody has reached to know the glory of God, that one will have known in advance the evilness of the enemy. If somebody had known the Kingdom, he will have knot the Gehenna too. If somebody has known the love, he will have known the hatred too. If somebody has known the hidden desire for the Kingdom, that one will have known the hatred towards the world. If somebody has known what the cleanness is, that one will have known also what the indecency of the hated smells is. If somebody has known the fruits of the virtues, that one will have known what the fruit of the evilness is too. He who has known that the angels rejoice of his deeds, that one will have known also that the devils rejoice of his evil deeds. This is for, if you do not eat the sweet things firstly, you won't know the bitterness of the previous things. This is because, how could one know what the love for money is, if he hasn't rejected it yet and if he doesn't remain in a deep poverty for God? How could one know the bitterness of the envy, if he hasn't gained his gentleness? How could one know the disturbance of the anger if he hasn't gained his patience in all things? Hos can one know the naughtiness of the pride, if he hasn't achieved yet the gentleness of the humble cogitation? How could one know the bad smell of the cunningness, if he hasn't yet the sweetness of the all-clean simplicity? How could one know the shame of speaking-against somebody, if he hasn't known yet his own shortcomings? How could one know the restlessness of the laziness if his senses haven't been appeased yet and if he doesn't know the light of God[319]? The chieftain of all these evils is one, that one that is called as the evilness of the enemies. And the mother of the virtues is one too, and it is called the fear of God. And he who gains the fear of God into cleanness, he will give birth to virtues, and he will cut off the branches of the evilness which I have been speaking about.

2. You must, therefore, achieve this fear, you my beloved one, and you will live the whole your time into resting. This is for the fear of God is the mother of all virtues. And until somebody hasn't crossed over these ones, he will still not be into the Kingdom of Heavens, but he must fight, step by step, until he will have abolished each of the mentioned passions[320]. And the sign that one takes care of knowing of he works or not, it is that because his left hand works its things, his sin hasn't died yet, neither the virtues of his right hand have reconciled with him[321]. This is for it was written: "If you present yourself as servants under obedience, you are servants to him whom you obey to, either to the sin towards death, or to the obedience towards righteousness" (Rom. 6: 16). And again: "Don't you know that Jesus Christ is within you? Except if you are worthless" (2 Cor. 13: 5). And James says too: "If somebody [319] Only of you have reached to know the good things you will be able to truly know their opposites, which you have been complacent into. This is because, until you haven't reached to know the good things, you won't know the ugliness of the thing which you have been living into. You have been thinking that all of those are good. Vainly other people have been telling you that those things are bad. You haven't believed them. About those things you have had your own opinion. And there have been many not daring to tell you that those have been evil. So, you have been living into darkness. Despite you seeing the evil you have been committing to other by your dees, you haven't cared. This has been because of you despising those ones. You have been reckoned that only you have had an importance. Your look widens when you see others' value as well, when you have forsaken your egotistic deeds. Only if you have reached to taste the sweetness and the broadness of the good things, the ugliness and the narrowness of the evil things which you have been living into, it will be unveiled to you. A real comparison between both ways of living cannot be done except by him who has been elevated to the good mode. That's why, him who have been elevated to the good things, he will assertively fight not to fall again into evils. But there are some who do not do this. These ones will be described in the next chapters.

[320] One cannot enter the Kingdom of Heavens except dressed up in all virtues and disrobed of all passions. It doesn't suffice only to be disrobed of passions, but it is necessary also the putting on of the virtues. This is because of not existing a neutral souly state. The virtues represent the totality of the good impropriated by man. In the Kingdom of Heavens there is the relationship among those lacking any passions and who have become good, in reciprocal love. Only thus one can live in it's the resting and the joy.

[321] Until the man who still is in this life still takes care of working, he shows that neither his sin has entirely died, not he has reconciled himself totally with the virtues.

reckons himself as being a believer, but he doesn't restrain his tongue, his faith will be vain" (Jas. 1: 26). All of these are taught to us by the Holy Ghost by showing us that we ought to part with that what is contrary to nature and we must guard ourselves against those things. This is for the repentance means tuning us away from sin. And the sin is not of only one sort, but the whole former man is called as sin[322]. That's why the Apostle says: "Don't you know that they who run in a stadium, all of them are running but only one takes the price?" (1 Cor. 9: 24). So, who will be that one if not him who doesn't sit but he valiantly fights? This is for he also said: "he who fight, he restrains himself from everything" (Ibid 25). Let's therefore take care, brothers, of ourselves. And what his care is, if not somebody to throw himself in front of the kindness of our Lord Jesus Christ. And powerful is Him over our enemies in order Him to stop their evil urges, while the man is body and blood.

3. he was asked also: what it is somebody to appease himself into his monastic cell? And he answered saying: Appeasing himself (the hesychia) into his monastic life means throwing himself in front of God and using the whole his power to resist any evil thought from the enemy. And he was also asked: And what the world is? And he answered, saying: The world is the scattering of the sin[323]. The world means working the things which are opposite to nature[324]. The world means somebody fulfilling his needs according to the body[325]. The world means reckoning oneself as living only in this age[326]. The world consists of one taking acre of his body more than of his soul. The world consists of you praising with the things you are going to leave here. I am not saying this from myself, but the Apostle John says it: "Do not love the world, neither the things

[322] Sin is the whole man fallen into that what is contrary to his nature. The repentance urges us to oppose this man who is totally fallen off the normalcy of the nature. It is a striving of the whole man to become a new man, a man of the good.

[323] The sin is the scattering, or the scattering is a sin. And the scattering caused by paying attention to the world or to the things offered us by the world, it makes us forgetting about God.

[324] The world, in a bad meaning, it means working the things which are contrary to nature. And contrary to nature it is forgetting about God and getting out of the connection with God.

[325] The world, in a bad meaning, it means understanding the world only as a simple means for satisfying the won will regarding to the body. It means the independence from God and reducing all the needs to the bodily needs.

[326] The world in a narrow meaning means one to reckon that there is no other live except in this world, without eternity.

form within world. If somebody loves the world, the love of the Father is not within him. This is because everything that is within world it is the lust of the body and the lust of the eyes and the haughtiness of this life, which are not from the Father, but they come from the world and they are a lust of the world. But he who does the will of God, he will remain forever" (1 Jn. 2: 15-17)[327]. "Sons, let no one deceive you. He who does justice, he is righteous. And he who commits the sin, he is out of the devil because the devil commits sins from the very beginning" (Ibid 3: 7-8)[328]. "This is for the friendship of the world is enmity towards God" (Jas. 4: 4)[329]. And again, the Apostle Peter making his sons strangers to the sin coming from the world, he said: "I urge you, brothers, as on some strangers and travelers here on earth, to shun yourself from the bodily lusts which wage war against the soul" (1 Pt. 2: 11-12)[330]. And our beloved Jesus, our Master, by knowing that the world is an urge to sin until the man leaves it, he encouraged His disciples, saying: "The master of this world comes and find within me anything of his" (Jn. 14: 30). And again: "The world lies under the evil one" (1 Jn. 5: 19). And He also said about His ones that He took them "out of the world" (Jn. 15: 19). What was the world He took them out of, if not the scattering of all the sins? So, he who wants to become a disciple of Jesus, let him run away from passions. This is because if one doesn't abolish his passions, he won't be able to become a dwelling place of God; neither will he see the sweetness of His godhead, if he doesn't part with his passions. This is for Himself said: "The illuminator of the body is the eye. So, if your eye is clean, the whole your body will be enlightened.

[327] The world in a narrow meaning means one not to know the Father, but him to valuate more the lust of his body and of his eyes, and the haughtiness of this live. And not knowing the Father means not knowing God as love, namely not being one able to be imparted with the love from God. It means reducing everything to some passing bodily pleasures, namely it means actually not knowing a meaning of the existence. That man who doesn't know God, he will narrow the world to the dimensions which he conceives himself in, or to his relationships as a being reduced to that what bodily and is passing in it.

[328] He who commits the sin because of him not knowing God as Creator and Upholder of all realities, that man brings the disorder of his egotism in all the things, and he stays under the influence of the devil.

[329] The world urges us to sin, when we reckon the world ads a reality standing by itself, and therefore opposed to God. So, it was the world used by the devil in order to attracts Adam and Eva to sin.

[330] We are not here in order us to eternally use the world for our body. But we are like some travelers who prepare themselves in this world for crossing into eternity. In this sense, let's have a certain estrangement from the world.

But if your eye is evil, the whole your body will be darkened" (Lk. 11: 34-35)[331]. You must notice, therefore, that if the mind has become unhealthy because of the evilness (because of the sin) it won't be able to understand the light of the godhead. This is because of the evilness (of the sin) becoming itself as a darkened wall to that mind and it desolates the soul[332]. So, it was written in the Gospel: "Nobody lights up the torch for placing it under the bushel, but in a candle stick, so that they who enter to see the light" (Lk. 8: 16). He called as bushel the injustice of this world. Therefore, as long as the mind is in a state that is contrary to nature, the torch of the godhead cannot be within that mind. But if the mind becomes a tall candlestick and the light of the godhead is placed on it, the mind will know the ones from within house, and the one whom the mind must send him out, the mind will send him out, and the one whom the mind can reconcile with, the mind will allow him stay within[333]. That's why Jesus taught which commandments of His godhead the mind was enlightened: "I am telling you who listen: love your enemies, do good to them who hate you, bless them who curse you, pray for them who trouble you and who persecute you; to him who hit you on a cheek, you turn the other cheek too and him who take away your coat do not impede him form taking your shirt too. Give to everyone who asks you for, and do not ask back your things from him who took them" (Lk. 6: 27-30)[334].

[331] When you eye is clean you see or you lighten up the whole your body. When your eye is evil, you leave the whole your body into darkness. When your mind is clean of sins, you see God and through Him you see the entire world. If the separation from God darkens you mind you will no longer understand anything.

[332] The sin or the evil is placed like a darkened wall in front of the mind so that the mind will no longer be able to see God and the broadness of all the realities into God. The sin is place like a wall separating from God out of Whom the light is spread over all realities. In such a case the soul will be emptied of a real content. The world itself will become unexplainable and crooked.

[333] It is remarkable the union between the godlike light and the human candlestick of the mind. The mind won't be able to illuminate if it doesn't have God as light within it, or if the light of the godhead doesn't come with the mind. The light of the godhead becomes the light of the mind. That mind that is locked up against God, that mind won't have a real light within it. Or, if the mind is reduced to its own light, that mind won't see except the man having that mind and the world in itself, namely it will have a narrow light that won't explain either the man or the world. If the mind is made as a candlestick of the godlike light, when united with the godlike light the mind will realize that what is characteristic to mind's light.

[334] Fulfilling these commandments bring the light of God to the man. Fulfilling them highlights to him the importance of each man, even of his enemy. It shows him God Who

4. He told these to those who ran away from the world, because they forsook all the things of this age and they prepared themselves to follow our Savior. That's why, by loving them with a consummate love, the Savior told them: "Get up, let's go away from here" (Jn. 14: 31). So, where else did he take them when He told them: "Stand up, let's walk away from here?", if not taking their mind away from the work of this age in order Him to rest them into His Kingdom? That's why, encouraging them, He said: "I am the vine, you are the offshoots. Remain into Me and I into you. And like the offshoot won't be able to bring fruit if not remaining on the vine, likewise you, if you don't remain into Me" (Ibid 15: 5-6).

He told these to them who forsook the world, because the Ghost is within them and He dwells within their hearts. This is for He says: "I won't let you orphans, but I will come to you" (Ibid 14: 18). So, if somebody loves God and he wants God to come and dwell within himself, and if he wants not to be left orphan, let him take care, in the first place, of the things commanded by Jesus, and then Jesus will inhabit him. This is for He is not far from us, neither is there something between us and Him, except our passions[335]. Therefore, brother, if you say about yourself that you have rejected the world, but you still are working the things of the world, you will not have actually rejected the world but you only deceive yourself. This is for He gave a sign to them who have rejected the world, saying: "he who loves his soul, he will lose his soul, and he who has lost his soul for me, he will save his soul" (Ibid 12: 25). But how can one lose his soul if not by cutting off his bodily wills? And again: "He who doesn't bear his cross, to follow Me, he cannot be My disciple" (Lk. 14: 27). About what cross does He tell us that we must bear it, if not about our mind always taking vigil and persevere into virtues, in order not to descend from the cross, namely from the restraint against passions, until the mind will keeps each man in existence, even though not everybody fulfills God's will. Fulfilling these commandments, it broadens the light if him who fulfills them, or the widens light of his knowledge helps him to fulfill them. That's why Jesus Christ fulfilled them as an example to us. Thus, the light is one with the good. This is for, by being the good always done to others, it will widen the horizon of the known things and their value.

[335] Christ as God, He is always near to us and He can be within us. Only our passions separate us from Him, because, if we have passions we won't love Him, but we will love something belonging to the world, or we will love on ourselves. Through passions we are locked up to Him.

have cut the passions off (abolished) and so the mind will resurrect undefeated? And to the resurrected ones He gave the following sign, saying: "Amen, amen I am telling you, if the wheat grain after falling on the ground doesn't die, it will remain alone. But if it dies, it will bring many fruits" (Jn. 12: 24)[336]. And comforting them who have died, He says: "He who serves Me, he will be honored by My Father and where I am there will be MY servant too" (Ibid 26). But how can they serve Jesus if not hating their passions and by fulfilling His commandments? And by keeping His commandments they have the courage to tell Him: "Lo, we have left everything and we have been following You. So, what will be to us?". And He showed them that what will be to them, saying: "You who have been following to Me, through the birth anew, when the Son of Man will sit of the throne of His glory, you too will sit in twelve thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel. And each one who has left brothers, or sister, or father, or mother, of wife, or fields, or house, for My name, he will take multiplied and he will inherit the eternal life" (Mt. 19: 27-30)[337].

5. Our Master and beloved Jesus, by knowing that if the man doesn't leave his worries about all the things, his mind won't be able to climb the cross, He commanded us to leave all the things whose connection and occasion descend the mind form the cross[338]. It is said so, in the Gospel, about that man who came to Him and told Him: "I will follow You, but allow me before I live to set in order the things from my house" (Lk. 9: 61). But our beloved Jesus knew that if that one left his heart would again tend to the worldly things and their occasions will [336] If the man doesn't renounce to his sinful and egotistic claims, he willer main alone, he won't gain others for Christ and for the good things. Only by renouncing to his egotism the man will be able to gain many other people for Christ.

[337] The Apostles will judge all the nations – all their members – for they too forsook the things of the world and they followed the example of Christ, and they loved the Heavenly Fathers together with Christ, and they loved on one another.

[338] The mind climbs willingly the cross when no longer cares of anything from the world. This is the cross which one willingly climbs on, of which one willingly endures it. This is the cross of the thief from the right hand, a cross that saves. But that cross that is unwillingly imposed to the man, that cross wont' save the man, because of not coming to him and because of not climbing on it and because of not enduring it willingly, and because he hasn't renounced to all the things of the world so that him to be able to value them not, and such a man will be like the thief from the left hand. Actually, these ones do not climb the cross with their mind, or their mind will descend from the cross if the cross is imposed to them. That's why they won't be saved.

take him far from that what is due, and that's why He impeded t5hatn man from leaving, saying: "No one grabbing the plow but turning towards the things from behind is appropriate for the Kingdom of Heavens" (Ibid 62).

And when that man who throw a dinner for his son and sent his servants to invite his acquaintances, but those ones couldn't come because of the love they had for the world (Lk. 14: 16-21), he said getting sad: "If somebody comes to Me but he doesn't hate his father and his mother and his wife and his children and his brothers and his sisters, and even his soul, he won't be able to be My disciple" (Ibid 26). He says these by teaching us that he who wants to enter the His Kingdom, if he doesn't prepare himself, in the first place, to hate all the things attracting his heart towards the world, he won't be able to enter that Kingdom which he will have desired it[339]. And by advising us not to trust only our faith while having no good deeds, He said: "The emperor entered to see those who were sitting at the table, he saw there a man a man not wearing a wedding coat, and the emperor ordered him to be thrown into the outer darkness" (Mt. 22: 11-14). This is for they enter due to their name as Christian, but they are thrown out because of not having the doing[340]. And the Apostle knew that one cannot love both the things of God and the things of the world, he wrote to Timothy, his son, saying: "No soldier entangles himself in the things of the world, so that he can be pleasant to the army commander. And when somebody fights, he won't be crowned if he hasn't fought according to his army's rules" (2 Tim. 2: 4). And by giving him the power for hoping that his toils won't be lost, he said that "the plowman who toils he must be the first to eat from his harvest" (Ibid 6) And he wrote to others: "He who is unmarried, he takes care of the things of the Lord, and he who [339] It is not required the hatred of the people close to us except if they remain attached to the world as means of separation from God. And neither this hatred is actually a hatred, but it is disapproval of this disposition of theirs. He who knows God, he must actually persevere to gain those people for God. The "hatred" is the remaining in souly separation for them who do not want to know God as long as they stubbornly remain so.

[340] The doing is the wedding coat, the beautiful coat of somebody. The good deeds are seen. The beautiful words are not seen; they fly away. The deeds make the man beautiful. They remain imprinted within man. Due to the fact that the deeds are committed by intervening among the world's things, but this it is shown that hating the world doesn't mean despising the world or despising the activity from within the world, but it means avoiding the influence which the world can have in providing pleasures. The world is good when within the world and through the world, one can commit good deeds.

is married, he takes care of the things of the world" (1 Cor. 7: 32-35) taking care how to be him pleasant to his woman. One like this will hear the fearsome voice telling him: "Throw him into the outer darkness, where there is the crying and the gnashing of the teeth" (Mt. 25: 30).

6. Let's put the whole our power, brothers, to put on ourselves the coat of the virtues, in order us not to be thrown outside. This is because on that day there won't be looking at the face at Him. That's why He told to his Apostles: "They who do things like these, they cannot inherit the Kingdom of God" (Gal. 5: 21). By knowing that they who have been found worthy of getting up from their deadly passions, they won't have anybody to accuse them, He showed them the fruit of the Ghost, that is: "the love, the joy, the peace, the long-patience, the kindness, the faith, the gentleness, the restraint, the patience, against which there is no law" (Ibid 22-23)[341]. But our beloved Lord Jesus Christ, by showing us that the doing will be shown on that day, He said: "Many will want to enter but they won't be able to. When the master of the house stands and he locks the door up, he will tell them who will be knocking on the door: "I don't know you" (Lk. 13: 25). We cannot say about God that He doesn't know something, may that not be[342]. But He said: "I don't know you" towards them who knock and say: "Lord, Lord, open to us" (Mt. 25: 11), but they do not know the virtues. He also talked to them in these about those who have the faith but they don't have the doing: "And him who doesn't remain into Me, he will be brought out, as the offshoot, and he will be dried and he will be gathered and he will be thrown to burn into fire" (Jn. 15: 5-6). "And He cleans those who bring good fruits in order they to bring more fruits" (Ibid 2). He also prayed: "I am not praying for the world but for them whom you have given to Me, for they are Yours" (Jn. 17: 8); and: "I have taken them out of the world" (Ibid 19). The world loves its [341] The enemy is being beaten by the good ones. The enemy could not accuse at the final judgment for the good they did. This is for the good things are pleasant to God for being the fruit of the godlike Ghost, or for being godlike. There is no law to condemn those good things, as there is a law than condemns the evil things.

[342] When God says: "I do not know you", He doesn't actually show that He no longer knows them. This is for God knows everything and everybody. He tells them: "I do not know you are belonging to Me", because you haven't imprinted My things within you, because of you not taking within you anything of My things. You are like an offshoot of the vine that doesn't bring forth fruits, and therefore you show yourself as having nothing from Me.

things, that's why He says: "Father, guard them against the evil one, for they are from the world" (Ibid 15). So, let's examine ourselves, brothers, whether we are or not from within the world, and He will guard us against the evil one[343]. This is for Himself said: "I am not praying only for these ones, but also for those who believe in Me through their words, for all of them to be one as We are one" (Ibid 20-21); and again: "There where I am, they too to be with me" (Ibid 24).

7. Notice, therefore, with how great a love He loved the people who fought in this life, and how He hated their bodily wills, once they will reign together with Him in the endless ages[344]. And the Same One said also: "Do not wonder My beloved ones, because of the world hating you. We know that we have crossed from death to life for we love our brothers" (Ibid 13-14)[345]. And also: "he who is born out of God he doesn't'

[343] Only those who are not from within the world will be guarded by the Father against the evil one, because Jesus prays only for them the Father to guard them. For them who are from the world He doesn't pray the Father to protect them, as He doesn't' pray either for the world by and large. By this He shows that the world belongs to the evil one and the people form the world belong to the evil one. By world Jesus understands here the world as cogitated by the evil one and by them who do their wills, a world subservient to the wills of the evil one: a world separated from God and used to fulfill their lusts contrary to the will of God. Actually, God has given to the man, through freedom, not only the possibility for the man to willingly impropriate the will of God, but also the possibility for impropriating the will of the evil one, so that the people can use the world not only for fulfilling the will of God within the world, but also for fulfilling the will of the evil one within the world, so that they will can be one with the will of the evil one. This is because both the evil one and the man can cogitate the word not only as a masterpiece of God and as a road to God, but also as a world existing by itself and as definitively perishing as all the objects from within the world. They who don't cogitate thus, but they see in the world a road towards God, they see themselves able to unite, through their soul, with God, as is His Son made man. These ones can reach there where Jesus, the Son of God is.

[344] They who loved Jesus they too are loves by Him, so that they won't be only members of the Kingdom of Heavens, but they will even be together-emperors with Him in that Kingdom. Everybody is free in the Kingdom of Heavens and they have at their disposal all its godlike goods, together with Him. That's why He have made Himself as man Emperor of the Kingdom of Heavens, in order Him to make all of us who united ourselves with Him, by liberation of passions and by the kindness impropriated by us, together emperors with Him in that Kingdom bestowed Him as man by the Father.

[345] In the world seen as separated from God there reigns the death. We must part ourselves with the world seen and lived like that. And the death reigns in the world see like that because of us not living the love for our fellow human within the world. The egotistic division among ourselves it spiritually weakens us, and this weakening of our ghost brings us the death of our body, because of this weakening of the ghost being due to our separation from God. That's why Saint John says further on: "He who doesn't love his brother, he will remain into death". Lo, therefore, three things related to this world: the separation from God, the definitive death, commit sin, for His seed remains within him. And he cannot commit sin for he has been born out of God" (Ibid 9)[346]. Let's put, brothers, the whole our power by having the sign of these testimonies, so that we might receive the mercy of Hid kindness and so He will send us the power for us to disrobe the burden (the yoke) of this unclean world. This is because our enemy doesn't' stop hunting us, because of him wanting to kidnap our souls. But our Lord Jesus Christ will be with us, and He will rebuke our enemy by His holy words, if we keep His words[347]. This is because how could one impede his enemy, or how could one have power over his enemy if he didn't use the words told him by God? These words resist the enemy and the crush the enemy without the man knowing that. Apostle Peter taught us about the deeds which save the man, by telling us: "Add the virtue to your faith, and to the virtue add the knowledge, and to knowledge add the restraint, and to restrain the patience, and to patience the awe, and to awe the brotherhood, and to brotherhood the love. This is for these ones are and they increase within us and they won't show you as idle neither as unclean in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. And him whom these ones are not within, he is blind and shortsighted and he has forgotten about cleaning his sins from yore" (2 Pt. 1: 5, 8-9). And John the Baptist says: "Bring forth fruits worthy of repentance, because the ax stays at the root of the tree. So, every three which doesn't bring forth fruits, it will be cut off and thrown into fire" (Lk. 3: 8-9). And again, our Master Christ says: "By its fruit is known the tree" (Mt. 12: 35). "Are grapes gathered out of thorns, or figs out of brambles?" (Mt. 7: 16). And again: "Not everyone who tells Me: Lord, Lord, will enter the

and the lack of love; in the case of the world united with God we have: the defeating of the death and the love.

[346] He who is born out of God he won't die and he won't commit sin for out of God comes to him the non-contrary and endless life. So, that one is not only created out of nothing, but he will also receive the uncreated life form God. That's why we say that he is born out of God. Of course, not as a Son of God, because of having a created existence too.

[347] The devil too speaks ceaselessly attempting to convince us to us the world contrary to God, for our bodily egotism. He crooks the rationalities of the things by presenting the things as means for satisfying our bodily and passing pleasures. Also, God the non-embodied and then embodied word uses the words and the right rationalities of the things in order us to see Him through them as Creator, in order us to love Him and to strengthen our ghost so that us to advance into the union with Him. Both the words of the devil and of Christ have within them the intention and the force to bring us to deeds; these words do not have only a theoretical purpose.

Kingdom of Heavens, but him who does the will of My Father from heavens" (Ibid 21). And James says also: "The faith without deeds is dead; the devils too believe and tremble" (Jas. 2: 17, 19-20). Also, the Apostle assured his sons that the faith needs deeds, so that he assertively commanded them: "Let the whole debauchery and uncleanness not to even be mentioned among you. This is for that is appropriate to the saints. But rather the thanksgiving. This is for you mut know that all the debauched and the unclean and the greedy who are worshippers of idols, they won't have inheritance into the Kingdom of God" (Eph. 5: 3-5). And strengthening again his word, he said: "Let nobody deceive you with vain-words. This is because of these ones the anger of God comes upon the sons of the disobedience. So, do not make yourselves their partakers. Because you were yore into darkness, but now you are luminous light into the Lord. So, walk as sons of the light. This is for the fruits of the Ghost is in any goodness and righteousness and truth" (Ibid 6: 11)[348]. And also: "Let disappear from among you the whole bitterness and anger and disturbance and shouting out, together with the whole evilness" (Eph. 4: 31). And he says: "Follow me, as to Christ too" (1 Cor. 11: 1). "How many of you have been baptized into Christ, you have been as well dresses up into Christ" (Gal. 3: 27).

8. Let's therefore examine ourselves, brothers, if we have put Christ on or not. And one knows Christ by cleanness. And Christ is and Christ dwells within the clean people. And how can one clean himself except by no longer committing evil deeds? And the kindness of God is shown in the fact that on the very moment the man turns himself away from his sins, God will receive that man joyfully and God will no longer count those sins, as it has been written in the Gospel about the younger son who wasted his part of wealth, and later on, he shepherded the pigs and he wanted to eat the pigs' food, but he later repented for the things he did and he found out that there is not satiation from sins, but the more one sins the more thirsty he will be for more sins. But when the repentance knocked on his door he didn't' postponed accepting it, btu he went back to his father in humbleness, and he left all his bodily wills. This is for he had believed that his father was merciful and that his father was to not counting his sins. And, actually, his father immediately ordered to be him given the vestment of the cleanness and the downpayment of the adoption (Lk. 13: 11-22). Our Master Jesus Chris said these in order to teach us that, if we turn ourselves towards Him, we must forsake, in the first place, the pigs' food, and then He will accept us as ones who have become clean. And He told these things to us in order our soul not to hesitate saying: "When will God hear me?". This is for God knows the time when is worthy him who asks for rejoicing the salvation and then God listens to him in a hurry. Let's therefore turn ourselves with the whole our heart, and let's not get us discouraged from praying Him. Ands He will listen to us in a hurry. This is for Himself said: "Ask for and it will be given to you, knock and it will be open to you" (Mt. 7: 7). But if we ask for, or if we search for, or if we knock on, let's learn, brothers, that what we are searching for of that what we are asking Him for. This is for he who came to his friend in the middle of the night telling him: "Lend me three breads for a friend of mine arrived from the road" (Lk. 11: 5).

[348] They who are united with Christ they are sons of the light. They have discovered within Him a purpose of their lives. They know that the man is destined to eternity. This is for the human has become proper to the Son of God. But by that He showed to the people the kindness as road to happiness and as foundation of the happiness, given the joy brought by communion. Tand the power of the communion is bestowed to us by Christ through the Holy Ghost. That's why, by deeds as means for achieving the communion, we reach into the happiness of the Kingdom of Heavens.

9. Let's therefore, brothers, throw away our laziness from us and let's prepare ourselves towards this daring[349]. And if God sees our righteousness, he will fulfill our requests. This is for God is merciful and He wants the man to change himself. This is for He said: "Verily, verily I am telling you, that there is joy in heavens for any sinner who repents" (Lk. 15: 17). So, brother, for we have such a mercy from God, and for we have the richness of His mercies, let's toil with the whole our heart until we still are within body – and the time of our life is short –

[349] Le3t's believe with the whole our assertiveness that God takes in account our repentance. Let's have no doubt and let's not postpone manifesting our repentance in front of God. This is for God will immediately take our repentance in account. Postponing our trust that God will take our repentance into account, it will weaken our repentance. The more we trust God for taking our repentance in account, the stronger our repentance will be. And the more we postpone our repentance, the weaker our repentance will become and the less will God take it into account. This is for God's mercy on the pained ones is an important feature of His. And there where a great repentance is, there will be also a great pain. Thus, the repentance is an assertive turning of the man away from his previous life in evilness, and towards a life into good things, a turning out of pain and with pain. As such, the repentance is a true affective revolution of the man.

and let's fight in order us to inherit the eternal and untold joy. This is for, if we turn back to our previous sins, we will be like that young man who asked Lord Jesus Christ how could he saved himself, and Christ answered him: "Sell everything you have and give them to the poor and take your cross and follow Me" (Lk. 18: 22), and He has shown us by that that the salvation consists of cutting off the own will. But the young man got sad because of hearing that and he left (Ibid 23). This is for he found out that there is not such a big toil sharing the wealth to the poor as it is the bearing of the cross. This is because sharing his wealth to the poor is only one of the virtues, and the man does that in order to bear this cross, but the cross means the abolishment of all the sins, and it gives birth to love. And without love there is no cross[350]. So, because the Apostle know that there are reckoned as virtues also deeds which there is neither love nor consummation within, he said: "If I spoke in the tongues of the people and of the angels, but I had no love, I would make myself a sounding brass and resounding cymbal; and if I gave away all my wealth and if I gave my body to be burnt, but I have no love, I wouldn't benefit anything of that. The love is long-patient, it doesn't envy, it doesn't brag, it doesn't get haughty, it doesn't behave evilly, it doesn't try to do its wills, it doesn't get lit with anger, it doesn't think the evil" (1 Cor. 13: 1-5). Therefore, he who wants to walk the road of the love, he won't not be disturbed by any man either good or evil, and his longing for God will remain within his heart. This longing will give birth within man that anger according to nature and that anger will resist everything sown by the enemy[351]. And that's why the law of God finds respect within him, and through his fear of God is shown the love within him. And then such a man says, as the Apostle said, daringly: "I am ready not only for being I bonded, but also for dying for the name or our Lord Jesus Christ" (Acts 21: 13). Blessed is that soul who has reached such a love. This love becomes dispassionate[352].

[350] The cross means the renunciation to sins. The cross accepted willingly is one with renouncing to all egotism because the egotism is the root of the sins. The cross isn't only a renunciation but it is also action: it is love for somebody, for God or for some human being, or for all. By cross I renounce to myself in order other people to live the superior life into God.

[351] The author cherishes "that anger according to nature" that opposes all the evil. An anger that doesn't tolerate the evil. An anger that is not indifferent towards evil. But that anger fights the evil and it fight not to commit the evil, and it fight to urge others not to commit the evil. This anger against the evil is being nourished out of the fear of God and out of the love born by that fear. So, there takes place a union between the anger against the evil and the love for God and for people. This is for the love is not indifferent towards evil.

10. Let's get out from the world, brothers, let's know the things which we are in[353]. This is for merciful is our Lord Jesus Christ in order Him to rest each one according to his deeds, the small one too according to his smallness as well, as He said: "many dwelling places are at My Father" (Jn. 14: 2). This is for though the Kingdom is one, each one will be at his place and at his thing in the Kingdom. Let's fight therefore, brothers, against our laziness and let's break from on us the veil of the darkness that is the forgetfulness. And so, we will see the light of the repentance[354]. Let's gain Martha and Mry within us, who are the suffering of the evil[355], and the crying, and who cry in front of our Savior in order Him to resurrect Lazarus, namely our mind tied with the many trips of our wills. And thus, He will have mercy on us and He will resurrect Lazarus, for it is characteristic to them to tie Lazarus up. But when Lazarus has been liberated, the zeal of Martha and or Mary will be shown. Finally, Lazarus was liberated from worries and sitting together with Jesus, while Martha was zealously fulfilling her duties and Mary brought her vessel with Chrism and she was anointing Lord's feet. Let's therefore fight, brothers, according to our power, and God will help us according to His mercy. And even though we haven't guarded our heart as our fathers did, let's put the whole our assertiveness for guarding our bodies sinless, as God asks us to, and let's believe that at the time of the hunger that will have engulfed us, He will have mercy on us as He will have had on his saints as well. "This is because thought the shininess of the sun is different from the shininess of the moon, and despite each star differs from another star in shininess" (1 Cor. 15: 41), but they are in a unique holy [352] The cross, or the willing death for God and for people, it is united with the love for them. In this one can see that the love if the highest among virtues, or the love is the totality of the virtues and it is the exceeding of any passion and of any egotism.

[353] He who is able to receive the cross, or the death, he shows that he has existed this world which we are tied to by our egotistic passions of pleasures, and he has reached to the full love for God and for people. Only this exiting from the world gives us the light of the full knowledge that the world isn't the last reality, the true knowledge of the existence's purpose.

[354] The forgetfulness is a veil of the darkness, it is a means of nescience.

[355] The repentance is a light for showing who we actually are: it shows to us our sins which narrow us into egotism, and which keep us into darkness regarding the infinite glory of God and regarding our duties towards people.

shininess. And the glory and the honor are His from now and for ever and ever[356]. Amen.

The Word no. 22

About the Doing of the New Man

My beloved brothers, the Jew is known about three things: the circumcision, the Passover, and the Saturday. This is for it is written into Genesis (17: 12-14): "And the child will be circumcised on the eighth day. He who was born to the house and he who has been bought with silver and uncircumcised, he will be lost from My people for he had broken My tie". Abraham was the first circumcised man. And this sign means that his left hand has died. And this is an image given to the old people about the new man whom our Lord Jesus Christ showed Himself to, into His holy body, namely that that what is old and it cover the man to fall off and to be lost. About this the Apostle said: "Into Him you have been circumcised with a circumcision not made by human hand, through the disrobing of the body into the circumcision of Christ, being you buried together with Him into baptism, into Whom you have also resurrected through faith into the work of God" (Col. 2: 11-12). And also: "You must disrobe your previous living, and your former man, who is corrupted through deceiving lusts, and you to renew the ghost of your mind and you to put on the new man, that man built in the image of God into righteousness and into piousness and into truth" (Eph. 4: 22-24). And again: "in order you to die to the sin and you to live into righteousness" (1 Pt. 2: 24).

These things about the circumcision. And he who doesn't have these things, he is not circumcised, neither is him a Jew, because he has transgressed the Testament commanded by our Lord Jesus by His holy blood[357].

[356] The same light of Christ will shine out of all the saints, even though some od them will shine stronger than others. But each of them will reckon that he will have had the shininess as much as he will have been able to, namely to the greatest of his capacity. And the humbleness will make all of them not to reckon himself more illuminated than others.

[357] Christ shed His blood for us also in order Him to show us that we must forsake the blood of our former man and that we must to receive His blood as the blood of our new man. This was shown as image in the shedding of blood at Jews through circumcision.

2. In speaking about the holy Passover there are said great things too. The first one was the circumcision, the second one was the Passover, and the third one was the Saturday. This is for God tells to Moses: "This is the law regarding the Passover. No one belonging to another nation will ate it. No one bought with silver will eat it. But you will circumcise anyone bought will silver and they will eat the Passover. Eat it in a house, having your waists girdled, and wearing footwear in your feet, and holding your staffs in your hands" (Exod. 12: 43-48 and 11). One could not eat the Passover except in azyme and with roasted lamb and with bitter herbs (Ibid 9). He didn't' say you to be girdled over your waists, in order somebody not to say that He spoke about girdle, but He said "having your waists girdled" by speaking about the cleanness of any passion which is under the mastery of having sex into uncleanness. And He speaks about footwear meaning the preparedness and the running away from any pricking that harms the conscience and that impedes the mind from seeing its cleanness. And the staff is the hope of the manhood in waling the road fearlessly, in order to enter the Promised Land. And these ones are they who reach the resting of the Saturday. The blood is the sign of our Lord Jesus Christ when He came as presence, in order to take the sons of Israel with Himself into his inheritance. They show themselves as prepared for the road also by being anointed with his sign within their souls, in a shown mode. And the received bunch of hyssops is the suffering of the evil. This is for He says: "Eat these with bitter herbs". So, you must examine yourself, brother, whether you are circumcised, and whether you have anointed the threshold of your door with the blood of the innocent Lamb, and whether you have emptied yourself of all earthly thought, and whether you have prepared yourself for hitting the road or for ascending into the Promised Land[358].

3. One can also say great things about the Sunday. The Sunday too belongs to them who had been found worthy of the true circumcision and who have eaten the holy Easter and who has been liberated from Egyptians, and who have been rested (Sabbathized) from their bitter slavery. This is for God tells to Moses: "You will work for six days, but the seventh day if the Saturday of the Lord" (Exod. 20: 9-10). "The soul of him who work on Saturday will be lost" (Ibid 31: 14). And our Lord Jesus rested Himself on the true Saturday and He taught His disciples how they must rest (Sabbathize) themselves, until the climbed (on the cross) on Friday and He did the whole preparation before climbing the cross, namely He endured all the insults for us, by allowing Himself to be nailed on the cross, and by not detaching Himself from the cross, until He weas still alive, and shouting out: "I am thirsty" and, when they brought Him a "sponge soaked in vinegar" and He tasted it, He said: "All have been done, and by bowing down His head, He yielded His ghost" (Jn. 19: 28-30). Then they descended Him, and He didn't move and He Sabbathized Himself truly (keeping the true Saturday). So, our Lord Jesus rested on the seventh day and He blessed this day, for He truly rested Himself of all the works which the human passions have been abolished through[359], as the Apostle said "That he who has entered his resting, he rested of all his things, as also God of His things" (Hebr. 4: 10). This is the true Saturday. So, that one who do not keep this Saturday (does not Sabbathizes it) he is not truly a Jew[360]. That's why Jeremiah wept for the people, and he told them: "Do not carry burdens on Saturday neither exist the gates of Jerusalem carrying burdens on Saturday" (Jer. 17: 22).

[358] Only by being circumcised into ghost, or baptized, one can eat the innocent Lamb or one can be imparted, by preparing himself for ascending together with Christ towards the Kingdom of Heavens where he will have the eternal resting (Sunday). This is because only thus he will be escaped form the eternal death by the Lamb's blood. He must have the girdle that protects his waist against the inferior bodily pleasure and he must hold his staff in his hand during his travel towards heavens and he must wear in his feet the footwear protecting his mind against the pricks of the sins.

4. Woe to me, the wicked ones, because I have transgressed these commandments and I have carried heavy burdens on Saturday. And if I dies together with Him and I have been buried and I have Sabbathized (I have kept the resting of the Saturday), what are these heavy burdens which I carry, which I fulfill? Heavy burdens are: the anger, the envy, the [359] By receiving the death, He abolished all our reproachable passions and His unreproachable passions taken from us, and so He has given us too, the possibility of cross from the first ones to the second ones and also the possibility for us to get rid even of the second ones. Abba Isaiah insists much upon this original explanation of the death on the cross of Christ. One could reckon that in this explanation there can be identified an Origenistic explanation that affirms a will of the soul to detach himself from the world and to turn back to God. This Origenistic influence is resisted by simultaneously explaining the cross as out of love from people. When used with love for people and ass occasion for loving God, it no longer has a negative meaning. A s he also says further on, through cross, or through the death received willingly, Christ has killed the enmity within bodies, and not the love.

hatred, the vain-glory, the speaking against another, the defamation, the furious wrath, the haughtiness, the reckoning of himself as righteous, the desire for being seen, the strife, the love for the self, and the criticism addressed to others. These burdens belong to the soul. And the burdens of the body are: the covetousness of the belly, the love for the imposing countenances, the pleasure, the lust, and the lack of the heart. All of these and the things similar to these have been forbidden by our Lord Jesus to the bodies of the saints and He killed these burdens into His holy Body, according to the Apostle's words, that: "through cross he Killed the enmity within Himself" (Eph. 2:16), by abolishing the Law of the commandments, the holiness of the Saturday. So, he who bears the mentioned heavy burdens and fulfills them on Saturday, how could he say: "I am a true Jew"? This one deceived himself because he has only the name left. That's why he won't receive anything from among the things of Christ. This is because he denies himself through his deeds, because those killed by him, he has resurrected them again, and the things he buried he has unearthed again. That's why it is obvious that this one isn't a true Jew, but he is a liar; he neither is circumcised nor keeps the Saturday (he doesn't' Sabbathizes). So, when our Lord Jesus will come into His glory, he won't introduce into His eternal Kingdom except by the sons of Israel, namely all of them who have been circumcised, whom He has gathered up from among all nations, as the Apostle says: "petrifaction have been done from the part of Israel, until all the nations will enter" (Rom. 11: 25). And again: "As many as will match this ruler, they will have the peace and the mercy upon them and upon the Israel of God" (Gal. 6: 16). You notice that are Israelites of God, who have the circumcision of the heart and the Sabbathism (the keeping of the Saturday) and the abolishment of the sin. And he says again: "This is because not him who shows himself in his body as being a Jew, neither the seen circumcision, but the hidden Jew and the circumcision of the heart into ghost and not that into letter" (Rom. 2: 28-29).

5. Let's take heed, brothers, at ourselves, until we will have fulfilled the toil, and not to lose it because of our carelessness, by not knowing that our enemy is within us, and he flatters us and he drags us to commit any sins, by not allowing our eyes to see anything from the light of the godhead. Examine yourself, you the poor one, who have been baptized into Christ and into His death, in order you to find out which is the death He killed, if you walk on His traces (1 Pt. 2: 22). And show me the sort of death you have[361]. He is sinless and by showing Himself to you, He preceded you in everything: in poverty, and you cannot endure the poverty; He didn't have "where to lean His head on" (Mt. 8: 20); And you do not endure the estrangement joyfully; He endures the insults and you dop not endure any insult; He didn't avenge Himself, but you cannot stand not to answer evil with evil; by suffering, He didn't get angry, while you, by making another to suffer, you get angry on him; being Him defamed He remained undisturbed, while you are not defamed but still disturbed; He got humbled comforting them who were sinning against Him, while you beat them with your word even on them who love you; He joyfully endured the things brought upon Him, while you get disturbed even by hearing something unimportant that upsets you; He is gentle to them who fall into sins, while you get haughty towards him who is superior to you; He has given Himself for them who sinned against Him in order to save them, while you cannot give yourself even for them who love you. Behold what He has given you and what you have paid Him back. Know Him out of His deeds and know yourself out of your deeds. If you died together with Him, who would do those deeds or those sins[362]? This is because, otherwise, what will us do more than a pagan does? Do you pray for them who do good to you? But the publican too does this (Mt. 5: 46). If you rejoice of him who praises you, that is done by the Jew too. So, what do you do more as you claim that you have died to the sin and that you are alive into Christ Jesus? If you love only him who obeys you, what do you do more than a sinner? Thise thigs are done by a sinner as well. If you hate him who causes you pains and who doesn't obey you and who rebukes you, you too are going that what the pagan does. But you must rather pray for them so that they to be [361] Research whether you too have died in Baptism the death of Christ towards sins. Better said, see how far your death is from His death. He died to all sins. You are far from this death of His.

[362] If you answered evil to the evils done to you by your fellow humans, contrary to what Christ did, for He treated everybody's sins with kindness, how could you say that you have died to the passions, as Christ did? How could you, then, say that your death is like Hid death?

forgiven. If you get upset on him who defames you, see that the publican does the same[363].

Therefore, you who have been baptized in His name, you too must examine yourself, in order you to see whether these ones are the deeds rejected by you; and, how will you show yourself on the day of His glory and how will you be crowned if you doesn't have the crown for the passions defeated by you, passions which were defeated by your Emperor before you defeating them, and the Emperor has given Himself to you as an example. This is for, when the Emperor of the emperors and the lord of the lords will show Himself in His glory, and He will show Himself in a seen manner to all the mankind into His great glory, by having the signs of His sufferings He endured for us, but you will show yourself not-having His sufferings into your body, He will tell you: "I do not know you"[364]. And by seeing all the saints who dies for His name and who have His sign, you will be ashamed by appearing in front of them. You search the lives of all saints and you will find out them who endured the evil and they dint' paid it back with evil. This is for the blood of all of them shouts out: "Avenge us towards them who inhabit the earth" (Apoc. 6: 10). And I who have been loving the whole resting, what will I say on that day, by seeing the Prophets and the Apostles and the martyrs and the other saints who, by suffering the evil from others, they showed themselves as long-patient and as not-answering the evil with evil, neither getting angry, for they knew that it wasn't the will of the man but the injustice of the devil who forced those people to do them evil[365]. Therefore, you too must research on yourself, brother, [363] If Christ wants to lead us through fulfilling His commandments, into His Kingdom, that means that through His commandments He shows us His love. But He shows us His love when we do not love those people who praise and honor us. When people love us, He asks us for humbleness and tiredness.

[364] He who will show himself in front of the Righteous Judge Who still has within Himself the glory for the passions He endured and defeated for us, and he won't have within himself the sign of these defeated passions – the hatred on other by love, the insults from others by gentleness etc. – he will rightly hear being told to him by That One: "I don't know you", because you have nothing in common with Me, because of being you totally stranger to Me, so that you cannot but remain further on far from Me, even though I would want you to be together with Me; if you are uncapable of receiving My love and you to open yourself to Me.

[365] The saints go in their kindness all the way to not answer evil to those who did them evil, all the way to feeling compassionate because the saints know that those people didn't commit the evil from themselves but because of being them tempted by the devil. Still, the saints didn't reckon either as staying in their power to rid the people who harmed them of their punishment, but they let them on behalf of Christ. Christ will be The One Who knows if those what is that what you are doing, and you must understand that though that you have in front of God. This is for you won't be able to hide your thought on that hour. It won't be in the power of your human will to criticize somebody but, when the (general) resurrection will take place, each one will resurrect dressed up in his deeds as in a coat, either into justice or into injustice. These deeds of yours will speak about you and they know where your place is[366].

7. Blessed is him who has been fighting and who has disrobed himself of the things pulling him towards the Gehenna and who has put on the things dragging him towards the Kingdom. This is for the Apostle says: "We know that if this ten, our earthly dwelling place, it is broken, we will have from God an eternal house not made by human hand, in heavens" (2 Cor. 5: 1). This is for the time of our live is nothing and we are being deceived on each day, until that our will reach us when we are engulfed by the grief of the eternal crying[367]. Let's not lose our heart, but let's put the whole our power for taking care of ourselves and for guarding ourselves and for praying us all the time the goodness of God, in order Him to help us. Let's not anger on the people who are close to us, because of their mildness words utter by them unwillingly, and because they were unworking or because they have become vessels of the enemy and strangers to God, all the way to running away from people did the evil while being forced by the devil or they too put their own will into that evil they did.

[366] It won't be given then to your will to criticize or to judge somebody, neither to hide yourself, but the coat of your deeds which you have put on while you have been living on earth, that one will speak out of you and about you and about what others will say about your deeds. Your deeds have been gradually intertwining a coat of your person, or better said they have imprinted a seal into you, or maybe a complex and full of nuances and variously colored coat, but one still giving a general and unitary impression. This seal can still be called as a coat, for there is a difference between the creature whom you have come into the world with from God, and that what you have imprinted into your creature. The place achieved by you will be according to the color of your coat. You won't be able to occupy a place nonconforming to the colors of your coat. This shows the objectivity and the justice of the final judgment. You won't be able to occupy a place nonconforming to the objectivity of your deeds. It is shown in these assertions how stranger Abba Isaiah was from Origenism, once on the deeds committed in this life depends the happiness or the unhappiness of each human person. The earthly life has a decisive importance for the happy of unhappy eternity of the man.

[367] It will be awful that endless pain of the "eternal crying". That will be a pain which won't give us the possibility to correct ourselves, because we will no longer have that power. There will be a callousness into helplessness, one united with the pain.

stadium. So, my beloved ones, you must take care, before everything, of the humble cogitation and you must endure the insult patiently, and you must think all the time to remove your will, because keeping the own will it will abolish all the virtues, while him who has his thoughts persevering into righteousness, he will gently cut off his will because of him fearing of his will like of a dragon. This is for the love for quarreling it will break the whole creation, and it will darken the soul not to see anything form the light of the virtues[368]. So, you must take care of this cursed passion which mixes itself with the virtues until destroying the virtues. Actually, our Lord Jesus Christ didn't climb the cross until he threw away Judah from among Hid disciples. This is because, if the man doesn't cut off this dishonorable passion, he won't be able to advance towards God[369]. This is because all the evils follow to it. Within him who doesn't want to know about God there will occur the vain-glory. And all the things hated by God will dwell within the soul of him who loves the strife and within the soul of the proud ones. And all the things which such people convince their heart about that those things would belong to God, those things are actually lies, according to all the Scriptures.

8. Judging firstly on himself, it will bring the humble cogitation, and the humbleness consists of renouncing to one's own will in favor of the brother, into knowledge[370]. The cleanness consists of praying to God. Not comparing yourself to others it will bring you the crying[371]. Not judging another means loving him[372]. The heart loving of God consists of not thinking [368] The virtues are the light for being seen by other people and, in the first place, by God. The virtues assure us about the seen value of God and of the people and of our worthiness, namely of the purpose of our life. The evil like egotism will lock us up into darkness and into the meaningless of our life and of the existence by and large. We will no longer see but some bling and implacable and inexplainable laws which create all the things only in order they to destroy all the things.

[369] He who locks himself into the egotism of his sins, he won't be able to advance towards God. This is for God is the Creator of all the things and God wants all of them to be united within Himself. Only into Him they can advance into the more-existence.

[370] It is necessary one to renounce to the own will in favor of the neighbor "into knowledge", namely being aware of his value and of my duty towards him, and not in a sentimental manner in order to gain him by that for my pleasure.

[371] Not measuring myself doesn't only mean I not searching for being satisfied with the measure which I have reached at, but it also means crying because of I being aware of being myself nothing, because I haven't accomplished anything of my duties.

[372] Not judging somebody means not only stopping myself from condemning him because of an indifferentism of mine towards him, but it also means loving him. In all my relationships anything against the neighbor[373]. The quietude (the hesychia) consists of not trusting that what doesn't belong to you[374]. The poverty is that heart that lacks the evilness. The peace consists of achieving the mastery over your senses (feelings). The gentleness consists of enduring. The mercy in shown into forgiveness. And achieving these, it means cutting your will off and that brings the reconcilement through virtues with one another and it makes the mind undisturbed. And I do not see an end to all of these in any Scripture[375]. This is for that what God wants form the man isn't else but the man to humble himself towards his neighbor in everything and him to cut him will off towards all the things, and the man to always pray for the hand of God to help him to guard his eyes against the sleep of the forgetfulness and form the delusion of the slavery[376], given that the man's nature is evil and changing[377]. It belongs to God to guard us, and it belongs to God the power of bestowing to us the power for guarding ourselves[378]. It belongs to Him the shelter which we preserve our poverty under[379]. It with another I must not stop myself only from committing the evil, but I must also to advance into committing the good.

[373] I must show long-patience not only in abstaining myself from answering evil to evil, but it also consists of not having any thought of discontent towards the neighbor committing that evil upon me.

[374] The quietude consists of not bragging myself with that what I do not have. And, actually, I have nothing by myself.

[375] The mentioned virtues can advance endlessly. There is not end to virtues.

[376] God doesn't want form the man except the man to be humble towards his neighbor, and the man to cut his will off in his relationship with his neighbor. God makes the neighbor's cause as His cause. This is for God is the Creator and the Upholder of the neighbor and God wants Him to be shows as such also by the man's help. This is also a cherishing given by God both to him who helps and to him who is helped. God wants the man to help another man, but God also wants the man to ask God for His help. God and the man reciprocally ask for the care for the neighbor. In this too there is a trinity. Two strengthen their care for a third one. God asks the man for his care for the neighbor and the man asks God for His care.

[377] In another place Abba Isaiah said that the man's nature is good, for it is accomplished by the help from God. Here we must understand that Abba Isaiah reckoned the man's nature as evil when the man doesn't want his nature to be accomplished with the help from God asked through prayer. So, the prayer is necessary to the man's nature in order the man's nature to be accomplished (made whole (E. l. t.'s n.)).

[378] It belongs to God to guard us, but it also belongs to God to give us the power for guarding ourselves. So, guarding ourselves it belongs to us too, but we cannot truly have this power except from God, namely by praying ourselves to Him. There is a relationship between God; the man cannot be without this relationship with God.

[379] We cannot be poor except into God and with God's help. Otherwise, our egotism will push us towards getting rich, towards the egotistic trust into ourselves, and that is one with the deceit and with the slavery. This is because cherishing the richness means making yourself belongs to Him that turning which He turns us with towards Him[380]. It belongs to Him the thankfulness for He bestows Himself to us[381]. It belongs to God to give us the grace for thanking Him. It belongs to God the shelter which He protects us with against the hand of our enemies. His is the honor and the glory forever and ever. Amen. But lo which are the tones stirring up the strife up and mercilessly breaking the soul down: the much-speaking, the twisted speaking, the changing of the word according to one's pleasure, the daring, the haughty-speaking, and the stopping another form speaking. That soul that has these ones is a soul baren of virtues. And after all of these, if the soul doesn't break sweats in any of the virtues, that soul won't reach the resting of the Son of God. So, do not be carless with your life, brothers, and do not give you mind occasion for any laziness into deeds. This is because that will deprive you of the time you need for reaching the resting of the Son od God, that is the humbleness and the renunciation to all the things and to the hatred for any man and the non-trusting in any deed which doesn't belong to God and in keeping your sin in front of your eyes and the death towards any deed of the evilness[382]. And God Who is not a liar, He will come to our help with His mercies.

About Consummation

1. One of the Fathers said that if a man doesn't achieve his faith into God and his ceaseless desire for God and his innocence and his non-paying back evil for evil and the slave to the material things. The poverty makes you free from everything. Only that conscience that you have God won't disturb you and it will make you truly free. You are free only into God and into the conscience that you have everything into God.

[380] In your turning towards God there is His power or His work that turns us; there is His attraction giving us to feel the attraction.

[381] The thankfulness we live towards God for the things He bestows us it still is His power and work. God turns Himself towards Himself, but by that he turns us too towards Him. There is impossible to separate our work from His work. "Lord, I am taking You for giving me the power for thanking you!".

[382] The quietude is one with the humbleness and with the death towards any deed of the evilness, and the fear of the conscience for any sin whose ugliness is always kept in front of it.

suffering of the evil and the humbleness and the cleanness and the love for people and the rejection of all things and the gentleness and the long-patience and the ceaseless prayer to God into the pain of his heart and the true love and the non-looking towards the things from behind and the non-taking in account the things coming upon him and the care for his serving (liturgy) and the asking of God for His help against the things coming upon him, that man won't be saved. This is because of your enemies, oh man, they are not silent against you[383]. Therefore, you must not neglect or despise your conscience. And you must not trust yourself at all regarding the fact that you have reached to something worthy of God, but you must see yourself into the land of your enemies. Enduring the evil into conscience understands your previous indifferences towards it[384]; and the crying of the sense heals the wounds caused you by the enemies form inside[385]. The consummate love for God, according to His will, it resists the hidden enemies, And the hidden cleanness, by defeating the hidden enemies, it prepared the man for the resting of the Son of God, and the seen cleanness guards the virtues. And if the knowledge it that that gives birth to virtues, the knowledge is too the one that guards them[386]. Finding the content during temptation it will turn the coming temptations towards the things from behind, and not thinking that your toil is pleasant to God it will prepare to you the help from God in order you to guard yourself[387]. This is for even him who gives his heart in order to piously ask for God's help, he truly cannot know whether he has been pleasant

[383] The enemies talk to you through temptations, they whisper within your own self the urge to evils.

[384] Enduring the evil with the conscience that that evil has its cause in your previous indifferences, it will make you understand those. The thief from the right hand understood that he suffered because of his previous indifference towards good.

[385] The enemies tempt us through inward thoughts but not without the contribution of our senses which are in touch with the external realities. That's why fighting the temptations from within mut be accompanied by the painful retaining of the senses from enjoying the pleasure of touching the outside things.

[386] The knowledge, or the conscience, by fighting the inside temptations it gives birth to virtues and it also guards the virtues. There is not fight against the passions which darken and for the virtues which enlighten the meaning of the life, without there being a conscience of this meaning. This knowledge gives birth to virtues and it guards them.

[387] You must not be content for having resisted a temptation that acme upon you. Otherwise, you will weaken your fight and the temptation you thought that you defeated it will tempt you again. Only by not trusting yourself and by making bigger efforts and by asking with bigger insistence for the help from God, God will give His help to you.

to God[388]. This is because as long as his conscience still reproaches him for some of his contrary-to-nature deeds, he still is stranger from freedom. This is because until there is The One who reproaches him and Who judges him and until there is the condemnation, there won't be freedom. So, if you see yourself non-condemned for anything while praying, you will be truly free and you will have entered the resting of God according to His will[389].

2. If you see that the good fruits have been strengthened and the thorn of the enemy can no longer chock it up, even though they who wage war to you haven't got far from because they trust their evilness, that will mean that you will no longer have to fight your senses. And if the cloud overshadows your tent and if the sun burns you during the day and you do not lack the light even at night, namely if He has found within you the whole preparation of the tent in order to stay and guard it, according to the will of God, it means that it has been reached within you the victory for God and therefore He guards your tent. This is for it is His and He goes in advance and He prepared the resting in advance[390]. And if He doesn't stop Himself first at that place where He want to, the tent cannot be rested, as the Scripture says. So, there is a great danger to the man until he will know himself, and until he will have found out that there is nothing within him from those who teach the monk to assertively get far from the contrary-to-nature things. So, we need the fear of their goodness to master upon us, in order to ceaselessly wake our remembering up, so that together with it to reign over our hearts, all the time, their holy humbleness, by [388] You must not think that your ask addressed to God for His help it was pleasant to God and that God has given you the true help. This is because of you not being able to ever know that surely. If you think that you know that, you will trust yourself and so you won't continue to pray God even more fierily for His help.

[389] Until your conscience still rebukes you for something contrary-to-nature from within you, the conscience judges you too. You are under the judgment of your conscience, so that you aren't totally free or unsubmitted to condemnation. We are not allowed us to feel free from under the possibility of being us condemned, before the last judgment of God. Only then we will be given the true freedom for we will fully live the love of God. But there is the possibility for somebody to anticipatedly live this freedom, and that is a true resting. Only the saints are from now around Him, as ones who do not feel themselves as accused of anything.

[390] The human person is within God's tent. God goes like a cloud before him, in order God to prepare for him the resting which He attracts the man to. But the man too has God within himself, like a sun during day and like a moon at night. God enlightens the man ceaselessly. The man must be evermore attracted by the will of God towards the Promised Land, towards the Kingdom of Heavens. And this fits the Churches too.

the mercy of God[391]. This is in order us not to be indifferent towards them who prepare those ones and who guard those ones to remain within mind up to the very end, so that the man to ceaselessly see his sins and him not to trust himself because he is in a cunning slavery.

3. So, someone judging his neighbor and disregarding him and despising him within his heart and gossiping him when the time comes and angrily rebuking him and speaking evil of him towards somebody else, it will make him who does those to be a stranger from that mercy which the saints are made partakers to, concomitantly to thew worthy of honor virtues. This is because those evil deeds abolish the toils made by the man and they destroy the good fruits of the toils. If somebody says: "I am crying for my sins" but he still commits some of those sins, he is mindless. If somebody says: "I am crying for my sins" but he still has something of those sins, he deceives himself. He who searches for quietude (hesychia) but he doesn't take care of cutting off his passions in hesychia, he is blind in the holy building up of the virtues. He who leaves his sins and he takes care of correcting somebody else, he will get lazy from asking with the whole his heart and he will be deprived of that prayer to God into knowledge. This is the manhood: to fight his previous sins which one prays for being forgiven to him, asking for no longer being him gained by those sins in his heart, or in his deeds, or in his senses. If the memory of his previous sins doesn't reign within his heart[392], and if this doesn't turn him away from all the things form within world in order those things not to master him, he won't be able to refrain himself from his sins and he won't feel himself disgusted of them and he won't be able to refrain himself from judging God's creature. Blessed is him who has been truly found worthy of this, and not hypocritically and with much evilness. But the deed of those who truly cry with their mind and with their senses through these unseen deeds, it is that of not judging their neighbor. This is because if your sins are not enough to you, they will make you a stranger from your [391] The fear is produced and upheld within us by the godlike kindness, out of mercy for us. The fear wakes up our remembrance about our previous sins and, concomitantly, the humbleness that takes our heart under mastery.

[392] It is a recalling of the sins feeling sorry for them and feeling the pain for having committed those, and not feeling the pleasure for repeating them.

neighbor[393]. And answering with evil means being far from crying[394]. Leaving imprinted something from the things of the world (and allowing yourself to be mastered by the imagination regarding something from within the world) because of your vain-glory, it means being far from it with your mind[395]. he who gets sad and says: "I haven't asked you for your opinion about these thoughts", it if far from him not doing his will regarding himself. If you say about somebody that he is good or not, it is a shame to him and it will show you worse than him because of you judging him[396]. Wanting to know a thing that doesn't belong to you, it is a shame and it is a lack of learning and it is an evil slavery which do not allow you to know your sin.

4. If somebody condemns you and you suffer because of that, the true crying is not within you[397]. If it happens to you some deed of giving-and-taking, and if you suffer some loss and you get upset because of that loss, that means that there isn't the fear of God within you. If some people say some words against you and you get disturbed because of that, that fear isn't either in this[398]. If somebody praises you and you accept that, the fear of God isn't in this either. If some people curse you and that pains you, the fear of God isn't in that either. If you run to those who are glorious within the world because of you desiring their friendship, the fear of God isn't either here. If some people talk to you and you want to oppose them by words, the fear of Gid isn't here either. If they will overlook your words

[393] When you haven't got disgusted because of your sins after committing them, but you keep committing other sins, these sins will estranger you from your neighbor.

[394] Answering the evil from another with evil, it means being far from being sorry and from the crying because of having done that evil.

[395] Making yourself the slave of something from within the world, and producing important imaginings about that what ties you to the world, it means not-understanding with the mind the world's meaning as masterpiece obeyed to God, or that what the world truly is in its miseries which come to an end at each man's death. It means not seeing the fact that the world isn't the only reality. Imagining about something important from within the world means every wrong judgment done by somebody about something from within the world, or about people. This is a deceit leading you to mistakes because of you not being able to exactly know the things from within the world and because of you lacking the humbleness.

[396] Telling about somebody else that he is worse than you are, you judge him and so you become worse than him.

[397] The true crying is that crying for your sin, because of your insufficiency. But if you cry because you feel offended, that means that you do not truly suffer for your weakness, for your sin. And such a crying won't correct you.

[398] There isn't in this the fear of God, neither it is in all the next ones. This is because of being in all of them an egotistic feeling.

and that pains you, the fear of God isn't here either. This is for all of these show the former man living and mastering so that there aren't here those which wage war to him and neither is here the true crying of him whom God works within. But the eyes of the mind must work in order somebody to know about himself as he is enemy to God by his own will. If you keep the commandments of God and if you do your thing into knowledge for God and if you are convinced that you cannot be pleasant to God, according to His glory, and if you put your sins before your eyes, and if you see yourself opposing to the evil one who wants to tear you down by self-justification and by guarding the building done to you by him, then you will know that you will have known yourself and you will know where you will be living at and you will no longer trust your heart, for you will have gained the victory[399].

Actually, if the man doesn't answer in front of judgment and if the man doesn't hear the decision and if the man doesn't know which his place is, that man won't be able to convince himself that he will be pleasant to God by fear[400]. This is for the sadness according to God, a sadness that east the heart, it can gain the senses; and the resistance (to evil) with watchfulness it guards the mind's senses healthy[401]. This is because of the man not being able to shun from evil, neither can the man trusts himself for doing that. The man must ceaselessly be in ascesis as long as he still is within his body. Blessed are they who do not trust their thing as a thing that would be pleasant to God, and who get ashamed to answer to God once they do not trust their thing, because of them knowing their weakness and they are satisfied with their sadness and with crying for themselves and not to worry about the creature of God which will be judged by God[402].

[399] If you have your sins before your eyer, they will help you to resist him who wants to souly kill you, because of you wanting to keep the creature built to you by the Maker. In this case you will know that you will have truly known yourself as a humble creature and you will no longer proudly trust yourself by reckoning that you have achieve the victory upon your sins. The real victory upon sins is united with the humbleness that doesn't claim that it has gained that victory.

[400] One is pleasant to God by fearing God. This is for the fear of God makes the man to avoid sinning. The far of God is the beginning and the companion of the virtues.

[401] The sadness for sins makes the mind gaining the bodily senses and to master them, and the sadness also guards the mind's spiritual senses which the mind intuits the things' meanings through.

5. This is for the victory of him who works consists of surrendering himself wholly to God. And when God's will it becomes consummate, it means that the man will have been inscribed in the book of the living ones and then the ones form heavens will testify about him, for he will have passes over the masters from the left hand. Then his remembrance is together with those from heavens. But until the man still is at war, the man is under fear and under trembling, whether or not he has been victorious today, or whether or not he will be victorious or defeated tomorrow. This is because of the fight surrounding and squeezing the heart. Only the lack-of-passions isn't warred, for it has received the crown and for it is no longer worries about being the three ones divided when reaching to be reconciled among them through God, and these three ones are, according to the Apostle: the soul, the body, and the ghost (1 Thes. 5: 23). This is for he says somewhere in one of his epistles that if the three ones become one through the work of the Holy Ghost, they will no longer be separated. "This is for if Christ died and He resurrected, He will no longer die, the death no longer masters Him" (Rom. 6: 9). And His death has become our salvation. This is for, by His death for only once, He killed the sin and His resurrection has become the life of all of them who believed in His power, for He has healed His ones of passions in order they to be alive into God and in order they to bring forth the fruits of the righteousness[403]. Therefore, you must not [402] The man must always be discontent with his deeds and he must not wait trustfully for God's judgment, neither must he cogitate that others' salvation will depend on him. The eternal fate of each one must be seen as depending on God. The man must always be mastered by sadness because of the state which he is in, and he must cry for his discontent because of that state.

[403] At the general resurrection the war waged against the man will have stopped, so that also the division between soul, body, and spirit will have come to an end, for the man will no longer be mastered by passions. The death and the resurrection of Christ made the three ones to be one within Him, and then He will make them to be one within us too, for our ghost strengthened by the Holy Ghost of Christ will take the body and the soul into his mastery and all of them will be one. So, the man will no longer be worried by the three divided ones, for they will have reached at the full overwhelming by the Holt Ghost. The people on earth fight for the three ones, because of the three ones still being non-consummate and that's why still being non-fully united, and they also fight for those who are dead with their body in order their soul to found mercy at God and through the Holy Ghost their soul to be united with their body at resurrection. So, Christ dies and resurrected also for restoring the man's unity divided by sin. This is for He killed within Himself our sin as cause of man's division. The whole reckon yourself as dead until you are under the force of your enemies, whether when awake or when sleeping. This is because, as long as the poor man still is in the stadium, he doesn't have daring, and by looking from far, he doesn't trust his deeds. And the mindless one, by daily falling he reckons that he is victorious, without actually fighting a battle in the stadium[404]. That's why the Lord told His disciples when He sent them to preaching: "Do not salute anyone on your way, you salute the people in the house. And if there is a son of the peace, you will remain with him and his peace will rest there" (Lk. 10: 4-5). And again, Elisha told Gehazi when sending him: "If you encounter a man, you won't bless him, neither will you accept being blessed by somebody" (4 Kings[405] 4: 29). This was because he knew that that child wasn't brought back to life and neither him had power for resurrecting that child. But when the man of God entered and saw the child lying on the bed, he shuts the door after himself and he fought by deeds against each of his senses and he lied down next to that child and he came over that child and he walked that child for seven times. And when the child's senses got warmed up, according to the will of the Ghost of God, the child's eyes opened.

6. So, what can we the unworthy ones say, because we love the glory of this world more than we love God; because we do not know how to fight; because we do not strive to reach the resting, because of us not knowing the long-patience of God Who lets the thorn grow together with the good fruits until fulness and He doesn't send to be the tares gathered up, if neither Gehazi despite accomplishing his travel, he didn't reach to resurrect the child, because he loves the glory from people more than the glory from God. Blesses are those eyes which get ashamed by looking into knowledge at God and which take care of healing their wounds into knowledge and which pray for their

Abba Isaiah's spirituality is the consequence of the Christology. But while until here he has been speaking only about the death of Christ as death of the human passions, not he speaks about Christ's resurrection as that one that restores the man's unity by liberating the man from passions. We are given here new elements of Christology as a deepening of its richness.

[404] The fight will come to an end at the final judgment. Until then, but especially during the earthly life, some people fight in the stadium and they advance into virtues. Others, because of their pride, they commit sins right through the deeds which they think about themselves through as they would be virtuous. These last ones do not fight in the stadium for advancing towards the target of their consummation.

[405] In the KJB we usually call this book as 2 Kings. (E. l. t.'s n.)

forgiveness[406]. But woe to them who lose their fruits by reckoning about themselves as they are sinless and so they trample on their conscience because of not wanting them to be pricked by it, and because they neither want to know that what is small it is very small. As we know that the plowman who sows all his seeds, if those seeds do not fructify, he will have toiled vainly, likewise the man "if he sees all the mysteries and if he has the whole knowledge" (1 Cor. 13: 2) and he does many deeds and healings, he will still suffer of diverse evils and he will lack his coat and he will even be in fear because of not trusting his conscience, because of him still having enemies and plotters hunting for him, until he will hear the word that: "the love never falls, but it believes all the things and it hopes for them and it endures them" (Ibid 8: 7)[407].

7. Of, how much tiredness means the way of God! This is for he said: "Narrow is the gate and full of troubles is the way leading to life; and only a few find it" (Mt. 7: 14). And we who are unworking and who love the passions, we say that we have it as resting, because of us not being able to bear the yoke which He told us about: "take My yoke upon yourself and learn from Me, for I am gentle and humble in heart and you will find resting to your souls. This is for My yoke is good and My burden is light" (Mt. 11: 29-30). And who is the wiseman, according to God, who doesn't' fight with the whole his power for enduring the suffering of the evil things with the whole his tiredness and hurry, in quietude (in hesychia) and in guarding and with the whole his care, and he still won't find himself worthy to utter the name of God with his mouth[408]? But our Master and Lord

[406] Abba Isaiah constantly stresses upon knowledge. They who advance into the good things they are shamed in front of God for their sins, because they know that those are sins, and for they take care for healing those sins by the knowledge of combating those sins. The knowledge about sins is united with the knowledge of God Who the sins are committed against. He who doesn't know God he won't either know certain deeds of his as sins. That's why on the knowing God as a person-like existence Who wants the good as live in harmony of everybody - and Who will the people by not fulfilling it they get out of the harmony that blesses them – it depends any knowledge of everybody, or their meaning.

[407] Only when somebody reaches to live the fact that the love never falls etc., only then he will have reached above sins.

[408] He who fight against his sins feels himself unworthy even of uttering the name of God. But he unites in his utterance the sentiment of his unworthiness with that of needing to utter God's name. Lord, I cannot not (this is an intentional double-negation (E. l. t.'s n.)) to call Your name while in the same time I feel myself unworthy of calling Your name. I am calling you while feeling that right in calling You I am putting something of my proud trust that my calling will make Your hearing me. But the fact that our Lord Jesus Christ came to us in order

Jesus came to us for the passions working within us; He came to kill the passions from within us who do not walk according to the body but we walk according to the ghost, and He showed us the whole Will of the Father. This is for He taught His disciples and told them: "When you have accomplished all the commandments, you will say that we are unworthy servants; for we have done what we ought to" (Lk. 17: 10). He told these to them who made their efforts and who guarded their efforts, because of they having known them who attempt to rob them of their efforts. Somebody fearfully runs away from any venom bearer which he sees, either snake of viper, either scorpion or other bearer of death's venom. But the shameless and unworthy soul remain in all the things killing him and that souls won't run away, neither that soul will part with those, but he indulges himself into those and he trusts them with his heart. That's why such a soul wastes his time and he will remain baren.

About Dispassion (Lack of Passions)

On the way to virtues there are also fallings, there is also enmity, there is also transformation, there is also changing, there are measures, there is diminution, there is discouragement, there is joy, there is pain to the heart, there is sadness, there is resting to the heart, there is thriving, and there is effort. It is a travel until reaching its end. And the dispassion means staying away from all of these and not needing anything. This is for the dispassion is into God and God it in it[409]. The dispassion doesn't have enmity, it no longer has falling, it doesn't have faithlessness, it doesn't make efforts for guarding something (that what you have), it doesn't fear (of any passion), it doesn't lust anything in any regards, and it doesn't feel pleasure for any enmity. Great and countless are its glories. Fearing of some passion is far from dispassion and until some blame still ascend within somebody, he is far from dispassion. The dispassion is the body taken by our Lord Jesus and the dispassion is the love which He joyfully taught his disciples about. That's why many inexperienced people thought that they reached to dispassion, while still their passions were within their soul and their body was not totally cleaned. That's why they deviated from the due word: "Forgive me for God".

Him to help us to get rid of our passions, it still gives us the courage for calling Him. I wonder: am I worthy of uttering God's name?

[409] This is a remarkable definition of the dispassion. The dispassion is into God and God is in it. So, the dispassion has everything. The dispassion doesn't lack anything. In passions you passionately desire for something, so that you are obeying your passions. You have no quietude. You are unfree. In dispassion there is freedom. It is the consummate love. This is for the love has within itself the whole freedom. God is passionless for He is not submitted to anything and for He is not limited.

Towards Abba Peter, His Disciple

1. You have written me that I want to give repentance to God for my sins, if God liberates me form the bitter worry for the world which I have it now. You have been right to say that about me, if I am liberated from the thing of this age. This is because of the mind not being able to take care of both of them. The Lord too said this: "You cannot serve both to God and to Mammon (Mt. 6: 25). This is because Mammon is the sign of all the works of this world. And if the man doesn't leave this, he won't be able to serve God. And what doesn't it mean serving God if not having anything stranger within our mind when we bless God, neither to feel any pleasure when praying Him, neither any evilness when singing to Him, neither any hatred when we worship Him, neither the evil envy disturbing us when we occupy ourselves with Him, neither feeling us the ugly pleasure within our limbs when remembering Him? This is because all of these are darkened walls surrounding the miserable soul so that the soul won't be able to cleanly pray to God by having all of these within him. This is because they impeded the soul in the skies and they do not allow the soul to encounter God and to hiddenly bless and to pray to God with the sweetness of the love and with the holy desiring for getting enlightened by God. That's why the mind always gets darkened and it won't be able to advance towards God, if the mind doesn't' accept to cut those off and if the mind doesn't' become worriless for anything of this age. This is because of being there two powers influencing the soul: one from outside that takes care of the things form this age and it takes care of the resting of the body, and the other one is from within and it is that of the passions which impede the virtues. But the soul won't be able to see the inwards one if the soul doesn't liberate himself from the external one. That's why the Lord said: "everyone who hasn't liberated himself from any of his wills, he cannot become My disciple" (Lk. 14: 26). And the external power is out of will while the internal power is out of deeds[410]. So, by knowing our Master that the will is that reigning over both of those, he commanded us to cut our will off. This is for the mind is killed when the soul worries about the external things and the inward passions commit their deeds without separating those. This is for if the soul obeys the word of Jesus, that soul will cut all his wills off and that soul will hate all the work of this world. And then the mind resurrects and the mind stands strong until the mind throws all the things outside its house, by ceaselessly looking at the soul ad guarding the soul against turning back to the things from behind and to them who made that soul unjust.

2. This is because of the soul being like a young woman married to a man, who when her husband goes on a trip, she loses her fear and her shame and she will no longer take zealous care of the thing from within her house. But when her husband turns back to his home, she immediately starts taking care of all things according to her husband's wills. The mind is likewise. When the mind wakes up it takes care of the soul and the mind ceaselessly guards the soul until the soul gives birth with the mind and brings children up[411]. And both of them become one heart. This is for the soul obey the mind, as it was written by the Apostle, that: "the man is head to the woman" (1 Cor. 1: 3). And again: "The man mustn't cover his head, because he is image and glory to God. And the woman is the glory of the man. This is for not the man is out of woman but the woman is out of man. That's why the man must have mastery upon woman, for the angels. But neither the woman is without man, nor the man is without woman in the Lord. This is for as the woman is out of man, likewise the man is through woman. "And all the things are from God" (Ibid 7: 12). To them

[410] The two powers strengthen on one another. The external power comes out of will, while the inward power comes out of the external deeds. That's why, by cutting off our own will we will cut both of them off.

[411] In Greek the word mind is of masculine gender, and the word soul is of feminine gender. The min is the man while the soul is the wife.

who are found worthy of being into the Lord, this word hasn't only one meaning. These ones pray into the Lord for cleanness; they are those who bless God with their holy heart. These ones are enlightened by God; these ones are the true worshippers searched for by God; these ones are them whom it was written about: "I will dwell and I will walk within them" (2 Cor. 6: 16). This is that what was said: "If two of you will reconcile about everything, everything they ask in My name it will be done to them" (Mt. 18: 19). So, He wants his ones to be clean of the seen material things and of the unseen hidden into soul things, all of those which were abolished by His body through His resurrection, as He said: "Remain into Me and I into you" (Jn. 15: 4)[412]. Have you seen, brother, that He wants us in the first place to remain within Him by our deeds and that He remains within us with His cleanness, according to our power?

3. But if one says: "I have remained into Him by Baptism, but by living I cannot do that". Listen to me, my beloved one! Without any doubt, he who received the Baptism, he received it towards abolishing of the sin, as the Apostle said: "We have been buries together with Him through Baptism, towards death, in order the body of the sin to be abolished, in order us to no longer serve to the sin" (Rom. 6: 4-6). This is because it is impossible Christ to remain with the sin in the same place. "So, if Christ has started dwelling within you, your body has died to the sin and your ghost is alive for righteousness (as the Apostle said (Rom. 8: 10). "This is for the married woman is tied to her husband until he lives. And if her husband dies, she will be untied from the law of her man. So, if her man lives, she will be called as adulterous if he becomes of another man, if her man dies, she will be free from that law so that she won't be adulterous if she marries another man" (Rom. 7: 2-3). So, if he who wants to know if Christ had started dwelling within him, he will be able to know that out of his thoughts. This is for, as long as the sin convinces his heart, God hasn't started dwelling [412] The relation between man and woman, while the man is absent from home and when the man comes home, it is a wonderful image for the relationship between mind and soul. Within them who pray to God in a clean manner and who do God's will, their mind and soul become a harmonious unit. As the man get harmonized with his woman, likewise the mind get united with the soul into heart or into ghost, and that makes the body too to be clean; and as the man and the woman harmonize themselves into Christ, likewise is united the mind with the soul into heart when they see Christ within heart.

within him neither His Ghost has found resting within him[413]. So, it is necessary that God to dwell within the man in order the man to commit his deeds into God, in order the man's soul to be liberated from sin, as the Apostle said: "He who attached himself to the harlot he is a sole body with her, and he who attached himself to the Lord he is a sole body with Him" (1 Cor. 6: 16-17). This is for the whole contrary-to-nature state is called as debauched[414]. But if the soul gets liberated and if the soul ascends above those from the skies, that soul will remain within God and that soul will receive God's Ghost, according to the saying: "He who attached himself to the Lord, he will be of one ghost with Him". And Christ teaches the soul how to pray, as one who ceaselessly worships Him and who desires Him, and Christ remains within the man's soul and He will give that soul, ceaselessly, resting, and He will unveil to that soul His untold honors and gifts. This is for the soul will be born anew, from Him, through baptism, and through the instillation of His Ghost. This is for as it was written: "He who has been born out of God he will no longer commit sins, neither the cunning one will touch him" (1 Jn. 5: 18), for he has been born out of God, as it is written in the Gospel: "If you do not get born anew, you won't be able to enter the Kingdom of Heavens" (Mt. 18: 3); and again: "Make yourself as the recently born babies, desiring for the spiritual and non-cunning milk, in order you to grown up on it" (1 Pt. 2: 2).

4. But what is the thing of the child? If the child gets hit, he will cry, and he will rejoice is somebody rejoices together with him. If the child is rebuked, he doesn't get angry, and if he is praised, he doesn't get proud. If some other child is honored more than he is, he won't envy. If his things are taken away, he won't get disturbed. If somebody take away his inheritance, he won't know that. He doesn't go in the court of justice with anybody. He doesn't hate anyone. If he is poor, he won't get sad.

[413] Here is being given again the relationship between man and woman as image of the relationship between Christ and the man's heart. As long as the heart feels itself attracted by sinful thoughts, Christ won't be within man as in His woman. As long as Christ isn't within man, neither the man's ghost will be rested. The sin keeps the man's ghost agitated, while Christ brings the man's ghost to resting, as the woman is brought by the presence of the man.

[414] It is contrary to man's nature not being together with God, more specifically together with Christ. If separated from God, the man's nature will live not with her natural husband but with satan who is enemy to God. In such a case the man's nature lives contrary to that state that makes the man's nature forever happy by showing to it the true meaning of the life.

If he is rich, he won't get haughty. If he sees a woman, he won't lust for her. He is not mastered by pleasure and by worry. He doesn't judge anyone, he doesn't master upon anyone, he doesn't gossip about anyone, he doesn't aspire to what he doesn't know, he doesn't laugh at the countenance of his neighbor, he doesn't have enmity on anyone, he doesn't pretend, he doesn't search for the glory of this world, he doesn't try to gather richness, he doesn't search for the glory of this world, he doesn't love the money, he is not daring, he doesn't strife, he doesn't teach passionately, and he doesn't take care of somebody. If he is undressed, he doesn't get sad, he doesn't keep his will, and he doesn't fear the famine neither the cunning ones nor the wild beats or the war. If a persecution has started, he won't be troubled. So is him whom our Master Jesus told about: "If you do not turn back and if you are not like these children, you won't enter the Kingdom of God" (Mt. 18: 4).

5. But when the child grows up a little and the evilness starts inhabiting him, the Apostle condemns him by saying: "In order us to no longer be children carried away by the toy of the waves and carried away by any wave or the teaching through the deceit form the people "through their craftsmanship towards the plotting of the straying. Bu by retaining the truth, us to increase in our love for Him in everything" (Eph. 4: 14-15). And again: "I have nourished you with milk like on some children, and not with hard food for you haven't been able to eat that yet" (1 Cor. 3: 2)[415]. And he says again: "As long as the inheritor still is a child, he doesn't differ in anything from the servant, thought he is master over all the things, but he is under administrators and under okimonos until the time decided by his father. Likewise, when we were children, we have been enslaved to the natural elements of the world" (Gal. 4: 1-3). And again: "Run away from the youngish lusts" (2 Tim. 2: 3). So, by teaching us to leave the childhood, he said: "Brothers, do not be [415] Christ asks us for all the mentioned qualities for allowing us to enter the Kingdom of Heavens. And let's gain these by conscience and by striving for them. He asks us "to become like little children are", so that us to become again like they are, after we have got far from their qualities because of the life's temptations. We must become again like the little children are, but by conscious fight against the world's cunningness and by bringing to the childhood the awareness about the goods had by children as simple gifts. Through conscience and through a weak will, there are actualized the sinful potentialities of the man. Bu through conscience and through an increased knowledge and through a strengthened will are defeated the sins as actualizations of those sinful potentialities. But this will it is strengthened by Christ and by knowing Christ.

childish in your mind, but be children in evilness, but be consummate in your mind" (1 Cor. 14: 20). So, which is the thing of these children if not that said by Apostle Paul: "So, by rejecting all the evilness and of the craftsmanship and all the envy and all the gossips, like some recently born children" (1 Pt. 2: 1-2). Do you understand, brother, what does it mean the word told us by our Master Jesus: "Verily, verily, I am telling you: if you do not turn yourselves back and if you do not become like these little children, you won't enter the Kingdom of Heavens". This word if fearsome. This is for Lord Jesus said: Verily, verily I am telling you". And "Amen" is Himself. That's why the Apostle said: "For there is no other greater than Him, He swore on Himself, or He said: "Blessing, I will bless you" (Hebr. 6: 13-14)[416].

6. Let's understand the word from above exactly. Let's take care of this word, namely, all the time and with fear and with tremble, let's take heed when the enemy wounds us with some arrow through our neighbor, or when somebody hit sus and condemns us or gossips us, or when our neighbor rebukes us to obey him, or when we are troubled by an unclean mind that wants to wake us within us the evil memory of the deeds don to us by our neighbor, wanting to defile our soul by anger and reproach[417]. If something of those comes closer to our soul, let's strive to remember the word of our Master told us under oath: "Verily, verily I am telling you, if you do not turn yourself and if you are not like the little children, you won't enter the Kingdom of Heavens". Who won't be afraid after hearing this word? Or who, by fearing to end in Gehenna, he won't cast away from his heart the whole hatred lest himself will be thrown off the Kingdom[418]? A harsh word was told to us by our Master

[416] The word of Jesus which He asks us through for us to become like the little children must feel us up with fear. And that fear must be a force of us to fulfill it. This is because by saying "Amen", Jesus told us that this is the truth. And the truth is Himself. Be convinced about the need for what I am asking you for, for the truth of this fact is founded on Me and Truth by excellence. By not respecting what I am telling you, you do not respect Me.

[417] The hatred, the anger, the thought, and the evil word about our neighbor darken our soul because of stopping our souls form truly knowing our neighbor's mystery, namely that what is wonderful within him from God the Maker, and we no longer know ourselves either in that what we can do for our spiritual growth in order us to advance towards God together with our neighbor.

[418] The salvation is constantly being made dependent on the perspective of the hell, and entering the Kingdom of Heavens is being made dependent on the love for our neighbor. Hating and despising our neighbor lead one to the sad loneliness that will eternal be live in back then, saying: "If you do not turn yourself back and be like children you won't enter the Kingdom". This is a hard word to them who cherish their will and to them who love the world and they haven't known the power of the Holy Ghost that, if the Holy Ghost comes to them He will made them forget about the whole evilness and He will teach them the things of Jesus: instead of anger, the gentleness; instead of enmity, the peace; instead of love for rebuking, the humble cogitation; instead of hatred, the love; instead of non-lenience, the long-patience[419]. This is for these ones are those who have been found worthy to be born anew.

7. Let's strive therefore to cut off our heart all the evil things mentioned by the Holy Apostle. Let's leave those in order us to reach the measures of the child. This is for they who have reached these measures they took care of cutting these evils off their souls, for they have reached Christ's holy and great age and consummation[420]. This is for He gave them a great power by breathing into their face and saying: "Take Holy Ghost" (Jn. 20: 21). But then, when He showed Himself to them at the sea of Galilee, He asked them: "Do you have something to eat?" (Lk. 24: 41), He reminded them that He had made them children through the breath of the Ghost, though they were not children according to the body. And it was also written: "Behold I and the children given Me by God". "So, as the children were made hell. And the joy of the communion form the Kingdom of Heavens is being prepared by the striving for loving the people during the earthly life.

[419] The Ghost of Christ received at Baptism, it gives power to the man to leave any egotism and to be towards people as Christ was, for He made Himself man, He sacrificed Himself for people, and He remains man forever out of His love for people. This is the new man born out of Christ at Baptism.

[420] Let's grow up in humbleness, let's grow up in not reckon g ourselves as being important, and let's grow us in cherishing and serving our neighbor. Let's grow up towards the man whom the Son of God descended to. We reach the great age of the consummation by leaving the claim for glory and by gaining the humbleness and the non-pretentiousness of the child. By tending towards the state of the child we actually tend towards the consummation of Christ. This is for the Son of God didn't make Himself a proud man desiring for the worldly glories, but He made Himself a humble man and full of appreciation for all the people. By giving birth through the breath of His Ghost to His apostles as new men, He made them as children but also as consummate. And it happened so to all of those born anew through baptism. We become consummate as He is by being us made like the children are. But we grow up into the consummation of the child's cleanness, while Christ is that consummation which there is no longer growth in. He is Alpha and Omega. He is always the center of the new mankind and He is the consummation which the mankind must reach at, without growing old and without weakening in power.

partakers to the body and to the blood, in a close manner He too shared these ones, in order to be tore down through death on him who has the mastery of the death, namely the devil, and to deliver those" (Isa. 8: 18; Hebr. 2: 14-15). What blood and body did He shared in a close manner, if not of those who left the whole evilness and who reached the measure of the holy childhood? And these ones, at their turn, they became consummate[421] according to the Apostle's word: "Until all of us will reach at the unity of the faith into the Son of God, and at the consummate man, and at the measure of the fullness of the age of Christ"[422] (Eph. 4: 13). And again: "Commit the growth of the body towards building it into love" (Ibid 16).

To some people like these wrote Apostle John, saying: "I am writing you, my children, for you have known Him Who is from the beginning; I am writing you, you the young ones, for you have defeated the cunning one" (1 Jn. 2: 12-13). Have you noticed that they who had made themselves children regarding their evilness, they became fighters against the enemy[423]? Have you noticed that they who are emptied of that one's weapons, which are the weapons of the evilness, they became parents and they reached the measures of the consummation in order to be entrusted with the unveiling and with the mysteries, until they will reach the wisdom, the unity, the kindness, the gentleness, and the cleanness? This is for these traits belong to the gentleness and these people are they who have received Christ, by extolling Him within their bodies.

8. Let's therefore fight, my beloved brother, in the great famine from on earth, let's do not allow ourselves to become discouraged in any regards, but let's ceaselessly ask for the kindness of God in order Him not to let us to live in the straying the enemy and of the envious, who mercilessly causes us the evil things and who shamelessly persists in telling me that if I do not obey him today I will surely obey him tomorrow. But let's

[421] The Sn of God shared the body and the blood of the Virgin who was clean like a child, so that later on the other people too, united with Him by faith, to receive His body and blood clean like those of a child.

[422] Christ like man, He has the cleanness of the child and the fulness of the spiritual age of the consummation. Towards this age of the man's spiritual fullness, we too must tend to, we who have been born out of His cleanness as spiritual children.

[423] Behold the mode of uniting the state of child with the state of adult: one must make himself or he must be a child, or small in his evilness, in order him to be able to be great in the war he wages against the enemy. So, somebody can be both, spiritually.

not renounce until we still can pray God perseveringly, as David says: "Look at me, hear me Lord, Mu God, enlighten my eyes lest I will fall asleep towards death, lest my enemy will say: "I strengthened myself upon him". This is because they who trouble me, they will rejoice if I budge" (Ps. 12: 4-5[424]). So, if they have taken us into mastery, let's shout out, saying: "God, who will liken you? Do not be silent, neither be tame, God. Because lo, your enemies got angry and they who hate you have raised their head. Against Your people they have been plotting cunningly, saying: "Let's no longer allow his name to be called in Israel" (Ps. 82: 1-4[425]). And after advancing through the Holy Ghost, he said: "My God, put them as a wheel, as a reed under the wind. Fill their faces with reproach and they will know that Yourself are Lord" (Ibid 14, 17[426]). Behold hos, they who strengthen their heart through faith against the enemies, before fighting their enemies they strengthened themselves on the holy stone that is Christ (1 Cor. 10: 4), by saying within their hearts: "They surrounded me like the bees on the honeycomb and they were quenched as a fire in thorns, and in the name of the Lord, I defeated them" (Ps. 117: 12[427]).

[424] In KLJB we have: Ps. 13: 3-4: "Consider and hear me, O Lord my God: lighten mine eyes, lest I sleep the sleep of death; // Lest mine enemy say, I have prevailed against him; and those that trouble me rejoice when I am moved."; in ROB we have? Ps. 12: 4-5: "Look, hear me Lord, my God, enlighten my eyes let I will fall asleep into death, // Lest my enemy will say: "I have strengthened myself upon him". They who trouble me will rejoice if I wobble." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[425] In KJB we have: Ps. 83: 1-4: "KEEP not thou silence, O God: hold not thy peace, and be not still, O God. // For, lo, thine enemies make a tumult: and they that hate thee have lifted up the head. // They have taken crafty counsel against thy people, and consulted against thy hidden ones. // They have said, Come, and let us cut them off from being a nation; that the name of Israel may be no more in remembrance."; in ROB we have" Ps. 82: 1-4: "God, who will liken You? Do not be silent, neither appease Yourself, God! // Because lo, Your enemies got furious and they who hate You raised their head. // Against you people they worked cunningly and they held counsel against Your saints. // They said: "Come to destroy them from among nations so that no longer to be remembered the name of Israel"." (E. l. t's. n.)

[426] In KJB we have: Ps. 83: 15, 18: "So persecute them with thy tempest, and make them afraid with thy storm. // That men may know that thou, whose name alone is JEHOVAH, art the most high over all the earth."; in ROB we have" Ps. 82: 14, 17: "So You to banish them, into Your blizzard and int your wrath. // Ands they to know that Your name if the Lord. You alone are the Highest all over the earth." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[427] In KJB we have: Ps. 118: 12: "They compassed me about like bees; they are quenched as the fire of thorns: for in the name of the Lord, I will destroy them."; in ROB we have: Ps. 117: 12: "They surrounded me like the bees on the honeycomb, but they quenched as the fire of thorns and in the name of the Lord, I defeated them." (E. l. t.'s n.)

9. And if we seem them who are surrounding us through their cunningness, that is the indifference (laziness), either by attracting our soul towards pleasure, or staring us with anger against our neighbor when he does something wrong, either by burdening our eyes towards looking at the bodies, or by wanting to descend to taste the pleasure of the bodies, or by presenting another's word as poison, or by hitting another's word, either by making us to make differences among brothers, by saying: "This one if good while that one is bad", if all of these are surrounding us let's not get discouraged, but let's rather shout out with the strength of our heart as David did, saying: "Lord, the defender of my life, if there is being prepared a war against me, my heart won't fear. If war will be stirred up against me, I hope in Him. I will ask the Lord for one thing, I will ask Him for this: I to live in the house of the Lord for all the days of my life, in order I to see the beauty of the Lord and to visit His holy dwelling place. For He covered me. And lo now, He has raised my head against my enemies" (Ps. 26: 1-6[428]). These things belong to them who have wakened up their mind from dead ones, who are called by the Lord as night, saying: "Your do not belong to the night, neither to the darkness" (1 Thes. 5: 6)[429]. And by rebuking them who

[428] In KJB we have: Ps. 27: 1-4: "THE Lord is my light and my salvation; whom shall I fear? the Lord is the strength of my life; of whom shall I be afraid? // When the wicked, even mine enemies and my foes, came upon me to eat up my flesh, they stumbled and fell. // Though an host should encamp against me, my heart shall not fear: though war should rise against me, in this will I be confident. // One thing have I desired of the Lord, that will I seek after; that I may dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of my life, to behold the beauty of the Lord, and to inquire in his temple."; in ROB we have: Ps. 26: 1-8: "The Lord is my illumination and my salvation; whom will I fear of? // The Lord is the defender of my life; who will I be frightened by? // When will come close they who hurt me, in order they to eat my body; // They who trouble me and my enemies, those ones weakened and fell. // If army was organized against me, my fear wouldn't get scared; // If war was waged against me, I would hope in Him. // I asked the Lord for one thing, I will search for that thing: I to inhabit the house of the Lord for all the days of my life, // In order I to see the beauty of the Lord and I to visit His dwelling place." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[429] The death is the night which I am wared of, and therefore it torments me. Knowing the love of God shown within Christ, it is luminous light, it is the day, it is the satisfying meaning of my life. This daylight has removed the surrounding night. But this death is not only one with the darkness, but it is also one with him who sinks into it. This is because, that one unites himself with the darkness and with the death, and somehow unconsciously, to such an extent that himself become the death and the darkness. On the other hand, between sleep and drunkenness and night, there is some identity with the death. The night makes us sleeping and it urged us to drunkenness; and these two makes us desiring for the night even more. The sleep too is darkness and spiritual death, and the sleep increases these two; the drunkenness is likewise. But the spiritual sleep isn't a total unconsciousness too, but it is a tormented neglect themselves, he said: "They who sleep, they sleep during the night; and they who get drunk, they get drunk at night" (Ibid 7)[430]. And again: "The day of the Lord comes like a thief and they won't escape him" (Ibid 2-3), for it comes at night. But them who have wakened up their mind form passions, he told them: "Let's put on the breastplate of the faith and let's take the hope as a helmet of the salvation" (Ibid 8).

10. Let's therefore do everything while keeping our mind awake against the dead deeds, and let's attentively watch our soul on every moment, in order our soul not to do something contrary to nature, according to the word of Prophet Isaiah: "The merciful Lord told you: "Humble and fickle you have been and that's why you haven't been comforted" (Isa. 54: 10-11)[431]. This is for the soul resembles the iron, because when uncared for it will be covered in rust but, when place in fire, the fire will clean it up and as long as it is in fire it is like the fire and nobody can hold it. The soul is likewise. As long as the soul remains into God and as long as the soul occupied himself with God, the soul becomes fire and the soul burns up all his enemies who make the soul rusty while neglected, but God will clean the soul up again and God will make the soul new as an iron, if the soul stops indulging to something form the world and if the soul rests within his nature which he has been found worthy of and which the soul has been before. And if the soul forsakes his nature, the soul will die[432]. The animals die so, when sunk into water, because they are out of the being of the earth. And again, the fist will die if brought on dry land, because they are out of the water's being. The birds at their turn, when flying they are resting, but when descending on earth they will fear of being hunted. It is likewise the nightmare, or a string of nightmares. The drunkenness is likewise. In sleep and in drunkenness we crook and we make meaningless the whole reality. So will be the hell.

[430] Thew sleep and the drunkenness aren't one with the night and with the death, as some worsts of nightmares which darken and crook the reality, but they are one with the passions. This is because of the passions making you rush upon the momentary pleasures, and so to lose the perspective of the long life or the endless joy.

[431] This is told by God to the soul because the soul has lowered himself through fickleness, so that the soul had fallen off his luminated, glorious, and happy state, by committing sin.

[432] The soul has his godlike features when the soul is mixed with God. But God's features do not become soul's features by nature but by union with God. This is the deification by grace. This example was used by many of Holy Fathers. But Abba Isaiah specified that by this deification by grace the soul's nature is activated. If the soul remains in himself, the soul will get covered all over by the rust of the sin contrary to nature, and the soul will spiritually die.

consummate soul: when he forsakes his nature the soul will immediately die[433]. So, they who have become worthy and who have impropriated the (godlike) gifts, they see the world as a prison and they do not want to be confounded to it, in order they not to die.

11. That soul couldn't love the world even if that soul wanted it, because that soul would remember his beginning which he had before deciding himself to remain into God. And that soul knows what the world did to him and how the world desolated him[434]. Behold an example: When an enemy emperor enters a city, the men fear and surrender themselves to that emperor, and that emperor immediately tries to remove the image of the former emperor and the new emperor tries to remove the laws decreed by the former emperor, and the new emperor will decree other burdening laws and he will place his image everywhere and he will force the whole multitude form the city to serve him. But if the people form the city secretly go to the true emperor and they tell him: "Come and help us" and that true emperor comes with his army upon the new emperor, and if the people from the city hearing the coming of the true emperor they joyfully open the city's gates to that army, the true emperor will enter the city and he will kill his enemy and he will powerfully drop down that one's images and laws, and the city will rejoice and the true emperor will place back his images and his laws and he will settle himself again within that city and he will master upon it, so that no other emperor will reign within that city and he will urge that city's inhabitants to fight for him, so that the city's inhabitants will become fearless to any emperor's enemy.

It is likewise that soul that after the Holy Baptism has been taken back into mastery by the enemy, and the enemy has humiliated that soul through all his ugly plots and the enemy removed the image of the Emperor and the enemy has placed his image and his laws and he has made that soul to worry about the things of this age and the enemy has convinced that [433] The soul forsakes his nature when forsaking his connection with God. The sol is not a god a nature, but the soul's connection with God is necessary to the soul's nature. Without God the soul will spiritually die.

[434] The world has desolated the soul because of lowering the soul under the soul's natural level that is the life in God. That's why if the soul remains exclusively within the world, that will mean death to the soul. This is for the world gives the soul an infinite life, and the soul is made having the aspiration for the infinite and eternal life.

soul to work carelessly and with defilement and so the enemy has made that soul as the enemy wanted to. But, finally, the kindness of the holy and great Emperor Jesus has sent the repentance and the soul has rejoiced. And the repentance has opened the gate to Him and the Great Emperor destroyed the enemy of the soul and He erased form within the soul the image of the enemy and the enemy's dirty laws. And by bringing the freedom to the soul, He placed within the soul His holy image and He has given to the soul His clean laws. And He has taught all soul's senses to fight. And at the end He rests Himself within that soul, for that soul has become His. This was the birth out of God. So, it is impossible to the soul to enter the resting of the Son of God, if the soul doesn't have the image of the Emperor. This is because, as no one among merchants won't accept or receive any coin if that coin doesn't have on it the image of the emperor, neither the Emperor will accept such a coin in His treasury, likewise any soul who hasn't imprinted on him the image of the Great Emperor Jesus, that soul won't have the angels rejoicing together with him but the angels will throw that soul away saying: "How have you entered here by not having His image?".

12. And the sign of His image is the love. This is for Himself said: "In this they will know that you are My disciples, if you have love for one another" (Jn. 13: 35). But it will impossible for His love to be within us as long as our soul id divided and both searches for God and love the things of the world[435]. As a bird cannot fly having only one wing, neither by having something hanged on it, likewise no soul can advance towards God while that soul is still tied to something from within the world. And as a ship having something contrary to the things it needs it won't be able to float, likewise it is impossible to the soul to cross over the waves of his passions [435] The full love cannot come except form the Son of God made man. But also, the faith confesses in Him cannot be full except when united with the love for Him coming from Himself. "The godhead is love" said Saint Apostle John, and only him who loved God has truly known God (1 Jn. 4: 8). So, until the soul hasn't been united with God into love, the soul will haven't known God, but such a soul it at mot looking for God. And a soul is known as not having God when that soul doesn't fully love God, but that soul loves the world too even partially. This is because such a situation keeps the soul not only separated from God but also divided within himself. And a divided and doubtful love isn't a true love. He who truly loves, he will totally bestow himself to the person he loves.

having something contrary to virtues[436]. And like the sailors do not wear nice clothes, or even gloves and sandals, because if they are not unclothed, they won't be able to swim, likewise it is impossible to the soul to cross over the powerful and opposant waves of the evilness if the soul is not disrobed of the things of the world. And like the soldier goes out to fight the emperor's enemies, if he has something contrary to the necessary weapons, he won't be able to resist the enemies, likewise it will be impossible to the man to resist his passions if he has something contrary to the virtues[437]. And like a city surrounded by a wall but having a small portion of that wall collapsed, if the enemies want to enter that city they will use that place where the wall is collapsed, and even if the enemies find defenders at the city's gates those won't be able to resist the enemies until that collapsed portion of the wall get repaired, likewise it will be impossible to the ascetic monk to resist his enemies if he still is mastered by some passion, neither will him be able to reach the measures of the consummation.

13. I do not say these things from myself, but form the godlike Scripture. This is for it has been written in Genesis: "And God told Noah: I have seen only you as righteous and consummate in this generation" (Gen. 7: 1). And He also told Abraham: "Make yourself unblemished in front of Me and I will place the eternal connection with you" (Ibid 17: 1-2). And also, it has been written in Numbers: "Everyone who has promised to guard himself against drinking wine or wine-vinegar, or vinegar-of-drunken-drink, or everything else made of grapes, until he promised" (Num. 6: 2-4). And again, in The Second Law: "If you go out and fight your enemies, you will guard yourself against [436] It belongs to the soul's nature to unimpededly advance towards God. But the soul cannot advance unimpededly towards God except by virtues. If the soul has something contrary to virtues that soul won't be able to unimpededly advance towards God, despise that soul partially trying to advance towards God. And non-advancing towards God it is contrary to the soul, as it is contrary to soul's nature that that is contrary to virtues. Knowing God is therefore conditioned by virtues. The virtues have a power knowing of God. And the virtues by belonging to the soul's nature or by truly accomplishing the soul, also the knowing of God belongs also to the soul's nature, or to the man's nature. The man's nature won't become accomplished if not having by virtues the direct experience of knowing God, namely the man's nature wont' become accomplished without having the experience of the virtues.

[437] As I said before, there isn't a neutrality of the soul. Either the soul cultivates the virtues, or the soul will be mastered by passions. In the first ace, the soul will life according to the nature, while in the second case the soul will live contrary to nature. But the soul can both have the virtues but still being not totally free from passions.

any evil word until your enemy will surrender himself into your hands (The Second Law 23: 9). "Out of these seven nations you won't let anyone breathing, lets they will teach you to commit sin towards Me" (Ibid 20: 16-18). By learning how not to get ourselves discouraged, because of us asking when will us destroy those, he told us: "You won't be able to destroy them in a year, lest the field will become desert and the wild beasts to multiply in it against you", but little by little until you will get taller and you will grow up and God will widen your borders. But he commanded them for many times; saying: "Take heed not to connect yourself with the Canaanites, but you rather make them vanish from your face" (Ibid 7: 2). And when Joshuas Navi left and he surrounded the city of Jericho and he destroyed that city, God said: "And you will anathemize it and all its things" (Joshua Navi 6: 17). And he wanted to fight Gehazi, Israel flight from before them because of not being able to fight their enemies, because of the anathema the stole (impeded) upon Ahar. And Joshuar fell on his face and he cried in front to God and he said: "Israel turned their neck before their enemies and what will I do?" (Ibid 7: 8). And the lord said: "Because the anathema if among you, Israel won't be able to oppose their enemies" (Ibid 13). And Israel won't be able to get out and fight until their will destroy Ahar". We also see Saul, because God took his kingdom because of anathema he took (impeded) upon Amalec (1 Kings[438] 15: 15).

14. Again, because Johanthan stuck his staff into honey and he put it in his mouth, God didn't' listen to Israel on that day (Ibid 14: 27). And the Ecclesiastes by teaching us that even the smallest among passions abolishes the power of the virtues, he said: "The flies dying, they will make stinky the vessel with oil" (10: 1). And again, he says through Ezekiel: "On that day when the righteous will deviate from the way of this righteousness and he will commit lawlessness, I will bring pain over his face and I won't remember his righteousness" (Ezek. 18: 24). And the Apostle too says: "A little dough will leaven the whole kneading" (Gal. 5: 9). And Ananiah and Saphira his woman, by taking something out of the due honor from the community, they immediately fell at the feet of the Apostles and they died because of that unimportant thing (Acts 5: 1-10). And again, James says: "He who has guarded the whole law but he mistook one part of it, he will be guilty to all of it" (2: 10). And by strengthening ourselves, in order us to turn ourselves towards Him, through Ezekiel He said: "On the very day which the lawless will turn away from the way of his lawlessness and he will work with justice and righteousness, I won't remember his lawlessness, but he will be alive and he will live. This is for I do not want the death of the sinner but him to turn himself and to live, says the Lord" (Ezek. 18: 21-32). "By turning yourselves, you will turn and I will ask you: Why are you dying, you the house of Israel?" (Ibid 31). And Jeremiah says again: "Turn yourselves towards Me, you the house of Israel, and I will me merciful on you, says the All-Keeper" (Jer. 3: 21-22). And again: "Wouldn't him who fell, rise again? Why this people deviated with a shameless deviation and why they strengthened themselves in their decision and why didn't they want to turn back to me? Says the Lord". "Turn yourself towards Me and I will turn Myself towards you" (Ibid 8: 4-5). And our Lord Jesus Christ said also: "If you forgive to the people their mistakes, your Heavenly Father will forgive you as well" (Mt. 6: 14-15). And the Apostle says also: "If one of you has fallen into some mistake, you the spiritual ones will correct him with the ghost of the gentleness" (Gal. 6: 1). And James said also: "Bother, if somebody get strayed from the way of the truth and somebody brings him back from his straying, he will have saved a soul from death and a multitude of sins will be forgiven to him" (Jas. 5: 19-20).

Lo how all these testimonies of the Scriptures give us power for examining ourselves, lets by making efforts to preserve our evilness towards our neighbor or our anger with him, and by not forgiving him, us to lose our ascesis in vain. This is because, in such a case, our Lord Jesus Christ won't help us at that time when our enemies will torment us[439]. That's why our Savior taught us to watch upon ourselves, saying: "Narrow is the gate and full of troubles is the way leading to life and only a few find it: but broad and wide is the way leading to perdition and many are walking on it. Gurd yourself, therefore, he says, against the liar prophets coming to you in sheepskins but they are ravening wolves inside. Out of their fruits you will know them" (Mt. 7: 13-16). Which are their fruits if not all the contrary-to-nature state that is caused within us wanting our heart to trust it. But they who love God with the whole their heart, they won't be convinced by liar prophets about anything they preach, according to the Apostle's word: "Who will separate us from the love of Christ? The trouble, or the narrowness, or the persecution, or the hunger, of the lack of clothing, or the danger, or the sword? I am convinced that neither the death nor the life, neither the angels not the masteries, neither the ones form now nor the future ones, neither any other creature will be able to separated us from the love of Christ" (Rom. 8: 35, 38-39).

Have you seen, my brother, them who loves God with the whole their heart, that nothing of the things from the world can separate them from the love of God: neither the gold, nor the silver, neither the houses, nor the pleasure, neither the hatred, nor the condemnation, neither the drink by word, nor the dragon's venom breathing within our heart[440]. Therefore, you must not get disturbed but let's rather strive for looking at the brass snake made by Moses according to the Lord's word. This is for Moses placed that snake on the top of the mountain so that everyone bitten by a snake to look at that brass snake and to be healed (Num. 21: 8-9). Our Lord Jesus Christ resembled to the brass snake. This is because Adam became enemy of God by obeying the snake which was an enemy of God. But our Lord Jesus Christ made Himself man consummate in everything, and without taking upon Himself man's sins (Hebr. 4: 15), in the likeness of Adam, for us. But the brass snake is like him who has become enemy to God but he has not evil thought, neither venom, nor evilness, neither he gets bent, nor he blows, neither he has the enemy's breath[441]. This image has been given by Jesus Christ to Himself until He will quench the venom received by Adam from the mouth of the snake and until turn back to the according-to-nature state the nature that has become [440] Neither the troubles and the dangers, nor the tempting realities from outside, neither the thoughts insufflated within our heart by unseen enemies can separated us from the love of Christ.

[441] The Son of God made Himself man; the man become snake through Adam, or enemy to God. But the Son of God made Himself man without having sin, and that showed that He was like the brass snake which there is no longer venom and sinful breath in. That's why, at the commandment of God Moses represented Christ as a brass snake and people who were bitten by snakes got healed by looking at that brass snake. But Christ, the true man and full of the godlike power, he will get the people rid of the eternal death too.

contrary-to-nature. This is for He tells to Moses: "What is that that you have within your heart? And he said: a staff. And He told Moses: drop it to the ground. And Moses dropped it and the staff became a snake. And Moses ran away from him. And God told Moses: stretch your hand and grab it by its tail. And Moses grabbed it and the snake became a staff in his hand" (Exod. 1-4). And God told to Moses: Take the staff transformed into snake and beat with it the water from the river, before Pharaoh, and the water will become blood" (Exod. 1-4). And again: "Take that staff transformed into snake and beat the Red Sea with it and the Reas Sea will get dry" (Exod. 14: 16). And again: "Take that staff you hold it in your hand and which you have beaten the Red Sea, and you will command to the stone and the stone will yield its water" (Num. 20: 8).

16. Notice that him who walks of the traces of our Lord Jesus Christ, he has become enemy to the snake, and he will become a staff and so no enemy will be able to oppose him[442]. Great is this mystery! It tells us that whether the dragon sows its venom within us, we to look at Him Who has climbed the cross, for He did all of those for us and He endure all those things becoming, without getting upset with them who mocked Him and who brought Him to death, neither answering them any harsh word, but He remained motionless like the brass snake. So, if we look at Him and if we walk on His traces, we will be healed of the bites of the hidden snakes. His power is, in the same time, the help from Him Who said: As Moses raises the snake into desert, likewise it is due to the Son of Man to be raised, to that everyone who believes in Him not to perish but to have the eternal life" (Jn. 3: 14). This means following to Him in order us to be healed through Him. But how are we being healed? If we believe that He is powerful. This is for they who were bitten into desert not itself the brass snake was healing them, but they were healed by looking at Him with faith. This was because many of them dies because of the snakes, because of not believing they into the word of God, as the Apostle said: "Let's not tempt God as those ones tempted Him and they died because of the snakes" (1 Cor. 10: 9). You know, brother, that up to this day there are snakes within that soul that wants to tempt Jesus, as we asked Him about which of Hid commandments we haven't fulfilled, as it is written: "One of the teachers of the Law asked Him, tempting Him and telling Him: Master, which is the biggest commandment in the Law? And Jesus told him: Love your Lord God with the whole your heart and love your neighbor as yourself. In these two commandments are comprised both the whole Law and the Prophets" (Mt. 22: 36-40). Can you see that they who ask but they do not fulfill the commandments are called as tempters, because they don't want to believe in the brass snake that can escape them from the venom of the hidden snake?

[442] So, after Christ became the man who is Adam had become snake and enemy to God, but into Christ there was only man, he became a staff which no enemy was able to oppose to. This will happen to any man who walks on the traces of Christ. The Son of God made Himself snake, or a sinless man, and a staff that divided the sea in order the people of Israel to cross through the sea towards the promised Land and that get to the thirsty people water out of stone. He was making Himself one out of another, for He was also the man having both the power to overcome the death and the power of the staff that mastered in a wonderful manner, towards the man's benefit, the nature's forces.

17. Therefore, guard your heart not to get yourself lazy, saying: "How can I guard the virtues because I am a sinner?". If the man forsakes his sins and the turn back to God, his repentance will reborn him[443]. That is what the Apostle says: "As we have been bearing the earthly image, let's now bear the heavenly image" (1 Cor. 15: 49). Can you see that it has been given to the man to change himself through repentance and the man to become wholly new through repentance[444]? But as long as the little child is at the mom's bosom, the mom guards the little child on every moment and against all evil. And when the little child cries, she invites the little child to suckle and she lightly hits the little child in the face, according to the little child's power, in order to make the little child accepting her mil with fear, and the little child not to keep a stubborn heart. And because the little child cries, he has mercy on him, because she loves him, and she caresses him with gentleness until the little child accepts her bosom. And if gold is shown to the little child, or silver, or pearls, or anything of the world, he takes heed at [443] The3 turning back to God coincides to the forsaking of the sins. Committing sins is one with forgetting about God. Turning back to God and forsaking the sins are one with the repentance. And the repentance is a birth anew out of God.

[444] The self or the subject remains the same, as a certain permanence of the same conscience. But the image, or the clothing, or the seal do change. This means a certain duality of the man. On one hand the man can become from former to new, but on the other hand the man remains an identity as subject. The man changes, but the changed one has a continuity with the previous one. The change united with the identity of the subject it means the repentance. I don't want to continue being as I have been previously. It pains me because I have been as I shouldn't have. I must be different, but the same me.

them but while he is at his mom's bosom he overlooks all of those in order him to be shared with his mom's bosom[445]. And his father doesn't beat him because he doesn't work, or because he doesn't leave for waging war to his enemies, because he is small and he cannot do any of that, and because despite having feet he cannot stand on them, and because despite having hands he cannot hold a weapon with them. Thus, his father shows him the long-patience until the child grows up. And when the child had grown up a little and he wants to fight somebody and that one drops him on the ground, his father doesn't get angry for he know that he is only a child. But after the child reached to be a man and he shows his zeal by hating the enemies of his father, the father entrusts him with his things for he is his son. But if, after all the efforts made by his parents, and by advancing into his age, he starts fighting and hating his parents and he doesn't see the benefactions and he makes friends with his parents' enemies, his parents will withdraw their love from him and they will cast him out of their house and they won't give him his inheritance.

18. Therefore us, brothers, let's take care of remaining under the roof of the repentance in order us to receive the milk out of the repentance's holy bosom that invites us towards eating[446]. Let's therefore overlook all the seen realities until we will feel the sweetness of the milk within our mouth. Let's bear the yoke of the repentance that teaches us how to take care of ourselves and how to fight our enemies if they attract us towards them, and how to cry us in front of the repentance so that the repentance to pray our Fathers to avenge us on our enemies who did injustice to us[447]. Let's cut off the will of our

[445] The repentance brough to the man by God is here being resembled to that what the mom does with her baby, by hitting him gently in order to attract him to her bosom and inviting him to suckle.

[446] The repentance is constantly presented like a gift coming to the man from God. The man is the one who must see the repentance as a proof of God's love, as a new try of God to bring the man back, as son, in His house. In repentance there is God Himself as a mother inviting us to drink her nourishing milk, in order us to grow up in union with Him. God Himself is the One Who moves us, through the repentance which He gives to us, in order us to turn back to Him and to rejoice ourselves of the union with Him. He gives us this power, but He has also given us the capacity for receiving this power.

[447] The repentance is like a mother of ours whom we can cry to, and we ask it for praying our Father to cover us against our enemies and to avenge us on them for the evils they did to us. The repentance is ours, but it is also God's, or it is like a mother united with God and who can pray God for us if we pray it for that. This is a trinity among me, the repentance, and God.

heart and lets' love the estrangement from it, in order God to save us like He did to Abraham[448]. Let's obey the repentance as we obey our mother, as Jacob, in order us to receive the blessing from our Father, as Moses who hated (the world) and who was protected under repentance's shelter and he stood against them who wanted to kill his repentance for he was free of all pleasure. Let's not despise the repentance in order it not to hate us, as on Essau[449]. Let's guard the cleanness of our repentance in order our repentance to elevate us in the land of our enemies. Let's have our repentance as a good shelter, as Joshuar the son of Navi did. This is for, while Joshuar was a child he didn't leave the tent. Let's not give room to laziness within our heart, in order the laziness not to deprive us of inheriting the Promised Land. Let's love the humbleness in all the things, and let's strive to enter that land where honey and milk flows, as Valee wanted (Num. 22). Let's lust for nothing of the things of the perdition, in order us not to be killed as Ahar was. Let's love the repentance's conscience that pierces us on every instant, in order the repentance to save us at the time of the temptation, as it did to Raav.

Let's not love the covetousness of our belly, in order our covetousness not to kill us as it did to Eli's sons (1 Kings[450] 2). Let's avoid all the injustice as Samuel did. Let's not be rebukes by conscience as one who has done evil to his neighbor. Let's not love the evil envy on others, in order our envy not to throw us as it did to Saul. Let's be pleasant to us not to pay back evil for evil to our neighbor, in order (God) to guard us as He did to David. Let's not reckon the vain-glory as a big thing in order (God) not to throw us away from His face as our Father, as David did to Abesalom. Let's love the humble cogitation and the

The man is not totally alone. He is by himself, but in this self whom the man is in a relation within, there is present his enemy too. And the conscience as double of the man received special highlighting when the man is in connection with God. The man's conscience is filled then with repentance, by the relationship with God.

[448] Let's leave away from our will, let's estrange ourselves form our will, in order God to save us. If we want to be saved through our will, we won't succeed to. This is because in such a case we remain into our egotistic pride. God is with us when we have forsaken our will, so that we allow His will to work upon us.

[449] Let's not despise the repentance in order the repentance not to part with us, as Rebecca parted with Essau who didn't love her as Jacob did. The repentance is constantly seen as a mother out of whom there is born the new man, and God is seen like Issac who give the repentance the power to born the new man and then He blesses the new man.

decency, in order us to avenge ourselves on the enemies of our Father, as Solomon did. Let's love the obedience in all the things in order us to make our limbs dead towards all the dead things and in order us to make our heart full of manhood towards our enemies, as Elijah the Tishbite did. Let's not make ourselves loving and lusting for pleasures, in order us not to be killed as Ahab was. Let's fight to the death in order us not to lose our holy inheritance, as Navtej the Israelite did. Let's make ourselves obedient to our fathers according to God, in everything, by cutting off our will until we will obey them, in order their blessing to remain with us, as it was with Elisha. Let's not make ourselves loving the money and pleasant liars to the people, in order us not to be cursed as it happened to Gehazi. Let's love them who believe more than on ourselves and in all aspects, in order God to bless us as He did to the Shunamite. Let's not make ourselves passionate lovers of the ugly things in order God not to remove us from His face as He did to Ahia and to Zedekiah, who were out to freeze by the Babylon's emperor. Let's hate the sin for our soul, to the death, in order (God) to help us on the day of our need, as He did to Suzanna. Let's not lust for diverse foods, in order God not to forsake us, as He did to them who ate at the table of Nebuchadnezzar. Let's love enraging the evil in all the things, in order (God) to rejoice within us in all the things, as He did within them who were around Azariah[451]. Let's not be cunning as the Babylonians were, by speaking-against the believers. Let's fulfill our tasks by not listening to the laziness of our body, as Daniel did, for Daniel wanted rather to die that to forsake his services which he was accomplishing daily. This is for God is powerful and He delivers from temptations on them who love Him, and He surrenders the evil ones to the death. And the faith in God makes the wild beasts like some little lambs. Blessed is the God of the repentance, and blessed is him who received the repentance and who places his neck under the yoke of the repentance's will, until he will be born anew from above, into the will of God.

19. But the man needs, my brother, a great discernment and a cutting off of all his bodily will, and him to be awake and taking heed at all his ways, in order him not to get astray and so him to fall into the hands of the enemies of the repentance. This is because affirming the own justice it will tear the repentance apart[452]. Judging the sinners will banish the repentance away from us. Despising the lazy ones, it will impede the repentance's apparition within us. This is because it has been written in Proverbs: "All its paths are narrow and the lazy one hasn't eaten foods. She made to her husband two of each coat of mink and of purples. She is like a ship trading goods, she gathers richness from afar" (Prov. 31: 27, 22: 14). Let's know it out of this word that the repentance is like the good merchant loading his ship not with only one sorts of merchandize, but with all sorts of stuffs which he knows about that he can earn some profit of them. And if he sees one who has lost something, he won't envy him, but he envies them who have become rich and who remained at their homes. He hates every damaging thing and he sells the earned thing in order him to rebuy more of it. He becomes a slave of the earned thing in order him to sell it again. And he asks them who do not envy him and who have become rich in his house: "How will I sell this and how much will I earn?"[453]. It is so the soul who wants to encounter God without getting astray. The soul isn't satisfied with only one thing, but the soul takes care of any winning thing[454]. And if the soul finds a damaging thing, the soul will run away form that in order not to lose something[455].

Therefore, my brother, reckon yourself that you want to become a merchant who wants to earn Jesus. And the trade wanting to ear this Emperor stays away from anything that makes us losing Him. And these things which makes us losing Him are: the glory from people, the haughtiness, the self-justification, the contempt, the angrily speaking about somebody else, the love for abundance, the self-praising, and the love for scattering. All of those bring losses to the merchants [452] He who claims himself as being righteous, or without sin, he will kill the repentance within himself.

[453] I give that what I have in order I to earn it back multiplied by the fact that I have given it. This is for, I by giving to my neighbor, I actually am giving to God and God answers me with the joy He overpours into my soul. In the relation of love between two people, which each of them sees another in, there is God who unites them or Who is united with them.

[454] Any given away thing is aa gained thing, or a winner thing. But the soul wants to give away as many things as possible, in order the soul to gain as much as possible. The soul wants to give everything in order the soul to gain everything.

[455] The damaging thing is the kept thing. When the wise soul finds this out, the soul tries to get rid of things.

who want to earn Jesus, if they have those things in their storehouse[456]. So, examine yourself, brother, about what thing is yours, and you mind will find out which of those things brings forth fruits to God and which of those things trusts the sin, when the eyes are kidnapped towards pleasure or when the tongue is defeated by some hurry, or when your heart is getting sweetened with the human honor, or when your ears enjoy the speaking-against somebody. This is because all of these are damaging to your mind. This is because it has been written in Leviticus: "You will tell Aaron this: do not bring on My alter some animal that has any stain, or you will die" (Lev. 22: 18, 20). Aaron is an image to the mind. This is because the enmity mixes its evilness with the claiming of the justice, God commanded us to be examined everything before being brought to Him as offering, in order him who bring that not to die. And dying means the mind descending from vie (from contemplation) and agreeing to them who want to defile the mind's senses.

20. These ones are the words of them who loved Jesus and who hoped in Him. They soul became a bride adorned with all the virtues, a soul having his holy mirror, according to the Apostle's word: "And all of us, we look as in a mirror, with our face unveiled, at the glory of God, and we get transformed in the same way from glory to glory, as from the Lord Ghost" (2 Cor. 3: 18); this is because now we see Him as in a mirror and as in a riddle, but then we will see Him face to face" (1 Cor. 13: 12). So, they who have become clean brides, they know the Bridegroom within themselves, as in a mirror, if they do not have any stain within themselves as images and so they are unpleasant to their Bridegroom[457]. This is for the Bridegroom searches for souls clean like the virgins are[458], who have no stain within them. This is what was written about Rebecca: "She was a very beautify virgin who knew nothing about man" (Gen. 24: 16). And the Prophet says: "Virgins will be brough to the Emperor [456] Everything that seems to us, egotistically, that it is in our benefit, it actually is towards our loss. We cannot earn Christ or Hid goods, with any of those things.

[457] The soul himself is a mirror whom the man sees Christ in, if there are not within the soul sins which are identical to stains. And the soul is in the same time a bridegroom seeing the Bridegroom Christ within him. If the soul as mirror is stained, the Bridegroom won't be mirrored in it so that the Bridegroom won't like it. Only if clean of any stain the soul will mirror the Bridegroom, so that the soul will be united with Him as the bride with her Bridegroom, without being confounded to one another. And there is a great joy in this union.

[458] The soul in the Greek language is of feminine gender. This makes it better matching the quality of bride and of female virgin.

following her, the close ones will be brought to you" (Ps. 44: 16[459]). "Will be brought" symbolizes the holy humanization (embodiment), and "her close ones" it symbolizes the fact of getting attached to Him, for their birth through Baptism has renewed their souls of any oldness and the repentance cleans up those souls and it makes them as holy virgins getting rid of all oldness and not even remembering about oldness[460]. That's why they were told: "Listen, daughter, and see, and lean your ear and forgive about your people and about the house of your father; and the Emperor will lust for your beauty" (Ibid[461] 12-13). And they will wonder about him (about the soul, about the virgin, and about the bride) all the heavens' Powers for her cleanness bestowed to her by the repentance that made her of one body with Him[462]. "And they will say: Who is she who climbs, made white like a flower, towards her brother?" (Son of Songs 3: 2).

21. Let's therefore use the whole our power by fighting little by little, until we will disrobe ourselves of the doing of our former man, by guarding us against all the things of the perdition, until His love will unite Him with us and He will remove from us the image of the earthly one and He will imprint His holy image within our heart in order Him to make us worthy of Him and clean of all stains, as the Apostle said: "As we have been bearing the image of the earthly one, so will we bear the image of the heavenly one" (1 Cor. 15: 49). This is for the Apostle knew that there is not man without having sins since the disobedience took place, and the repentance can bring the

[459] In KJB we have: Ps. 45: 14: "She shall be brought unto the king in raiment of needlework: the virgins her companions that follow her shall be brought unto thee."; in ROB we have: Ps. 44: 16: "Virgins will be brought to the Emperor following her, her friends will be brought to you." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[460] The soul's virginity gained by the rebirth it can be an eternal youth, and a permanent non-oldness by removing the "corruption".

[461] In KJB we have: Ps. 45: 10-11: "Hearken, O daughter, and consider, and incline thine ear; forget also thine own people, and thy father's house; // So shall the king greatly desire thy beauty: for he is thy Lord; and worship thou him."; in ROB we have: Ps. 44: 12-13: "Listen daughter and see and lean your ear and forget about your people and about the house of your feather, // For the Emperor lusted for your beauty, for He is your Lord." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[462] The soul made clean bride by repentance, it will be made "one body" with Christ, but a body that doesn't abolish the persons, as Adam and Eva were made a body by God, while they still remained persons. This is an allusion to the Holy Impartation which the believer is becoming one body with Christ without him being lost as differing person.

man back again to the sinless newness[463]; that's why he said that we have forsaken the doing of him who didn't obey the commandment, and we are committing the doing or our Lord Jesus Christ that is the fulfilling of His holy commandments, and Who had mercy on us and He impropriated the man's slavery until He introduced the man into the hidden Paradise and He bestowed to the man, according to the Holy Scriptures, all the virtues, and by that He gave the man to eat out of the tree of life which is the cleanness. This was shown by Himself by reconciling the Cherubs and by stopping the fire sword that was wielding and guarding the road to the tree of life which is the knowledge of His holy words[464]. Through this He reconciled them also within the believers' mind, by ceaselessly guarding those ones and by closing their ears towards any cunning word of the snake, by reminding them about the bitter slavery which they fell before into, in order they not to turn back to that again. On this purpose the repentance makes them ceaselessly give thanks to Him Who has redeemed them through His honored blood and by that He erased the chart of their slavery, while He was on the cross (Col. 2: 14), and He made them His brothers and friends (Jn. 15: 14); and by pouring His Ghost over them, He rested their heart into grace. This is for He said: "I will ascend to My Father and to your Father and My God and your God" (Jn. 20: 17). And again: "I want, Father, that there where I am, they too to be together with Me, for I have been loving them as You too have been loving Me" (Jn. 17: 24).

22. And He also showed us that He didn't tell that about all the people, but only about those who left their wills and who [463] The sinlessness keeps the soul non-obsolete, and being the soul constantly renewed into Christ who keeps always young or new the human nature assumed by the Son of God who is and Who will be Alpha and Omega since ever to eternity, the beginning and the consummation, or the consummation since the beginning.

[464] Adam, after his falling, he was no longer able to eat from the tree of the life, or out of cleanness, because of out of this one cannot feed himself except by remaining united with God Who is the spring of the life without beginning and endless. God and the cleanness and the life are one. Christ reintroduced the human being assumed by Him "in the hidden Paradise", in the unsees Paradise, not in the seen nature but on the spiritually lives plan. In the first place, He introduced the nature assumed by Him into the spiritually lived Paradise, and then He will introduce there them who will unite themselves with Him. But one cannot earn that cleanness - which He introduced the human nature assumed by Him and then on them who are united with Him by faith – without knowing Him and His commandments and without keeping His commandments. This is for in His commandments which are one with His words, there is the way of living of His like man, totally conform to His godlike will.

followed His holy will, and who cut off from them any urge of this world. This is because He said that He took them out of the world. That's why "the world hates them because they no longer are from the world" (Jn. 15: 19). Notice that they who forsook the things of the world are them who have been found worthy to become His brides and who remained in union with Him. The Apostle said that: "That's why the man will leave his father and his mother and they both will be a body. This mystery is great. But I am talking about Christ and the Church" (Eph. 5: 31-32). And the Apostle said again: "The Gentiles are together-inheritors and parts of the same body and partakers to the promise of Christ Jesus through Gospel" (Eph. 3: 6). Notice that His Holy Ghost dwells within them who have been found worthy of becoming a body with Him and His Ghost works within them and He takes care of them, as it was said: "For not you are speaking, but the Ghost of the Father speaks within you" (Mt. 10: 20). And the Apostle says again: "To us God unveiled by His Ghost. This is for the Ghost visits everything, even the deeps of God… And we have the cogitation of Christ" (1 Cor. 2: 10-16). So, how could the cogitation of Christ think at some sin? Understand, brother, therefore, this mystery with your heart, that every breed on earth gives birth with individuals belonging to the same species, either animal or wild beast, either crawling animal or bird. That's why God brought all the creatures to Adam, in order to see if there was something like him. And Adam didn't find anything like him because all of those weren't of his nature. Then God took one of Adam's ribs and made it woman, because He took it out of her man (Gen. 2: 19-21).

23. This is the great mystery of His brides: that they are out of His being by their birth anew and out of His holy body[465]. This is for the Apostle says: "All of us are a body and each of us limbs to one another" (Rom. 12: 5). And again: "We are limbs of His body out of His flesh and out of His bones" (Eph. 5: 30). Notice that He wants the man to be like (according to) Him in everything, like Eva is out of Adam. The souls of them who have the irrationality of the animals, or who have the covetousness of [465] Bringing the woman to existence out of one rib of Adam, it is a symbol of the fact that the new man receives his existence out of the humanity of the Son of God. This is for out of His sinless body we too are born anew. As each of us are born out of his own species, likewise the deified man is born out of the deified humanity of Christ Who the humanity if the most united with the godhead, by belonging to the same Person of the Word of God. The man cannot become a new creature except out of the Son of God made man.

the wild beasts which rob on one another, or the fickleness of the birds, or the venom of the snakes, they cannot be female virgins because of not having their doing according to His doing. Notice, therefore, brother, how the man wants to become like Him, healthy from everything that is contrary to nature, in order the man to become His bride? So, the soul knows his thoughts out of his doing. If the soul fulfills the (due) doing, that soul will know that the Ghost of God dwells within him, for his good doing rebirths the soul as dispassionate; and it is possible that the Ghost of God to dwell within that soul[466]. This is for the Lord said: "If you love Me, you will guard My commandments; and I will pray My Father and He will send you the Comforter, the Ghost of the Truth" (Jn. 14: 15-17). And the Apostle says also: "Don't you know that Christ Jesus dwells within you, except you are worthless?" (2 Cor. 13: 5). You notice that, if the man doesn't achieve the doing of Christ, that man is worthless and that man isn't a female virgin united with Him? All the female virgins have prepared they candles but because of not having the (good) doing they were thrown outside the doors (Mt. 25: 1-12). The fishing net thrown into the sea gathered fish and introduced them in the Kingdom (Mt. 13: 47-48). The tares grew up together with the wheat but, when the harvesting came, the tares were gathered and thrown into the fire (Ibid 25-30). The offshoots remained on the vine but, because of not bringing forth fruits, there were also cast into fire (Jn. 15: 6). The sheep grazed together with the goats, but He introduced only the sheep together with Him, and the goats were thrown outside (Mt. 25: 32-33). The sower sown the same seed of His, but He only enjoyed those seeds which fell sprouted out in the good soil (Mt. 13: 3-9). He gave His silver unhypocritically, but He rejoiced only with him who turned that silver back to Him twofold (Mt. 25: 14-23). All of them were called to the wedding, but He commanded that him who did not have a wedding coat to be thrown into the eternal darkness (Mt. 22: 11-13). These words are ours, for all of us say that we believe, but they who have not the deeds of the His godhead will be throw out by Him, because, as He said: "Many are called, but few are chose" (Ibid 14)[467].

[466] Not by theoretically affirming our faith into Christ or our connection with Christ will the soul know that the Ghost of Christ – namely Christ Himself – dwells within the soul, but the soul knows that out of his deeds which are like the deeds of Christ and which Christ's power is present within. The union between Christ as Bridegroom and the soul as bride can be know out of the soul's deeds, deeds which cannot belong only to the soul but to Christ as well. In these deeds one lives the presence and the work of Christ. This is for the soul realizes that the kindness of these deeds cannot come only out of his own power.

24. Let's examine ourselves, brothers, and let's see our deeds, before encountering Him[468]. Let's not pay attention to those who do the bodily wills of their heart. Otherwise, we will lose a great richness which we could earn in time of need. Let's fight to earn that and let's overlook the things we forsake as belonging to our enemies. Let's know them who made all possible efforts by taking care of the things which perish. They lost the good things and they overlooked the good things and that's why they inherited the Gehenna because of not wanting to walk on the Lord's traces, so that they to be found worthy to become His brides. So, let's fight with tears in front of God, with the pain of our heart and with bitter sighs, in order us not to fall in the shame of those ones. And if the mist has come on the sea and therefore many ships are lost, but other ships will be saved, let's not say that us too we sink like others, but let's strive to strengthen on one another in order us not to get lazy, and let's pray God to help us. There is a truly thick mist on the earth. That's why, let's humble ourselves and let's shout out praying not to be us lost. And him who does so, even if he encounters the storm at sea, the sailors will find others on the ship who strengthen the helmsman. But if the man isn't emptied of all the things that can lose him, he won't be able to save himself out of this sea stirred up with many waves. This is because neither Moses was able to sing to the Lord except after he crossed the sea and he saw the dead of them who wanted to keep them as slaved to the nation of Egypt. After they crossed the sea, for they reached to be free, he said: "Let's ding to the Lord, for He has extolled Himself with great glory, and He threw horse and horseman into the sea" (Exod. 15: 1).

25. So, when the mind will save the feelings of the soul from the wills of the body and the pillar seen by the mind will pass (over those) and it will separate the soul from the body's

[467] Many learn the words of Christ but only few people pass those words into their deeds. And only the deeds change the man, only the deeds imprint into the man the seal of Christ, and the deeds show the man as one who has impropriated the power of Christ, one who has become a clean female virgin united with Him through true love.

[468] If we haven't cleaned ourselves and if we haven't transformed our nature by the power of Christ's power pressed on our nature, we won't encounter Him for we will not have been united with Him.

wills, by seeing God the shamelessness of the passions rushing upon the soul and wanting to keep the soul's feelings into the sin, but the mind has been ceaselessly and hiddenly thinking at God, God will sent His help and He will destroy at once all his enemies, as it was written that God told to Moses: "Why they shout out at Me? Command the sons of Israel to prepare themselves; and you, take your staff in your hand and point it at the sea's water and the sea will dry up" (Exod. 14: 15-16). Faithful is God to give His hand to Mose today too, in order to save the today's Israel from the hands of the Egyptians, which are the will of the mind fulfilled by us, so that us too to be found worthy of singing Him a new song, saying: "Let's sing to the Lord, for He has extolled Himself with glory". But how can we say" He extolled Himself with glory" if we still obey our enemies and we turn back into the Egypt of our will by lusting the food we eat and asking Aaron: "Make goods to us, which to lead us to Egypt" (Exod. 32: 1)? And because we have humiliated ourselves by our laziness to blaspheme the spiritual food? (Num. 21: 5). But powerful is God to turn Moses to us, from the mountain, and Moses to crush the horned calf which we have become through enemies to God. Powerful is God for He has bestowed the repentance to us, in order He to turn us again back to Him and Him to give Moses strength to pray for us, saying: "If You forgive their sins, forgive them. And if not, erase me too from the book of the living" (Exod. 32: 31-32); and may give strength to Jesus at His time, in order Him to crush the seven nations who exhausted the Promised Land with their envious cunningness and so Israel to receive their inheritance in order to dwell that land without envy forever and ever. Amen. His is the power, His is the help, His is the cover, His is the wisdom, and His is the guarding. Himself is within us, our Lord Jesus Christ, towards the glory and the honor of God the Father and of the Holy Ghost, from before ages and now and forever and ever. Amen.

Word Told by Abba Peter, the Disciple of Abba Isaiah, about Things He Heard from Abba Isaiah

1. My Father said: Make yourself strong, in order you to wake up that what must be corrected. The cleanness sprays to God; the fear of God and the tribulation forgive the sins. It is vain that service of that man who has the evilness of the avenge within his heart. Do not want to be you asked for advice or for word for this time, neither trust him who asks you for that[469]. You must ceaselessly have your hearing attentive to them who talk to you and you must pray God to bestow you to know whom of those you must obey to. Out the whole your power into not speaking while having different things within your mind and within your heart. He told me also that throwing oneself in front of God into knowledge and obeying God's commandments with the humble cogitation, they will bring the love and the love will bring the dispassion[470]. He also said that him who appeases himself (the hesychast) must examine himself on all moments, in order him to ascertain if he has crossed over them who keep him into the sky and whether he has been freed from them while still having them around him. This is because, as long as he is submitted to their slavery he still hasn't been liberated. That's why the toil must last until the mercy will come[471]. He also said that that man who has some accusation within his heart, he is far from the mercy of God[472]. I asked him for a word and he told me: If you want to follow our Lord Jesus Christ, you will guard His word; and if you want to hang (crucify) your [469] The pleasure for being asked for advising it hides in it a pride. Do not trust him who asks you for advice, because he could do that aiming at flattering you, and also because there is the danger to allow yourself to be tempted by the vain-glory.

[470] The humble cogitation by throwing oneself in front of God, it will bring the love and the love will bring the lack of passions. This is for him who humbles himself in front of God, he will no longer love on himself, but he will love God and his fellow humans. And in the love, there is not passion. This is because in any passion there is the egotistical love for oneself.

[471] Only the mercy of God gets us rid of temptations, namely of the toils for overcoming the temptations. Not every toil of ours bring is the mercy, but the mercy will bring us to its resting end. Let's therefore strive not to trust our toil, because we must trust only the mercy of God.

[472] How will God have mercy on someone who ahs not mercy on his neighbor, but he accuses his neighbor? You won't be able to feel the mercy of God if you do not live your mercy on others.

former man together with Him, you smut cut off your will and you must prepare yourself for accepting the contempt form them who despise you and for resting the heart of them who hurt you; sand you must humble yourself and you smut master your wills and you must keep your mouth shut in order you not to judge anybody. He said also that he who is in quietude (hesychia), he must have the fear of encountering God before his last breath. This is for, as long as the sin still darkens his heart, the fear of God won't occur within him and he still is far from His mercy[473].

2. He also said that we will still be in toil as long as we have the dispassion within our mouth but we have the lawlessness and the evilness within our heart[474]. He also said that if the man doesn't fight to his death to make his body as the body of our beloved Jesus when He came among us, he won't encounter Him into joy and neither he gets it out of the bitter slavery. And he was saying: Have mercy on me, have mercy on me, have mercy on me! In what cleanness was him created and under what mastery he is and which vanity has been tied into[475]. Haq also said: "I pray you, for as long as you still are into your body, you not to lose your heart. This is because, as the plowman cannot trust any of the fruits growing up in his field because he doesn't know what will be with that fruits until they will have been locked up in his storehouse, likewise the man cannot lose his heart ads long as he still breathes" (Job 27: 3). And as the man doesn't know what passion will come in his way, until his last breath, it is impossible to the man to lose his heart as long as he still breathes, but the man must always shout out towards God by asking for His help and mercy[476].

[473] There where the fear of God is, there will come His mercy too. The fear must be ceaseless and anticipating the grace as the breath of the man. And the fear is opposite to the sin, and vice versa.

[474] Ww will have taken a step towards cleanness when we have reached the lack of passion in our words, but we still have sinful thoughts within our heart.

[475] We won't be able to encounter Jesus if we do not fight until our death to make our body dispassionate, as Christ assumed it. In what cleanness was the body created and under what mastery of the passions the body has fallen! Our body is no longer a means which we can know God through, and which us to commits only the good through.

[476] As long as we live, we must not allow our heart to be lost – in the moral meaning – by doing the evil. And as the heart remains alive within us – in the biological meaning – while we still breathe, we must pray God for His help and mercy, until our death.

I asked him, saying: "What is, Father, the humble cogitation and what give birth to it?". And he told me that the humble cogitation it the obedience and the cutting off of the won will with humbleness, tirelessly, and it is the cleanness and the enduring the condemnation (the reproaches) and enduring the neighbor's word without difficulty. And he also said: "Blessed is him who has achieved the new man before encountering Christ". This is for the Apostle said: "Flesh and blood cannot inherit the Kingdom of God" (1 Cor. 15: 50)[477]. And he said also: "Until you have among you the envy and the strife, aren't you bodily and don't you walk according to the man?" (1 Cor. 3: 3). And he also said that the reason why we are into so much toils towards our enemies, it is because we do not know exactly our shortcomings, neither have we known the crying into knowledge. But when the crying will have been unveiled to us, it will show us our sins[478]. And we were allowed (by enemies) we would get ashamed of looking at the face of those who guide us because they are mor honorable than we are. And they who make out of their sins a motif for daring, they do not know about God. But our hearts see themselves living together with those ones their sins. He also said that he who endures his defamation and who obeys his will to his neighbor for God, in order him not to allow the enemy to come in the middle, he shows himself as working[479]. This is for, if one has his mind awake and if the is under the feet of Jesus into knowledge, he will strive to cut off his will in order him not to be separated form His beloved Lord[480]. This is because him who [477] The encounter with Christ which is being mentioned here, it is that future encounter from the Kingdom of Heavens. But the birth of the new man which it is said about that it must take place before encountering Christ, it doesn't mean that the man can achieved only by himself. This too is the result of an "encounter" with Christ.

[478] Something else is the crying by and large, and something else is crying for our sins; the last sort of crying is a crying which we overcome our sin through, while some other sorts of crying can be because we regret who knows which worldly losses.

[479] When you affirm your will against your neighbor you will allow the enemy to divine you, and also to dive you and possibly your neighbor too, from God. This is for God cannot be there where the enemy is, the enemy who divides the people from one another and from God. And the man is active or he shows more power not there where he affirms his will, but there where he doesn't affirm his will.

[480] The awake mind is that one that know what the man truly benefits of. And the awake mind has the knowledge that it is beneficial to the man to sit down at the feet of Jesus, and to follow Jesus by doing Jesus's will, in order the man to be in union with Jesus and with his fellow humans, for rejoicing of all the things given him by them, in exchange for his surrender. The keeps his will, he won't be at peace either with the believers. And this is because the indifference and the anger and the wrath upon the brother, it follows his heart (will). And he who says: "I do not care for what I hear or for what I speak", he likens the blind who doesn't see the light regardless he is brought in the light or removed from the light. You must understand this from this sun, that even a little cloud appearing under the sun it will cover the sunlight and it will stop the sun's warmth. But these things aren't obvious to everybody, but only to them who have knowledge[481]. And he also said that that man who sees his sins he won't have tongue to speak to any man.

3. He also said: You must hate all the things form the world and the bodily resting. This is because these ones make you an enemy to God. This is for as the man who has an enemy he fights his enemy, likewise we must fight our body by not letting our body to rest[482]. And he also said: That worker who works and who loves God, he must pay attention to any thought of his and he must take counsel with his thoughts and he must discern among his thoughts. He must know whether those thoughts come or not from his body. This is because, as long as the things contrary to nature still are reigning within one of his limbs, he will not be reckoned as a female-virgin[483]. I asked him also: What is the prayer from the Gospel: "Hallowed be Your name" (Mt. 6: 9). And he said: This prayer belongs to the consummate ones because it will be impossible to the hallowed the name of God within us until we still are mastered by passions. And he also said that our old fathers said that the mind of that man knows that that what separated him from Jesus and from the people it is the affirmation of his will, in opposition to the will of Jesus and of his neighbor.

[481] You cannot be indifferent to what you year of to what you speak. This is one with the blindness. It will leave you into darkness. And it cannot come to you except from the sin that places itself, as a cloud, between you and the sunlight. The evilness that is in this indifference it is obvious only to them who, by overlooking their sin, the have reached that knowledge of what is good and of what is evil.

[482] That body that likes the comfort brought by the world it will become an enemy to God. And by that the body is enemy to the man too. This is because, if the man only searches for bodily pleasures, he will lose the eternal happiness. So, the man must fight his body that makes him enemy to God and therefore his own enemy too, in order the man not to allow himself to be mastered by such perishing pleasures and comfort.

[483] The virginity, or the souly and bodily cleanness, it is the natural state of the man. And such a man is loved by God as a virgin-bride. He is united with God. So, the union with God is the according-to-nature state of the man, and the dirty agitation is unnatural to the man.

withdrawal (form the world) it is a running away of the body and it is a cogitation at death. He also said about the peace with our neighbor that there where is not peace neither God wont' dwell there, and he who doesn't see his sins he won't see the peace either. This is because not the dwelling place where one dwells it will bring him the forgiveness of his sins, but his humble cogitation will do that[484]. This is because David says, after he fell into the sin towards Urijah, that he didn't' find anything to bring as sacrifice to God for his sin, except that what he said: "Sacrifice to God, humiliated ghost, a defeated and humble heart" (Ps. 5: 18[485]). He also said that the indifference and the defamation of somebody will disturb him understanding by not allowing him to see the light of God.

He also said: Use the whole your power in order you to get rid of these three passions of yours which kill the souls: the earning, the honoring, and the resting. This is because of these three ones by surrounding the soul, they won't allow the soul to thrive. He said also: When you sit within your monastic call and you feel the urge to judge your neighbor, you will judge him by taking in account your sins and by cogitating at the fact that your sins are graver than his sins. And if you reckon that you have done the right things, you still won't reckon that those good things done by you have been pleasant to God. This is for, everything that is strong within body it will come temporarily after the body has been helpless and after having taking care of that, and it says that it has a connection with that what is helpless and it commiserates with that helplessness, until that [484] The withdrawal from the world is like some sort of anticipated death. But, as I said before, the withdrawal must not be understood in an Origenistic manner as a contempt addressed to the world as an existence created by God for the man's growth, but one must despise the world as used egotistically for perishing pleasures as reckoned the only purpose of the human life. This is for, immediately after urging one to withdraw himself from within the world, Abba Isaiah praises the peace with the neighbor. Only where the peace is there is God too. And the peace is not only a negative absence but it is also a positive state: a joy for doing good to your neighbor. This is for in that peace dwells God. "Love on one another as I loved you" says Christ. Not dwelling a place situated far away from the world will bring the man's elevation above the egotism's sins, but the humble cogitation does that, and the humble cogitation cannot be shown except in the relationships with the people.

[485] In KJB we have: Ps. 51: 17: "The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit: a broken and a contrite heart, O God, thou wilt not despise."; in ROB we have: Ps. 50: 18: "The sacrifice of God: the humiliated ghost; the defeated and humble heart God won't curse it." (E. l. t.'s n.)

helplessness will get healed[486]. He who has a callous heart he will say within his heart: "I have never mistaken". And he who has achieved the humble cogitation he endures the critique coming from his neighbor, saying: "Yes, I have mistaken". But he who despises this, he has within his heart the thought that he is wise and that he has never offended anybody in anything. But he who has the fear of God, he will take care of virtues so that none of them to be lost.

He also said: If you sit within your monastic cell and if you fulfill your service to God in silence and your heart is gained by something that is not of God and if you start cogitating that that isn't a sin, but those ones are only thoughts and not sins, neither the service (liturgy) officiate by you in silence will be a true service. And if you say that God accepts the service (the liturgy) of your heart done by you in silence, namely also the fact that your heart had reconciled itself with the sin, your silence will be reckoned as a sin in front of God[487]. He also said about the Holy Impartation (Holy Communion): "Woe to me, woe to me, because I have communion with God's enemies, so what communion could I have with God? So, I am being imparted towards my judgment and towards my damnation". We say this word by saying: "Hollies of the hollies", namely the holy things are given to the saints. So, if I am saints, who are those working within me? I asked him also: "What the fear of God is?". and he told me: It is that state of that man who realizes that he is together with somebody who is not God[488]. I asked him: "What the servant of God is?", and he told me that, because somebody serves to his passions, he won't be reckoned as the servant of God, but he is the servant of his passion which he is addicted to. He also said: "Woe me, woe me, woe me, for I fought to clean myself in order I to be [486] Even in the moral aspects, when the man is strong then he is weak. These states follow to one another as some temporary states, so that when the man feels himself strong, he feels mercy for that what is weak within himself, until that weakness will get healed.

[487] It is recommended to the monk not to reconcile himself during his prayer even with those thoughts which, though not passing into deeds, they do not refer to God, even though the monk reckons those thoughts as not being sins. The monks must not only reckon such thoughts of his as sins, but he must also reckon as sins even the service of his prayer united with the silence about those thoughts.

[488] In Evergetinos, the Book no. 7, chapter no. 7, it is explained: "That man who is convinced that he is together with God, he won't have the fear of God".

partaker to mercy"[489]. Woe to me, woe to me, because I haven't been fighting to defeat the war wages to me by my enemies, in order I to reign together with Christ. This is for, how could the enemy get closer to the Emperor? Woe to me, woe to me, because I stay around Your name Lord, while I am serving to Your enemies. Woe to me, woe to me, because I am eating the things which disgust my God and that's why He doesn't heal me". I visited him when he was ill and he was suffering very much, and by looking at the sadness of my heart for his pain, he told me: Only by getting closer, through this helplessness, I can think at that bitter time. This is for it searches for his strength in order to become enemy to God. This is for that tree that is watered daily, it won't get withered and it will bring forth fruits[490].

He also said that the man needs a manly and strong heart, in order the man to take care of and to keep the commandments of God. he also said: "Woe to me, woe to me, because I have my accusers in front of me, both those whom I know and whom I do not know, and how will I be able to encounter my Lord and His saints, because of my enemies not allowing any of my limbs to be whole in front of God". I also asked him: "What must do him who appeases himself?". And he told me that: "He who appeases himself (the hesychast) needs these three: the ceaseless fear, the continuous asking, and to never lose his heart". He also said that that man who appeases himself he must guard himself against hearing any useless word, because otherwise he will lose his toil. He also said about Abba Serapion that he was asked by a father: "Please tell me: how do you see yourself?". And Abba Serapion answered that he is like one being inside a tower and looking outside and asking the passersby not to come close to him. And the father who asked Abba Serapion told him: "I am seeing myself like one who has surrounded himself with a wall and I have completed that wall with iron plates so that, if somebody knocks on them, I not to find out who that one is, or where he has come from, or what he wants, and I don't open to him until he leaves". And he also said: "If one searches for the Lord with the pain of his heart, the [489] He who doesn't fight for cleaning himself of the passion of his egotism, he won't pray to God to make him partaker to His mercy. This is because of such a man forgets about the fact he needs God's mercy, because of him reckoning that he earns that what he needs by himself.

[490] We mut water daily the tree of our heart with the thinking at God, in order not to get it withered or, otherwise, it won't bring forth fruits.

Lord will hear him if the asks into knowledge and if he take care, with the pain of his heart, and if he isn't tied to anything from the things of the world, but he fearfully takes care of his soul in order him to bring his soul unimpeded in front of the judgment chair of God, according to his power".

The Word no. 27

About the Urge: "Take Heed at Yourself"

1. Take heed at yourself in detail, while courageously cogitating at our Lord Jesus Christ Who is God and Who has an untold glory and greatness and Who made Himself an example for us in order us to walk on His traces by following us the manner which He overwhelmingly humbled Himself for us, by taking an image of a servant (Phil. 2: 6) and Who deprived Himself and Who despised the shame and Who endure the many and ugly insults, as it was written: "as a sheep for stabbing He brought Himself and as a voiceless lamb in front of him who sheers Him He didn't open His mouth. Into His humbleness His judgment was elevated" (Isa. 53: 7-8). And He endured His death for us with, while He was submitted to many insults. For His commandments, let's too assertively endure because of our sins, if one curses us of speaks against us justly or unjustly, and, if we ought to say this again, all the way to our death. And if we are taken to stabbing like a sheep, let's show us like being an animal, by not opposing that at all, but rather, if we can, let's comfort them who do that to us, and if not, let's be totally silent with much humbleness.

2. Take heed at yourself in details, and believe that the insults and the dishonors which are brought to you for the Lord, they will be a great earning to you, and that by enduring those with the whole your heart and non-disturbingly, they will be a great gain and salvation to your soul. Cogitate day and night: "I ought to suffer even more, because of my sins, and I rejoice myself for the fact of being found worthy of suffering for my sins and for enduring for Christ troubles and dishonors, so that through a certain lowering I to be made follower to the sufferings of my God". And each time you remember them who troubled you, you will pray for them with the whole your soul, as for people who have provided you with truly great earnings of your soul, and do not speak-against them at all[491].

3. Take heed at you in details, in order you to reject and to hate, as a death and as an increased perdition, the whole love for mastery and the whole vain-glory and the lusting for the honors and for praises from people and the reckoning that you are somebody, or that you have achieved a virtue, or that you are better than another. And cut off from yourself the whole ugly lust and pleasure of your body, to the tiniest degree; do likewise to your will for unnecessarily knowing somebody, or to touch a body, or to eat even very little food untimely, so that by preserving yourself and by assuring yourself through the slam things you to not fall into the big mistakes, neither by despising the unimportant things you to gradually fall.

4. Take heed at yourself in details, in order you to have yourself with the whole your soul and truly as the least one, and the most sinner one, and humbler than all Christians, and you to always have your soul crying and getting humbler and sighing. And you will always keep your silence and you won't talk except when needed, as an unworthy and as a stupid one.

5. Take heed at yourself, by remembering and by having in front of your eyes the eternal fire and the eternal torments and them who have been condemned and who are pained there and reckon yourself as rather one among them than among the living ones.

6. Take heed at yourself, in details, by knowing that our Lord died and resurrected for us, and with His blood He redeemed us, in order you no longer top live to yourself but to our Lord Who dies and Who resurrected for us, and you to assertively believe that you always stand in front of Him and He looks at your heart[492].

7. Take a detailed heed at yourself in order you to always be ready to obey the will of God, by knowing that either the life of the rath of some troubles are waiting for you. You mut know this with much assertiveness and with much faith and wait for [491] Praying God for them who have done evil to you, for they have helped you to be saved by imitating Christ, it is the supreme state of the forgiveness.

[492] If he redeemed with His all-precious blood form the slavery of the death, we will live the escape from our death only due to Him, namely as being His. And Him Who spilled His blood and Who resurrected for each of us, in order Him to see us how we use the resurrected life, or the life destined to resurrection, that He has given to us. He looks right within our heart in order Him to see what thoughts we have regarding Him.

big and fearsome temptations coming upon you; and wait for troubles and for torments and for the fearsome death which could come upon you.

8. Take a detailed heed at yourself in order you to prove yourself, in the first place, as the smallest one in everything you want to say or to do or to meet somebody or to eat or to drink or to sleep or to do everything you want, whether that is according to God, and so you will confess yourself to God in all your things, in order you to have a strong connection with Him and much daring towards Him[493].

9. Teke a detailed heed at yourself, because if somebody troubled you in anything and that brings you upset and anger, you smut keep your silence and you must not say anything contrary to what is appropriate to say, until your heart will get tamed through prayer and thus you will comfort your brothers[494]. And if the need occurs for you to rebuke your brother, and you see within you anger and agitation, you won't talk anything to him in order you not to get even more disturbed, but when you see yourself in peace and gentleness, than you talk to him, and not as one rebuking him but as one remembering him that what he said, with the whole humbleness.

10. Take a detailed heed at yourself, as one waiting for the temptation to come on each moment, either towards death or towards troubles and great dangers. And by enduring the temptation with assertiveness and without disturbance, you will [493] Before doing anything, let's thing whether that this is according to the will of God and which is the real reason why we feel the urge to do that thing. Let's confess openly in front of God about any word, or deed, or meeting, or food, or resting, or anything else coming into your mind and urging you to fulfill it. You must not start doing anything before thinking whether or not that is by the will of God, in order you not to be sorry after doing it. This means being in a dialogue with God regarding everything, not only after committing something, but before doing anything. Yu must not allow yourself to be driven only by your personal thought coming to your mind. You must not feel by yourself even for an instant. Whether God sees in advance that what you follow to do, ask God about everything you think at doing. By doing so, you will be in a permanent relationship with God, and you will be daring in the answer you are going to give for your deeds.

[494] In this place, after the note of monk Augustine there is also Abba Ammon, being mentioned at Abba Zosimus, in Codex Sinaiticus no. 449 dating from the Century X, f. 26 a. Ammon is one of the Fathers from the Egyptian Paterikon who was contemporary to Anthony and had a relationship with him.

think at the fact that "through many troubles we must enter the Kingdom of Heavens" (Acts 14: 22)[495].

11. Take a detailed heed at yourself that if something has happened to you, either by word or by deed, either by cogitation, you must not try to impose your will, neither must you search for your resting, but you smut find out with exactness what the will of God is and to fully fulfill God's will, despite being shown as requiring much tiredness. And thus, you must truly endure that for the Kingdom of Heavens and you smut try to fulfill that with the whole your heart, for that is more useful to you than all the human cogitation. This is for the commandment of God is the eternal life "and they who search for Him won't lack the whole good" (Ps. 33: 10[496]).

122. Take a detailed heed at yourself as one who always is in front of God, in order you not to hope anything from anybody, except from Him with faith. And if you need something, pray to God for your need to be fulfilled according to His will, through the things He wants. And you must always thank as to Him Who has fulfilled you need. And if you lack anything, do not trust any man, neither you should get sad, not should you speak-against somebody, but you must endure that with assertiveness and undisturbed, thinking: "I am worthy of many troubles for my sins, but if God wants, He will have mercy on me". And by thinking thus, God will fulfill all your needs[497].

13. Take a detailed heed at yourself in order you not to receive anything if you are not assured that God has sent that to you out of the righteous fruits, and thus you will receive that with the whole peace. And the things you see coming to you out of injustice, or out of fight, or by cunningness, you must reject them and throw them away, by thinking that "better is a little [495] Do not expect to have a comfortable life, because not through such a life one advances towards the Kingdom of Heavens, as neither Christ opened the Kingdom of Heavens to Himself like man by having a comfortable life.

[496] In KJB we have: Ps. 34: 10: "The young lions do lack, and suffer hunger: but they that seek the Lord shall not want any good thing."; in ROB we have: Ps. 33: 10: "The rich people became poor and they hungered, and they who search for the Lord won't be deprived of any good." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[497] When troubles come to you, you must not speak-against, but you must reckon those troubles as coming upon you because you are worthy of those troubles, and you must also think that those troubles will help you to avoid committing future sins.

piece with the fear of God, than many treasuries with injustice" (Prov. 15: 16)[498].

14. Take a detailed heed at yourself and force yourself to get accustomed to the silence, in order God to give you the power to fight and get accustomed to it[499]. And if the need for speaking occurs to you and you first test that within yourself whether or not that is a blessed and wanted by God need, so that you should rather speak that keep your silence, you will open your mouth with fear of God and with tremble, while keeping your face downwards and having your word honoring and obedient. Thus, if you come across somebody, you will talk to him a little, for love, and then you will quickly become silent. And if you are asked about something, you will silent as much as it takes, and say as much as you need, but you won't speak anything more than that[500].

15. Take a detailed heed at yourself, so that as you get yourself far from deeds of cunningness, likewise you to restrain the lust of your eyes and of your hearing, of your mouth and of you touching, in order you to always have your eyes paying attention to yourself and to your handwork, and you must not look at somebody else if you don't see a blessed need for that. And, by and large, you won't look at a beautiful man or woman without needing that. Do not allow your ears to hear somebody uttering useless words; and keep your mouth silent, and, by

[498] Do not accept any escape from trouble, or any easing of your life as coming through an unjust deed of yours or of another. It is preferable a smaller thing coming to you through an honest deed of yours, but out of the fear of God, than a bigger good coming to you on a dishonest way.

[499] You must fight to getting yourself accustomed to silence, in order you to achieve the power to get accustomed to it. God won't give you any virtue if you do not fight for that virtue. But neither will you be able to gain any virtue if God doesn't help you. In all the good things there is a collaboration between God and man.

[500] Abba Isaiah recommended very much the silence to the monk. The silence means reflection at the mystery of God and at the mystery of the own person. The human person communicated by speaking but also by silence. By both speaking and silence the human person lives and makes to be lived the light and light's mystery. It suffices to me to see the human person cogitating in order I to realize not only the human person's mystery but also the human person's luminous light. Bu silence the human person sinks not only in her/his mystery but also into her/his and God's light. The person speaking all the time and not interrupting the speaking with cogitation, that person will fall into a superficial much-verbosity. And the big mystery and the big light are from God. In silence is shown the feeling of the presence of God as inexhaustible mystery and light. There where isn't God, there won't be either inexhaustible mystery and light; in such a case one can have the impression that everything can be understood and that everything can be comprised with the own mind.

and large, do won't allow your mouth to speak if not needed. If you know these things, my beloved one, put the whole your power in taking care of them, in order God to cover you at the time of temptation. Amen.

The Word no. 28

About the Branches of the Evilness

1. It is necessary one to speak about the branches of the evilness, in order the man to know what the passions that separated him from God is, and in order the man to pray God's kindness for each of them, in order the God's help to be shown together with the man and God to give power to the man until the man will disrobe himself of his passions. This is because the passions are wounds within the man's soul and they separate the man from God[501]. So, blessed is him who disrobes himself of his passions. In this case he will be like a speaking sheep received on God's altar, and he will hear the joy-giver-voice of the Lord: "Well done, you good and faithful servant! You have been places over a few things and I will place you over many things. Ener the joy of your Lord" (Mt. 25: 21). So, they who want to fulfill their wills according to their body and who do not want to heal themselves through the holy healing of the repentance so that they to become clean, they will find themselves disrobed of the coat of the virtues at the time of the need[502] and they will be thrown into the outer darkness[503], [501] The passions separate the man from God because of the passion locking the man up into his egotism.

[502] The passions are wounds of the soul. The separation from God brought by passions to the soul, it won't allow the soul in a simple state of neutrality, but they make the soul ill by the wounds they cause to the soul. The man who is addicted to his passions he doesn't only wound others but he would himself too. Such a man is below his normal state that is according to the nature. Such a man is in diverse painful helplessness. The repentance is the force that heals him, for in repentance there is God's power too. And by repentance the man is elevated above his passions and he is dressed up into the coat of the virtues, and this shows again that the man cannot be in a neutral state, but the man is dressed up either in passions or in virtues. And neither of them is simple external covers, but they are either ugly or beautiful shapes imprinted into the soul. They who aren't found at the final judgment as not-covered by the shiny shapes of their virtues, but they have been imprinted by the non-understanding cogitations of their passions, they will be thrown into the darkness of the Gehenna, according there where the devil is dressed with the coat of the passions which are: the debauchery, the lust, the love for money, the speaking-against, the anger, the envy, the vain-glory, and the haughtiness. These ones are the branches of the evilness and many other similar to these: the unrestraint, the adorning of the body, the scattering, the laziness, the joking words, the shameless looking at something, the love for self-extending, the unconsciousness, the disregarding of God's judgment, the envying of the neighbor, the lying against your neighbor, the will to be pleasant to people, the liar testimony, the liar knowledge[504], the will for teaching others, the will for loving the worldly need, the lack of courage, the incapacity of enduring the hatred from the neighbor, the incapacity for enduring the critique, the love for glory from the people more than the glory from God, the will for showing your work in order you to be extolled by people, the love for pleasant foods, the desire for love for satisfying the body's needs, the getting offended because of not being appreciated, the desire for being praised for knowledge, the enticing of others, the affirmation of your will, the reckoning of yourself as sapient and kind, the reckoning of your brother as stupid and despising him.

2. All of these are worked within the poor soul until they will separate the soul from God. And these ones are heavy burdens bore by Adam too after he ate form the tree. These to their own darkness. This is because one who doesn't understand the reality of the loving communion with God and with the fellow humans, she/he is in an internal darkness that is prolonged outside her/him as a hell. The doomsday is called as "the time of the need" because nothing could get the man rid od his damnation given him then. The man will have lost the whole his freedom.

[503] The hell's darkness and torments are "the outer darkness", because of that being the poorest area of the existence and they who reach there won't understand anything from the meaning of their existence.

[504] The lair knowledge isn't a real knowledge, but it still gives one the impression that it is a real knowledge. The passions conquer by giving the impression of sustaining the man's life, while they actually not only don't sustain the man's life but they eve weakens the man's life. So, the passions do not destroy the existence totally. This is because God no longer destroy the angels and the people He created, but He allows them to use the features given to them, but that don't bring progress to them but it keeps them in a tormented existence. The liar knowledge continues to give the impression that it is a knowledge of the reality, due to the fact that the liar knowledge doesn't actually take the man totally out of reality, but the liar knowledge crooks the reality so that that reality will no longer be the real reality but it will be a crooked reality, a reality that will have become darkness, but right that darkness still have a certain reality, but that reality – as it will be said further on - is a minor reality, or a lame reality, but it is taken as a supreme and whole reality.

things those which it was said about: "This One took our helplessness and He bore our illnesses" (Isa. 53: 4). These ones are those killed by our Lord Jesus Christ on His cross[505]. These ones are the old skin-vessels which the new wine is put in (Mt. 9: 17). These are the strips which Lazarus was tied in (Jn. 11: 43). These ones are the devils sent by Christ into the herd of pigs (Mt. 8: 31-32)[506]. This is the former man whom the Apostle told about that we have been disrobed of (2 Cor. 5: 4). These things are those which he said about: "The flesh and the blood wont' inherit the Kingdom of God" (1 Cor. 15: 50). This is that what he says about: "Because if you live according to your body, you will die" (Rom. 8: 18). These ones are the tares which Adamn's field brought forth after He had been banished from Paradise.

And the burden of Christ is light: it is the non-getting-angry, the cleanness, the kindness, the gentleness, the joy of the ghost, the restraining of the passions, the love for everybody, the holy discernment (the holy right-reckoning), the steadfast faith, the enduring of the troubles, the seeing of oneself as stranger within the world, the will for getting out of the body and for encountering Christ[507]. These ones are the light burdens which Christ has commanded us to bear. This is the way which the saints endure on many toils until reaching Him[508]. These ones cannot be gained by somebody without disrobing himself of his former man and without liberating himself and without achieving the love. Only the love makes one [505] Christ, by receiving the death and by killing the death, He has killed our weaknesses assumed by Him. This is for He resurrected without those.

[506] Our passions tie us up souly, as the strips lied the Lazarus's dead body. The passions originate in demons and the passions aren't present except there where the demons are present too, and the passions are sustained within people by demons. Only Christ assumed the passion willingly and the passions were kept within Him as irreproachable passions, and that's why His passion could have been abolished through His death.

[507] This is a clear difference between the Christian teaching and Origenism: in the Christian faith one doesn't only desire for her/his soul to leave her/his body, as if the body wouldn't belong to human being's nature, but the getting out from the present body and the encounter with Christ in His resurrected body, with the hope for resurrecting in His likeness, for resurrecting in the body rid of passions, like the body of Christ. But neither the Son of God reached that body except by assuming the earthly body and by fighting on earth against the weaknesses which the mankind fell into by Adam's sin.

[508] In the Greek test we have "to her". This is because out way isn't from the beginning the light yoke of Christ, or of the sinless passions, but in the beginning, it is a heavier yoke mixed with temptations which require us big efforts in order us to overcome them. This is what is said in the following rows.

worriless in everything[509]. But it is impossible such a love to dwell within us until we still love something from within the present world[510]. This is for it was written: "You cannot hare both the Lord's and the devil's table" (1 Cor. 10: 21). But what does Isaiah say: "Who will herald you the eternal place? he who walks into righteousness, he who tells the right way, he who hates the lawlessness and the injustice, he who shuns his hands from receiving gifts, he who shuns his ears in order not to hear the blood's judgments, he who closes his eyes up not to see the injustice – that one will dwell into the high-ceiling cave of hard stone; he will be given bread and drinking water" (Isa. 33: 14-16).

Do you see the honor given by God to them who fight during this short time and who have disrobed themselves of the burden of the present world by enduring the troubles? Do you see the help from God collaborating with them who have cut off their wills and how the help from God erases from within them all their passions for they follow God's will[511]? And they who keep their wills and who want to fulfill their wills, they start working (with their ghost) but they won't be able to resist their enemies, because by wanting to fulfill their own wills they fulfill them within their body and that's why the make all their efforts to be vain and useless. That's why Prophet Isaiah condemns them, saying: "Cursed is everyone who does the Lord's things with indifference" (Jer. 31: 10). You must notice that God doesn't collaborate with them who want to serve to their passions, but God leaves them with their will and God surrenders them in the hands of those who hate them and instead of the honor they are searching from people they will receive the damnation because of not resisting their enemies until God to come and to help them and to humble them. But [509] The full love brings the total lack of worries. He who has reached such a love he will no longer be scared by anything, and he won't be bothered by anything. He won't have any worry about the things happening to him in the future.

[510] Until one still loves the realities from the present world he won't have the full love. This is for one cannot consummately love something that us non-consummate. And the worry of not having forever the things provided by the world it shows, at its turn, that I cannot fully love the things from within world.

[511] God collaborates with them who do not keep their will that separated them from God. They work, but they work as God wants them working. Only thus, God can cut off their passions. This is because their will sustains their egotism it also sustains their passions. And he who is mastered by his passions, he works for his passions, or for his passions' egotism.

without effort and tiredness and pain, the man won't be heard by God – as all the Scriptures say.

4. Let's therefore pray God's kindness, with the whole care of our heart, with tears and with enduring the evil, and by obeying to all people for the Lord, as to ones who are superior to us. "Let's not pay back evil for evil" (Rom. 12: 7). Let's not think within our heart anything evil about anyone, but by being all of us in one heart, let's not say about anything from the world needed by our body that "this is mine"; let's neither measure ourselves with our mind, daily, where we have started from and where we have reached. Let's guard our mind against cogitating any uncleanness and let's shun our body from anything that is too much, in order the body not to asks us for satisfying its passions, and in order the body to get humble towards the soul, and in order our soul to obey our mind and so our soul to become a bride clean of any other thought and our soul to call upon her Bridegroom, saying: "Let my little brother descend into his garden and to eat the fruits of his trees" (Son of Songs 4: 1). Let's therefore fight, brothers, for by having this daring in front of Him to hear Him saying: "There where I am, I want them to be too, so that they too to be together with Me, for I have been loving them, as My Father has been loving Me. You into Me and I into them" (Jn. 17: 23-24). The Holy and of-one-Being and without beginning Trinity can have mercy on us, so that us to find forgiveness with His saints on the judgment day. This is for His is the glory and the mastery forever and ever. Amen.

Lamentations

1. Woe to us, lovers of pleasure, and shortly living on earth, because, due to the passing lust of our body, we cannot see the glory of the Lord. Woe to us because the rottenness wont' inherit the incorruptibility[512], but we still despise the [512] "The flesh and the blood cannot inherit the Kingdom of God, neither the rottenness inherits the incorruptibility" (1 Cor. 15: 50). If we do not strive to advance towards the spiritualized body, we won't inherit the incorruptibility of the body of Christ. This is because, despite the incorruptibility by insanely tarrying into corruption. Woe to us because we feed our body with sins until it will reach to be (eternal) decomposing and full of puss food to the worms and because we do not fear the fire that will immortally torment the body, neither we fear the unsleeping worm. Woe to us, because they who love Christ among Christians bow down and kiss our body defiled by uncleanness, and we are "whitewashed tombs" (Mt. 23: 27), and we bear with us the bringer-of-death sin[513]. Woe to us, because by not restraining us from unimportant things and delectations, we strengthen within us the birth-giver-power of the seed and by that we lawlessly entice ourselves towards the mating of the bodies. Woe to us, because we do not compare the corruption to incorruptibility and that's why we despise the godlike and fearful justice[514]. Woe to us, because we are indifferent to the good things, but we are zealous and craving for the evil things. Woe to us, because of having made our body that is able to master the eternal light, as able to receive the eternal darkness[515]. Woe to us, because the Son of God made Himself man, He who is of-one-being with the Father, "He had nowhere to lean His head on" (Mt. 8: 20) within us, thought He has humanized Himself for us, while the foxes or the evil and cunning ghosts have made dens within us[516]. Woe to us, for they who are righteous in their heart they present their souls unstained and their holy bodies undefiled to the Judge, while us, because of having our souls stained and our bodies unclean, we are waiting for the condemnation to the eternal torments.

body from the hell won't totally disappear either, they will suffer certain sorts of torments which are characteristic to the corruptible bodies: the pains caused by the burning fire, or by pricks, or by the work of the worms.

[513] It seems to be about the bowings down made by Christians in front of the body of the dead one and about kissing him, thought the dead one take his sins with him.

[514] We do not see that, within us, there grows in the same time with the incorruptibility the rottenness as well, and the rottenness will take us to the total death and not to the godlike right-judgment. So, we think that there won't be a judgment of God which to give us, or with to eternally pay us for our deeds committed by us while living on earth.

[515] We see this starting to occur while still being us in the earthly life. Despite us being able to grow up into the light of a meaning of the existence, we grow up into the darkness of a lack-of-meaning, being us deluded by the short pleasure offered us by the passing earthly life.

[516] It was appropriate to our nature given us by God, us to become eternal churches of the Son of God Who embodied Himself on that purpose. But instead of that, we have made ourselves dens of the evil ghosts or tool of the ugly temptations. And what is even more than that, we reckon this as an own feature. We reckon the dirt and cleanness, and the darkens and luminous light. But in this too, it is shown that we are made for cleanness and for light.

2. Woe to us, because we are worthy of insults and lusting for all uncleanness, but we ask for the honoring due to saints. Woe to us, because of being us condemned and accountable for many sins, we still move as ones who are clean and free, among the saints and innocents. Woe to us, because we are full of guilts, we advise and we guide them who different much from us. Woe to us, because we have the log in our eye (Mt. 7: 3-5), but we blame our brothers even for the most unimportant or their mistakes, as we would be undefiled. Woe to us, because we tie up on others the heavy and unbearable burdens (Mt. 23: 4) while us don't want to touch those burdens even by a finger claiming that we are weak in our body. Woe to us, because we forsake the godlike monastic work in order to rush ourselves to teach others the working virtue. Woe to us, because we forget about our older sins while we don't fight or cry even our fresh sins. Woe to us because we started well by the grace and help from God, but we have become bodily. Woe to us, because we have been so much attracted to dirty thoughts than we try to refresh even our older sins committed by us. Woe to us, because we eat and we drink and we do not remember about the war waged within us by the greedy-eating. Woe to us, because we are enticed by demons through the memories of our debauched deeds and we joyfully remember those evil deeds of ours. Woe to us, because we forsake the thoughts of the godlike prayers and readings, and we waste our days in scatterings and in much-speaking. Woe to us, because our hearts are so petrified that we often, by searching for a pricking and for tears, we won't receive those because of our deep indifference and drowsiness. Woe to us, because God said: "That soul that commits sin will die" (Ezek. 18: 4, 20), but we are not ever worries because of our soul always sins.

3. Woe to us, because we have our body easily sliding towards sin, but we still entice it, by satiation and by drowsiness, towards unclean lusts and dirty thoughts, and through our eyes we receive the arrows of our enemy within our hearts, and by touching the bodies we become stallions hot on mares, and we do not think either at our speaking dignity nor to the eternal torments. Woe to us, because we sigh much for our body's passions and pains, but regarding the unhealable wounds and pains of our soul we linger because of indifference. Woe to us, because of our mastering soul obeys the slave, better said the body, and the worse one masters upon the better one, and they do not serve with a unique will to God Who made them[517]. Woe to us because our sins receive a new power out of our dirty and unclean thoughts and we do not see in the withdrawal of God away from us the coming of the unclean ghosts. Woe to us, because of being us insane, we love and we want to steal the praised destined to the saints and not their works and deeds[518]. Woe to us, because we do not stop ourselves from saying and from doing all the things in order to satisfy the people, but we disregard that what is right. Woe to us, because we are wrong by being ashamed in front of people, but we disregard the eternal shame[519]. Woe to us, because of originating us out of poor and lacking-of-glory parents, we haven't admitted that, and while declaring that we love the poverty and the dishonor for God we actually quarrel for us to be places in a row with the rich and glorious people[520]. Woe to us, because we restrain ourselves for the poverty from the world, but now when we are called to restraining, we take much care for satiation and for a comfortable life. Woe to us, because while the angels stay like a camp around them who fear God and the demons gather around them who do not fear God but they transgress God's commandments, we bring around us the camps of the demons[521]. Woe to us, because we want to be [517] The sin as deed and state opposed to God and unnatural, it usually maintains a division within man, because the soul doesn't allow to be totally peaceful while obeying the body that satisfied its bodily pleasures. The unity of the man is brought only by the fulfilling of the good deeds which satisfy the soul and which start from the soul especially when the soul thinks at God. This shows that the man is made by God to stay in connection with God. This is the man's natural state.

[518] We love to be praises for the good and clean deeds like those of the saints, but we do not fulfill those deeds. This too shows that our nature is made for good and clean deeds. But by loving the praises for deeds like those of the saints, without us actually having their deeds, we complete make our sin whole. This is because we add to our committed sins also the vain-glory and the love for lie.

[519] There can be in two meanings in this saying: we do not make mistakes because of being ashamed in front of our fellow humans, but in this is some desire from the vain-glory; or we commit mistakes feeling ashamed by people but we do not think at the shame we will suffer at the final judgment.

[520] The sin resorts to all sorts of contradictory subtleties. The man defends his sins by covering them with the claim that he hasn't committed those sins, but he commits sin just by doing that. By covering his sins, one admits them but in the same time he doesn't admit them.

[521] He who fears God he has God and God's angels near to him, for he shuns from sins and he doesn't boast with pride. He who fears God won't be partaker to the punishment from God which he fears of. He who doesn't fear God, he will be partaker to the punishment from God as locking up towards God's love and gifts. The fear of God is united with the joy of God's closeness.

together with the rich and powerful and we strive to be pleasant to them, while we turn our back to the poor coming to us and prying us for something, because they bother us.

4. Woe to us, because we do not approach the people according to the debt we owe to them, but we approach them according to what is or isn't pleasant to us. Woe to us, because we decide and we judge the good and we teach the righteous things, but we have been staying far from working the good. Woe to us, because we clean up the field of thorns and of brambles and of the weeds which damage the fruits, but we to not carefully clean up our cunning and evil thoughts from our souls which damage the holy virtues. Woe to us, because we will be moved from on earth where we temporarily live, but we have been worrying for many years of earthly and corruptible things and we are unworthy of any worry for our departure from here at the unavoidable time. Woe to us, because we are going to give account to the fearsome Judge for all our deeds during our earthly life and for all our vain-words and for our cunning and unclean words and for our soul preoccupied with them, but we do not take care of our souls[522]. Woe to us, very, because of our lack of piousness and because our lawlessness committed by us, but also because of despising the promises of God and because our faithlessness in those promises. Woe to us, because we sweeten ourselves, as some mindless people, with corruption, and while we could unite ourselves with the incorruptibility by that live according to the Gospel, we have remained into the earthly things and we are not partakers to the eternal incorruptibility and we prefer the cursed corruption[523]. Woe to us, because we can defeat all the loves for pleasures, but we have preferred through our pleasures to

[522] In Evergetinos it continues: "That's why there is waiting for us the unquenched fire of the Gehenna and the outer darkness, and the non-sleeping worm, and the crying and the gnashing of our teeth and the eternal sham in front of the whole creation from above and from below" (Monk Augustine, at note). But actually, these words are in this text too, at the chapter no. 5.

[523] While we could mix ourselves with the incorruptibility, we have remained non-partakers to the eternal corruption because we have preferred the corruption. As long as we are with our body on earth, the power of Christ works within us as a down-payment which will lead us to the happy resurrected into the eternal incorruptibility. There is a potential incorruptibility, as an irradiation of His resurrected body, within our body. The detachment of our body at death will leave within our soul that power that, by being strengthened by Christ at the general resurrection, it will contribute to the resurrection of our body into an actual total incorruptibility. The relics of the saints are proof in this regard about a certain incorruptibility strengthened even in their bodies on earth.

rather allow ourselves to be defeated by our passions[524]. Woe to us, because we need correction and learning while we current and teach others who sin less than we do.

5. Woe to us, because when the Lord will examine our life on earth, He will find our uncorrected at judgment. Woe to us, because we do not look at the things from within our stomach and because of that we are defeated by pleasure and by pride. Woe to us, because we always dirt up our souls with unclean thoughts, while we want us to be respected like some saints and us to be honored with those ones' titles. Woe to us, because we occupy ourselves with the vain-things, while forgetting about fighting the devil. Woe to us who commit sins here, fearlessly, because of waiting there for us the unquenched fire of the Gehenna and the outer darkness and the crying and the gnashing of teeth and the eternal shame in front of the creation from above and form below. Wot to our lacking of discernment and unrepented soul, because at the resurrection of the dead our soul will cry and will sigh mournfully and with the gnashing of the teeth into the sinful body and our soul will suffer bitter and painful and very harsh torments of the eternal fire. Woe to us, because during our passing exile, we love the cursed gladness and we do not remember the sweetness of the Paradise, but we despise the Kingdom of Heavens. Woe to us, because we liken ourselves by our callousness to the insane virgin-women and we do not buy the oil which enlightens the candles, by the good of good towards the close ones. Woe to us, because we day and night raise prayers towards God, saying: "Lord, Lord", but we do not do that what He has commanded us to do. Woe to me, because I have written this kind of lamentations, but I have been locked into what I have been writing, so that I haven't receive even the tiniest horizon of the repentance. Woe to me, because I cause pains to others while I shun myself from pains. Woe to us, because we have in our conscience the guilts ceaselessly accusing us and testifying against us, but we do not get ashamed neither we tremble because of going to suffer at the judgment of God our accountability for them. Woe to us, because we spread the stench of our deeds while rejoicing the praises from people.

6. Woe to us, because of the agitation and the wandering and the forgetfulness remove from within our hearts the fear of God. Woe to us, because by rejoicing to the very end of the long-patience of God, we do not want to die to our deeds and we do not strive to always better ourselves while helped by the long-patience of God. Woe to us, because we now remember our sins but by remaining the soul without a body in the future, we will suddenly see then imprinted and inscribed in the memory of our mind all things lived by us here, by word and by thoughts and by deeds, with a painful sorrow and with much bitterness. Woe to us, because the Apostle declared: "He who eats the bread and who drinks the wine of the Lord unworthily, he eats and drinks judgment to himself, because of not discerning the body of the Lord" (1 Cor. 11: 27), but we, rolling over into our uncleanness, we still approach the fearsome Mysteries of God, by forgiving ourselves for the things we have done into our night-hallucinations and in our dirty thoughts. This is because him who comes to sit next to God without clean thoughts and without clean eyes and without incorruptible body and with stained impulses of his soul and of his body, to how man guilts and to how many bodily pains and to how many weaknesses of his soul will be submitted at the end, by receiving the endless torment and shame? Woe to me, because I have been writing these things with bitter tears, but I haven't started yet doing them. Woe to me, because I urge you to do the good things while I am doing the evil things. Woe to them who commit sins in pleasures, because a bitter end is waiting for them, with an eternal shame, Woe to them who get sad uselessly, because they have deprived himself of the useful sadness of the repentance[525].

7. Woe to them who rebuke and curse others, because they have estranged themselves form the happiness of the love. Woe to gossipers and to envious, because they have estranged [525] They who remain into the pleasures of the sins, they get sad after no longer being able to feel those pleasures, but that sadness is useless, because they actually should get sad by repenting for their sins, and that means a useful sadness.

themselves from the kindness and from the mercy of God. Woe to them who want to be pleasant to people, because they cannot be pleasant to God. Woe to them who look at the people's faces, because they have fallen off the truth of God[526]. Woe to the proud, because they have chosen the side of the apostatic (rebelled) devil against God[527]. Woe to them how do not fear our Lord, because due to that they will intertwine themselves with many sins and they will be whipped both here and there. Woe to us, because we cannot endure the pricks of the hairs, or of the dust grains, or of the mosquitos, or of the flies, or of the bees, while we do not search for any help to escape us from the mouth of the dragon that bites us and that gulps us up as through an open mouth and that penetrates us with all the poisoning pins of the death. Woe to us, because of the devil consuming us through all our pleasures and apparent pains and through the worldly needs and delusions, and we do not want to rest ourselves of his evils. Woe to us, because of being us mastered for many years by our separation from God, that has bene weakening our Orthodox faith, we do not cry and we do not show they pain of our heart and we do not retrain ourselves from the passions which master us, but we add new sins in order us to receive the Gehenna of the bitter and eternal torments for our faithlessness and for our evil deeds. Woe to us, because of the written lamentations, by reaching the end of our life, we have been adding – without repenting ourselves and without crying – to our evils from our youth the bigger and insupportable evils of our old age and even more burdening sins. Woe to us, because we are not ashamed even by the more burdening pains and by the diverse illnesses of our body, but we strengthen ourselves into sins and we contemptuously feed our sins by much unrestraint and by much laziness, our defiled and sinner bodies. Woe to us, because we will have to cross through the fire swirling around us and we will have to sail the sea's waves, "in order each of us to take according to his deed committed by him while within body, whether good or bad". Woe to us, because we do not think at that darkened and immaterial fire, neither we think at the bitter crying and at the [526] They who look at the people's faces judge according to the people's pleasure, and not according to the will of God. They do not know the authority of God, so that they do not know God either.

[527] The proud one is able to reckon himself even above God, because of the sake of being independent from God.

gnashing of our teeth. This is for God will remove the luminous characteristic of the flames and He will leave to the sinners who lack their awe only the burning and darkened feature of the fire.

8. Woe to me, my miserable soul, because I am in a state of sadness and ceaseless pain of my heart. This is because I am content with crying, because my evilness has changed my understanding and it has covered the truth from me, and because the death has defeated the life, and because the earthly and corruptible and temporary things haven't become a change for the heavenly and incorruptible and eternal realities, and the disgusting and worthy of being hated things appeared to me as sweeter and move loved than the true love from Christ and more lovable than the due things, and the straying banished away the truth from within my soul and it has brought to me the sadness instead of joy, and it unveiled my shame and my damnation instead of daring and praises, and I have made me honoring more the bitterness than the sweetness and I to love more the earth and its mist than the heaven and its Kingdom; the darkness of the enemy which hates the beauty, it have come within my heart and it has darkened the light of my knowledge from within my mind. Woe to me, woe to me, because of how many devil's traps caught me in, and they pulled me down from such a height, and they have torn me apart[528]! Running, I have been uselessly weakened and I have uselessly broken out sweats. Who won't cry for me because of seeing me crushed under so many useless toils and pains and wrecking myself offshore? "Have mercy on me, have mercy on me, my friends!" (Job 19: 21) and pray with pain our Master Christ for me, for He do not keep the evil in His mind and Who, maybe, by having mercy on me, He will remove the awful army of the hater-of-the-good devil, from my understanding, and so I will be able to see which mud I am wallowing into while not wanting to get myself off it. Pary for me, lest the time getting shorter all my hope will be cut off from me. There is not bigger pain than mine, neither is there deeper wound than mine, nor is there a pain as my heart's pain. "Because the lawlessness has overwhelmed my head" (Ps. 37: 4[529]). This is because my wounds haven't been inflicted top me by sword, neither my death is brought to me by war, but the fiery arrows of my enemy "have stuck in me" (Ps. 37: 2[530]) and they blinded my inward man. "And I sank myself into the deeps' mud, that has no bottom" (Ps. 68: 2[531]). The fear I have been fearing it has come to me (Job 3: 25) and "the shadow of the death covered me" (Ps. 63: 20[532]). Woe to me, my soul, look at the current things which are temporary and passing away after a short time, with bitterness and with pain; and the things to come will be even harder. Understand, my soul, of how many goods and hopes you fall off, and to how many torments you will become inheritor of, without having any follower, and uncomforted. Come and fall and pray before the light from above your head to be darkened, and ask the Giver of the immortal light for taking me out of the all-consuming flame and from the non-luminous darkness. This is for His is the power of forgiving our sins and of bestowing us the good things despite of being us unworthy of His mercy. This is for His is the glory and the mastery forever and ever. Amen.

[528] The faithlessness in God brings to the man all his delusions, and it makes the man preferring the passing pleasures which are followed by the full discouragement. The height in good is shown also in the unity among the components of the human person. Descending into the evil things means also an inward division of the man. This is because the man's soul doesn't fully agree the bodily pleasures. The more one satisfies his pleasures, the more grown up a certain disapproval of his soul. This is for the man cannot totally get out of his nature that has been created for progressing into good.

repent for your sins and you will guard that what you have decided to do, but you mustn't pay attention to your own thoughts because they weaken your soul, saying: Your sins haven't been forgiven. Therefore, you must guard these commandments:

1. Guar yourself against eating in the presence of a woman at the same table, and against having any familiarness with a young boy or against sleeping with some adolescent on the same mattress. And when you take of your shirt you must not look at your body.

2. If you are forced to drink wine, you won't drink more than three cups. Guard yourself against transgressing this commandment for love.

3. Do not utter the prayers of the hours carelessly, lest you will fall into the hands of your enemies[535]. Take care as much as you can, of mediating at the psalms, for that will guard you against the lacking-of-cleanness life.

4. Love the tiredness and the trouble, in order you to be relieved of your passions. Do not entertain yourself with somebody about nothing, and you will be elevated through your sighs above your sins.

5. Shun yourself from lying, because the lie gets you out of the fear of the Lord[536]. Do not unveil your good things to everybody, lets your enemy will kidnap you[537].

6. Confess your illnesses to your Fathers in order you to enjoy their advice[538].

7. Be zealous to your handwork and the fear of the Lord will dwell within you[539].

8. Do not judge your brother, neither despise him, lets you will fall into the hands of your enemies[540].

[534] "The followings rules, all the way to the 15th rule, have been take out of the Word no. 9" "Commandments Given to Them Who have Rejected the World" (Monk Augustine, note from p. 186).

[535] Anthony the Great, Canon no. 6 (Monk Augustine). One of the prayer's purposes is that of keeping us thinking at God and separated from the devil and from the temptations coming through all sorts of thoughts, some of them very deceiving by their seeming importance and value.

[536] When you lie, you reckon that you can hide that even from God, and that means that you no longer fear God.

[537] Anthony the Great, Canon no. 34 (Monk Augustine): In your desire for unveiling your good things to everybody there is manifested your love for vain-glory.

[538] Anthony the Great, Canon no. 41 (Monk Augustine).

[539] Anthony the Great, Canon no. 58 (Monk Augustine).

9. Do not quarrel for upholding your words lest you will be dwelled by the evil ones[541].

10. Love the humble cogitation and do not rest yourself on your opinion. Let your tongue get accustomed to say: "Forgive me!". And you humble-cogitation will come to you[542].

11. Sitting within your monastic cell you must take care of three things: of persevering in prayer, of meditating at the Psalms, and of your handwork[543].

12. Cogitate within yourself: I surely won't live in this world except for today; and you will arm yourself against the sin.

13. Do not be greedy for food, lest your previous sins will be renewed within you. Do not leave the tiredness, take care of meditating at the psalms, and the resting from God will come to you.

14. Force yourself to ha tears when praying, and God will have mercy on you and God will disrobe you of your former man.

15. Learn that the tiredness and the poverty and the estrangement and the trouble and the silence, they will bring you the humble-cogitation. And the humble-cogitation will bring you the forgiveness of all your previous sins[544]. But the humble-cogitation consists also of the man reckoning himself as sinner and as unjust and it also consists of not arguing for his word, and of abolishing his lust, and of looking downwards, and of enduring the reproach and the toils, and of hating to be honored and rested (the comfort), and of saying in anything:

[540] Anthony the Great, Canon no. 59 (Monk Augustine). By despising somebody else you will associate yourself with the devil which get pride against God.

[541] Anthony the Great, Canon no. 69 (Monk Augustine). By quarreling for your words, you strengthen your pride within you.

[542] Anthony the Great, Canons no. 64, 72 (Monk Augustine).

[543] The advices no. 11, 12, 13, 14 are similar to the Canons no. 65, 66, 67, 68 of Saint Anthony the Great (Monk Augustine, at notes).

[544] The humble-cogitation is also conditioned by some external states: by poverty, by the discomfort of being you among strangers, and by troubles. And the humble-cogitation makes you forgive all the sins. This is for you reckon yourself inferior to anybody. And if you forgive others, God will forgive you. On the opposite, your pride against others won't bring the forgiveness either to you, because you actually do not ask God for forgiveness. Anthony the Great, Canon no. 71.

"Forgive me". And through the humble-cogitation the enemies are banished away[545].

16. Be always sad. But when brother comes to visit you be serene with them so that the fear of God to dwell within you[546].

17. Traveling together with some brothers, part with them so that you will be able to be silent. And to not turn here and there, but meditate at the psalms and pray, in your mind, to God[547]. And wherever you enter, do not behave with superiority with the people living there. Keep your modesty and your shyness in everything and stretch with difficulty your hand to the things places in front of you[548].

18. Do not sleep with somebody else on the same mattress. Pray much before going to bed, regardless how tired you would be because of traveling[549].

19. Do not allow anyone to anoint your body with oil, except in case of grave illness[550].

20. Sitting at the table with the brothers, do not eat with pleasure and stretch your hand only to the food placed in front of you. And keep your knees gathered. And do not raise your face towards another. Do not drink water top satiation, neither make noises when drinking.

21. If you need to spit, when you are together with the brothers, get up and do that at a distance from them. Do not get agitated among people and, if you need to spit out, do not open your mouth; and you will get rid of that need.

22. Do not open your mouth to laugh. This is because that shows the absence of the fear of God within you[551].

[545] The humble-cogitation stops me from reckoning myself as not needing the help from God, it stopes me from reckoning that I have within myself the whole power I need. This is a devilish thought. The humble cogitation implies feeling the existence of God as Him Whom everything starts from.

[546] From here to the no. 42 the sayings have been taken form the Word no. 3. About the State of the Beginners and of Them from Monastic Cells and from Anthony, Canon no. 74. The monk is required to always be sad and to cogitate at his sins. But he must receive with the light of the joy the brothers who visit him. Through both of these there lives the fear of God.

[547] At that time (Century IV), they were speaking about the mental prayer, or the prayer of the mind.

[548] Anthony, Canons no. 75, 76.

[549] Anthony, Canons no. 80.

[550] Saint Pachomius, Canon no. 92.

[551] The whole delicate politeness recommended to the monks is founded on the thought at God. The people cannot see all the inappropriate things but God does see everything. And in

23. Do not lust for the things belonging to another. If you make (write) a book, do not adorn it because that shows a lust of yours.

24. If you commit sin in something, do not be shy to confess that, neither try to defend yourself by uttering a lie, but get on your knees and confess your sin and ask for forgiveness and it will be forgiven to you.

25. If somebody lies to you, do not get angry, but tell him: "Forgive me; I won't come back".

26. Do not be ashamed of asking your teacher.

27. If somebody knocks on the door of your monastic cell while you are sitting and striving with your handwork, forgive him and take care of his resting.

28. Do not speak, neither pay attention to somebody else's words, uselessly.

29. If your teacher sends you to a travel, ask him where you should God and do according to his commandment. Do nor waste words here and there. If you guard your eyes and your ears, you won't commit sins with your tongues by any leans[552].

30. If you dwell together with a brother, be to him like a stranger. Do not command him anything, neither make yourself superior to him, nor behave to him with pride. And if he commands you something that you do not want to fulfill, you will defeat your will and you won't be sad, in order the peace not to forsake you. You must know that him who obeys is the superior[553].

31. If you live together with a brother and he tells you: "Listen!", you will answer him: "What do you want?". And if he let you to choose whether you do or not what he tells you, you will fulfill that what you choose with fear of God.

32. Waking yourself up from sleep, you must pray before starting to do your handwork. But you must cogitate, in the first place, at the word of God, and then start working.

respecting the people it is shown the respect for God Who cherishes all the people and Who cherishes the reciprocal respect among people.

[552] There is a moral connection among senses. If you guard one or four senses against inappropriate things, that will help you guard all other your senses. The man remains in the good things in an untorn unity.

[553] The monk is advised to be like a stranger to the brother whom he dwells together with, not in the sense of not having a brotherly feeling for him, but in the sense of not commanding him like to one who is compelled to obey him; he must treat his brother as a free and totally independent man. He must not command him, but he must obey the brother's commandment, even if he doesn't like it. In this too there is manifested the humble-cogitation.

33. Be serene with the stranger and talk to him, in order his leaving not to be damaging to him. Guard yourself against asking him about useless things immediately after he arrived at you, but ask him to pray. And after he has sat down, ask him: "How are you, brother?". And give him a book to read. And if he is tired because of traveling, allow him resting and wash up his feet. And if he speaks vain-words, tell him with love: "Spare me, brother, because I am weak and I cannot listen to these". And if his clothes are torn, you will sew those. And if he is weak and his clothes are dirty, you will wash his clothes up. And if he is a wanderer, and at you there are holy men, you won't allow him to come and see the holy men, but give him alms and let him go. And if he is poor, you won't let him go troubled, but you will give him that what the Lord has given you.

34. If a brother put something on the table for you, do not examine what he has placed in front of you when he is not present.

35. If somebody leaves you in his monastic cell and he goes out, you won't raise your eyes in order to see the things from that monastic cell, but before him leaving tell him: "Give something to do until you return". And you will fulfill carefully that what he tells you to do.

36. Do not pray indifferently and carelessly. This is because instead of being you pleasant to God, you rather will make him angry. But stay with fear and tremble and do not lean against the walls, neither you get drowsy in your feet, so that to stay on one foot while stretching another. Resist your thoughts and do not allow them to take care of your bodily things, in order your prayer to be accepted by God.

37. If you are attending the Liturgy, you will guard your thoughts and your feelings and you will stay with fear in front of the Highest God, in order you to be found worthy of receiving the body and the blood of the Lord and that to heal your passions[554].

38. If you are young, do not put on a beautiful coat until reaching your old age[555].

[554] A main effect of receiving the body and the blood of the Lord is our cleaning up of passions, given that the state of sacrifice of the Lord's body and blood it is contrary to any egotism manifested through passions.

[555] Do not increase the temptations you can bring as a young man upon women by putting on a beautiful coat. At the old age there will no longer be a danger in this regard. And, also, the young man himself has in wearing a beautiful coat a motif of pride.

39. Traveling with someone who is older than you, do not walk in front of him. If the old man stays up to speak to others, you won't disregard him by remaining seated. But you will stand until he will command you to sit.

40. Entering a city or a part of a city, you will look at ground in order the seen things not to become to you a cause of war within your monastic cell.

41. Do not go to bed in a place where you fear of sinning with your heart. Do not eat at the same table with a woman, neither will you look at her clothes, if you can do that.

42. Travelling together with an old man you won't allow him to carry anything. And if both of you are young, you will share the burden. And if there is something common to both of you, let each of you carry it for an hour, and him who carry that burden will walk in front. And, also, let him who is weak to walk in front, and if he sits down because of tiredness, you will sit together with him.

43. Asing some old man about your thoughts, you will unveil him your thoughts as they are, by trusting him that he will keep your secrets. But do not invoke as motif the fact that he is older that you are, but the fact that you can by learning and by deeds and by spiritual experience not to get harmed, if your passions increase[556].

44. Strive and pray the most at night, in order your mind to be enlightened[557]. Look at your sins and pray God for them and God will forgive you of them.

45. If one wants to judge his brother in your presence, and if the accused brother is one of them who judge you, you will tell him with the humble-cogitation: "Spare me, brother, because I am sinner and weak and worthy of the things you tell me. That's why I cannot hear these things"[558].

46. Honor your brother more than you in everything. And when a friend of yours honors you in front of others, you will tell them: "His praises me because of you". Do not taste any honor without others.

[556] From here to the end the commandments have been take from the Word no. 4. About the Conscience of Them Who Sit within Their Monastic Cell.

[557] The mind is enlightened the most by the godlike light at night for the mind is no longer impeded by the things seen within the world.

[558] If I hear somebody accusing one who criticized me, I must not rejoice of what I am hearing, but I must tell him: "Brother, I am a sinner as that brother reckoned me be, and that's why I cannot hear you accusing him".

47. If somebody asks you something in exchange to what he has given you, you won't refuse him.

48. Do not cogitate in your heart something against somebody whose love you have lost for God, but you will think at death and at damnation and at the fact that nobody among them will be able to help you at that time (if he won't be forgiven).

49. If, while sitting within your monastic cell, you remember somebody who did evil to you, you will immediately stand and pray God for him within your heart, in order God to spare him. So will cease the passion you are suffering of because of that one[559].

50. If you want to receive the body of the Lord, you will guard yourself not to allow your anger and your hatred against somebody to enter your heart[560]. If you know somebody poisoned with anger against you, you will be the first to ask him for forgiveness, as our Lord has commanded us to do (Mt. 5).

51. If you are warred by a shameless passion at night, you will guard yourself against taking that image during the day, in order your heart not to be defiled by pleasure, but you will fall before God and He will have mercy on you, for He know the people's weakness.

52. If you overwhelmingly take care of fasting and of ceaseless prayer, you won't dare to think that these ones will save you, but you will hope that God will have mercy on the trouble of your body and He will help you with your weakness[561].

53. If you are ill, you smut not feel yourself burdened so that you not to lack the ghost, but you must thank God for He takes care of your benefit[562].

[559] Not him whom I hate will suffer because of my hatred, but I will suffer because of suffering of a passion that lowers me and that makes my salvation impossible.

[560] How will our Lord feel within ourselves – for He lives the death in order toc lean us of our passions – if our passions continue living within us? Hoe will feel the Lord within us – for He is above any egotism – if our being is relentlessly dominated by our egotism? Aren't we making Him suffering in continuation, but without result, for us?

[561] Do not trust your toils, but you must trust the mercy of God. This is because your toils do not give you the surety and its peace as they are given you by trusting the mercy of God.

[562] If an illness or a trouble come upon you, you must not get discouraged, but you must thank God that those ones will make you praying Him more, and you must not trust your powers. The more you feel your weaknesses the more you will get closer to God and the more you will hope in Him (2 Cor. 12: 10).

54. Dwelling within your monastic cell, you must set a decided measure and a decided time to your eating, and you must not overlook those. Give to your body as much as it suffices in order your body to be able to pray and serve to God. And if you are given, when you are outside your monastic cell, a sweet food, you won't eat that to your satiation in order you to be able to turn back to your monastic cell as quickly as possible.

55. If the demons sow within you an ascesis that you cannot bear, you won't accept that because the demons want to occupy the people's heart with things which they cannot accomplish, so that they to burden the people with that that is too much and so they to deceive the man. All their things are measureless and disordered[563].

56. Eat once a day and not to satiation. Give your body only that much as it needs according to the requirement of the nature.

57. Appoint a half of night for taking vigil into prayer, and the other half for taking care of the body's resting. Before laying yourself down for sleeping, you take vigil for two hours in prayer and in songs, and then you will give resting to your body. If your body feels burdened when getting up to prayer, you will tell you body: "Do you want to rejoice your resting now and then to leave towards the long punishment? Isn't better to get a little tired here and then you to be rested together with the saints in the future age?". So, you smut cast away your laziness from yourself, and the godlike help will come to you[564].

58. If you have embraced the monastic stadium, you will set your servant as a free man. And if you want to be a monk, you won't' allow your servant to dwell together with you.

59. Leaving to sell your handwork, you won't haggle for the selling price with the people form the world. You will do the same if you want to buy something. Know that the lack of material things will make God your occupation[565].

[563] The demons often tempt the man with the illusion that he can accomplish good things which are above his measure, so that they to be able to tempt the man when he cannot accomplish those things, as for instance" to fast for a longer time, to sleep less etc.

[564] Anthony, The Canon no. 8.

[565] By not having material things which you to occupy yourself with, you will occupy yourself with and you will get attached to God.

60. If a brother places a vessel next you to and you need that vessel, you won't touch that vessel without him giving his permission to you.

61. If a brother asks you to buy him something because he is leaving, you will do that. And if there are brothers together with you, you will do that in their presence.

62. If you are given something in order you to turn that back, you will turn that back after using it. You won't keep that until its owner asking it back. If you have broken something at that thing, you fill repair that. If you lend something to somebody, you won't ask that back if you see the borrower unable to turn that back to you, especially when you do not need that thing.

63. If you left your monastic cell and after a while, when you come back, you see a brother inhabiting it, you wills search for another monastic cell for yourself. So, you must guard yourself not to get that brother out of your former monastic cell, in order you not to find our anger at God. And if he wants to voluntarily leave that monastic cell, it will be done to you that what is right. And if he takes some vessel out of it, you won't ask him to give that back to you.

64. If you want to leave your monastic cell, you won't take anything from within it, but you will leave all the things from there to your poor brother and God will rewards you wherever you will go.

65. The devils rejoice nothing more than of that man who hides his thoughts to his spiritual teacher.

66. Guard yourself against richness and against loving the richness, because the richness corrupts the monk's fruits.

67. If you fight against the temptation that bothers you, you won't stop falling yourself in front of God and telling God: "Help me, Lord, because I am weak and, therefore I cannot endure this fight". And He will help you if your prayer starts from a righteous heart. And by fighting and being victorious, you won't boast yourself and you won't become daring, but you will guard yourself against all of these, because the enemy plots against you by all of these an even greater fight than before.

68. Praying to God, you won't tell Him: "Lord, remove from me these things, and give me those things", but you will tell Him: "Lord my God You know better than me that what is beneficial to me. Help me and do not allow me to commit sin to You and I to be lost into my sins because I am weak and sinner.

Neither hand me over to my enemies. I have run at You. Deliver me, Lord, for You are my strength and hope. For Yours is the power and the glory and the good work and the bestowing of the grace, forever. Amen".

Fragments from the Word of Abba Isaiah

From Codex no. 113, from the century XVII, of the Patriarchal Collection from Jerusalem[566]

F. 62 b – 63 a. Abba Isaiah said: As a paper written with barbarian words and having on it a picture with inappropriate features, if the Lord wants those to be cleaned up, it won't be done without being appropriately sunk those in was and erased with water, likewise the man if imprinted with many sins and having written his sins on the paper of his soul and on the picture of his understanding, those ones won't be cleaned up except by being confessed and through humble cogitation. The paper is the heart, the picture is the understanding, the wax is the softening wax is the confession, and the water is the tear. And the masters of all of those are the soul and the leading mind.

The same one said: As the ill man overwhelmed by mani pains and sufferings and having purulent wounds, but he still shies the doctors and he hides his wounds, he will cause to himself harm and pain and torment, likewise is him who sinned, because he is stung by hi conscience but he endures the pains and he doesn't want to show his souly wounds to his Abba. But as the ill man, when the worms start moving and eating his body out of which there flows the stinky puss, and because being him tormented by pains, he will call the doctor shouting out loud, and the doctor will bring not only anointments but also means of cutting and of burning and or erasing, likewise the monk who fall heavily into sin by the lenience of God, that monk immediately fall in front of God [566] The note of Monk Augustin: These fragments do not belong to Abba Isaiah, except those with the no. 127, 127b and 129 a., which are given in the Philokalia. The notions and the lexicon differ. They seem to originate from Century X, if not even latter. But many themes of these fragments are identical to those from the Words of Abba Isaiah.

confessing his sins and he will immediately be healed. This is for any new and fresh wound can be easily healed, but if the wound gets older, it will become difficult to heal or even unhealable. And he who has sinned he is ill and his passions and his fallings into sin are wounds. And his doctor if the abbot, and the anointments and the means for erasing and for burning are the fasting and the taking of vigil and the sleeping on the floor.

The same one said: As the dead is eaten by worms in his tomb and out of his there flows much ugly stench, so is the monk who committed sin and hasn't confessed it, he will be eaten by evil and ugly thoughts. And as out of the dead man gets a stench so that the wild beats gather around him but they do not touch him, but if the dead's body was anointed with chrism there won't be a stench neither the wild beast will touch that body, likewise is in the case of the monk who has confessed his sins, there will be no desperation and laziness and sadness thoughts touching him. The tomb is the monastic cell, the dead is the monk who has died to the world, the worms arete monk's thoughts, the stench is the strengthened bitterness, and the confession kills the worms and banishes away the stench.

The same one said: As the bramble wraps up the tree and it will wither that tree's fruits, and as the worm eats the wood and the moth eats the coat and the rust eats the iron, likewise the sin will wither him who doesn't confess the sin.

Abba Isaiah also said that, as the experienced archer and as the skilled hunter shoots not only the wild beasts but they can easily shoot the birds flying into the skies, likewise that woman writing by her hand letters and sending those letters to men, she is a hunter. And the hunter shoots bears and panthers and wild boars and foxes and wild beasts, because of not being able to hunt those ones which are far from him, the woman writing can hunt even those form far by catching the rational souls of the rich men and of the poor and of the army leaders and of the soldiers and of the priests and of the monks, by skillfully stalking and shooting them. This is because she has the ink as her bow and the pen as her arrow and the paper and her wing and her words as iron. She calls by her petters not only on men leaving near her, but also the men leaving far from her.

F. 64 a – 66 a. Abba Isaiah said that all the saints are like a big Paradise having fructifying and well-fragranced and aromatic trees which bring forth diverse fruits despite being watered by the same water. The Paradise is the monastery, the trees of the monks, the fruits of the virtues, and the water if the grace of the Holy Ghost. This is for One is the Ghost working within all the saints, but their toils and their works and their ascesis are not the same. Because the ascesis of one saint differs from the ascesis of another saint.

Abba Isaiah said also: Who won't cry for the indifferent monk? Who won't cry for the lazy monk? Who won't cry for that monk who doesn't take care of his salvation? Who won't sigh for him who wastes his days into scattering? Who won't cry for him who love the pleasures? Who won't shed tears for the idiorhythmic one (him who makes his own rules and program) and who fulfills his own wills? It might even the sky sigh up for the carelessness and for the indifference of such a man and the angels cry because of his perdition[567]. This is because him who do not fight here for saving his soul, he will have prepared himself for the endless torment from there[568].

The same one said: If some brothers came to dwell together with you, you wouldn't reject them daringly. And if they want to be idiorhythmic (with own living rules and program), you will advise them that what is beneficial to them. And if they are submissive and obedient to the Fathers, and if they are not obeying to themselves – or idiorhythmic – and if they are under the yoke of the Lord and if they obey Christ and their Father, they will be honored like some fighters for truth and witnesses of Christ. You only must make sure not to join them at eating and at drinking and at singings psalms and at dialogues, without asking for the opinion and for the advice and [567] The saints and the angels who are into happiness, they cannot but cry for feeling pity for those who are being lost. Poet Vasile Voiculescu wrote somewhere that the saints ask God to allow them go and live near to them who are in hell, and he drew from here the conclusion that there cannot be an eternal hell. But he forgives, by affirming such an Origenistic idea, that the people from heel aren't forsaken there because of God wanting that, but because they stubbornly refuse to know about God. There is the big mystery of the freedom and of the pride in affirming one's freedom. Even in their sufferings they want to stubbornly affirm their defiance towards One Who is superior to them. But the mercy of the ones from Paradise isn't comparable, as pain, to the torment of them who are in hell. In a way, they too respect the freedom of them from there.

[568] He who hasn't been fighting here for gaining his faith into God, he will have prepared to himself as state of eternal stubbornness into faithlessness.

the approval of their Father. This is because he who eats or sings or live together with them with friendship or does his handwork together with them, he will discover himself as together-partaker with the rebelled devil at the judgment time[569]. This is because like the mode of the union between soul and body is undetached until the moment of the death, likewise it is the spiritual union between the spiritual student and his spiritual teacher[570]. And as the killer is killed, because of being one who separated as soul from a body, likewise the judgment will get the most careless among brothers out from under the protective cover and out of the help of the spiritual fathers[571].

Abba Tishbite said that there is nothing more destructive to the monks in the same generation than speaking evil of one another and judging on one another. This is because he who speaks evil about another, he also judges him and he makes himself a god[572]. This is the fearsome and exquisite and amazing wonder that the non-comprised One and Who fills the world up, He Who bears everything but He is non-borne by anything, He Who comprises everything but He is non-comprised by anything, He Who walks on the water without getting His feet wet, He Who sits on the winds' wings and He walks in the air as He wishes, He enters the people's entrails and He judges their cogitations and He knows their plans (Ps. 7: 9[573]) and He touches the thoughts and He judges the cogitations and He knows their plans. This is for the eye that is all-bearer and all-seer of hidden realities, the undenied and fearsome mastery, "He Who looks at the earth and makes the earth tremble" (Ps. 103: 33[574]), He Who rebukes the sea and He [569] He who has been on earth in communion with the sinners and he approved them, he will discover on the day of the judgment that he was in communion with the devil.

[570] If you have been some teacher to the sinner during the earthly life, without correcting him, you will be partaker to his punishment one the judgment day.
[571] A brother not fighting to keep other brothers into the clean life by obeying the Fathers, him too will be souly killed at the final judgment as being brought out of the protective cover of his spiritual father.
[572] Only God has the right to judge. This is for God give the people their eternal fate. He who judges one another and he speaks evil of another, he impropriated to himself this right of God and God's power, which he doesn't actually have. So, he claims himself to be a god without him actually being a god. He wants to take the place of God without him being able to do that.
[573] In KJB we have: Ps. 7: 9: "Oh let the wickedness of the wicked come to an end; but establish the just: for the righteous God trieth the hearts and reins."; in ROB we have: Ps. 7: 9: "Let be ended the sinners' evilness and strengthen the righteous one, You Who examine the hearts and the entrails, you the Righteous God." (E. l. t.'s n.)
[574] In KJB we have: Ps. 104: 33: "He looketh on the earth, and it trembleth: he toucheth the makes the sea dry, He Who touches the mountains and makes them smoking" (Ps. 103: 33[575]) and He makes the creation tremble as the leaves of the tree, when He sees the monks speaking evil of one another and judging on one another, He gets upset and infuriated. And because of He has decided the day which He will judge the world on, and when he will judge the atheists and the antichrists who previously stole the creation of God and who judge before God judges and examines, and the Righteous-Judge will condemn them together with the devil because of being they the devil's hidden partakers.

F. 67 b. – 68 a. Abba Isaiah said: he who wants to be saved, let him stop speaking vainly, let him love the truth, let him banish away from him the vain-s-peaking, let him part with his evil thoughts, let him throw his cunningness out of his heart, let him not stay inside the yard of the lie, let him speak the truth, let him run away from the sharp anger, let him not surrender himself to his envy and spite, let him be disgusted of the memories of his evils, let him not love his ugly and hurting of soul lusts, let him not stop having mercy on the poor, let him sapiently and with watchfulness mediate at the godlike Scriptures, let him zealously surrender himself to the taking of vigil, let him consecrate his prayer to Lord God all the time and without any worries, let him sigh form the bottom of hie heart, let him beat himself on his cheeks, and let him beat himself on his chest. And let him reckon all of these with the humble cogitation, so that his toils to be known and to be well-received by God and written into the book of life.

He said again: Do won't laugh at somebody if you see him mistaking. You won't condemn the man who is passionate as you are, when he slips into sin, neither you will mock him and tall about him recklessly inappropriate words. This is because if you who have knowledge and you are skilled, you laugh at the simple one and you condemn him, you too will be evil-spoken and condemned not only by wisemen and by scholars but also by the simple people and even by women and by children and "that what the man has sown, that he will reap" (Gal. 6: 7). hills, and they smoke."; in ROB we have: Ps. 103: 33: "He Who looks at the earth, and He makes the earth tremble; He Who touched the mountains and He makes them to smoke." (E. l. t.'s n.) willingly sowing the evil things and by unwillingly reaping the evil things, we must wonder about the right-judgment of God.

He said again: The beginning of the monk's perdition is the laughter and the absence of the fear. If you see yourself mastered by laughter, you will know yourself in the deep of your evils and as reaching in the both of the hell. The laughter gets out the happiness of Christ, the laughter does not build, but the laughter melts away even the built virtues. The laughter makes the Ghost sad[576], the laughter is not beneficial to the soul, the laughter corrupts the body and it darkens the mind up and it sinks the conscience into mud and it makes sclerotic (it dries up, it makes harsher) and it petrifies the heart and it makes the prayer unreceived[577]. The laughter banishes the virtues away and it brings the sins in. That monk that causes the laughter (who is a joker) he is hated by God and he is looked at by angels with disgust, and he is void of righteousness, and he is lacking the eternal life and dressed up in shame. The monk causing laughter is a trap of the devil and he is a hearth of the death. This is because of the laughter banishing away the fear of God and it dwells the devil in. The laughter is the enemy of God and it is the friend of the demons. The laughter is the enemy of the restraint and it is the friend of the demons and of the debauchery and it is shame and damnation to him who has been gained by laughter. Thew laughter is a pit of the perdition and it is an emptying of the truth[578]. The laughter scatters the soul and it brings falling to the body. The laughter despises the peace and it rejoiced of quarrels among people. The joker searches for the death and he wishes for the perdition. The joker prepares the eternal torments to himself and he is sent to his perdition[579]. The laughter is the devils spear and it is dirty to them who practices the laughter. The laughter is a disturbance to the Church and causer of shame. The laughter is the enemy of the justice and it is the friend of the quarreling [576] The Ghost isn't rigid but alive. The Ghost gets sad because of the perdition of them who do not want to receive Him or to rejoice through Him of the loving communion with Christ.

[577] The daughter is a sign of superficiality, it is the sign of the lack of reflection, of unnoticing the own insufficiencies, of non-fulfilling the duties towards God and towards others.
[578] The laughter doesn't see the profound reality and the care for remaining in union with the profound reality and for advancing into the profound reality.
[579] The life reduced to the realities from the world and to the world's pleasant things, it feels well in the monotony of the world that is equivalent to the spiritual death. This monotony is protective, but for how long?

among people[580]. The laughter brings the defamation and the contempt. The laughter is the creator of the lie and it is the mockery of the truth[581]. The laughter is a ceaseless sin and a spike stuck into the soul. The laughter is the devil's sword and it is a devastating sickle. The joker monk (causer of laughter) is a sensitive goat and a spiritual wolf. The laughter means non-knowing the Scriptures and it is a two-edged sword and it is immediate anger and a burning fire and the crooking of the true words and it is the choosing of that what is unjust. The laugher is the moving among the changing evils and it is the cunning cogitation. The laughter is an unquenched fire and it is a devastating punishment. The laughter is a multiple trap and it is the absence of the life[582]. The laughter is an awful torment and it is the presence of the hunger. The laughter is a deceiving living at the door of perdition and it is the rushing in of the debauchery. The laughter is a barn full of evil thoughts and it is a shed full of ugly meanings. The laughter is missing the thought at death and it is missing the cogitation at the eternal torments. Remove from us, Lord, our laughter, and bestow us the crying which You require from for. This is for he who sighs and who gets sad, he will attract upon himself the mercy of God, while he who laughs he will elicit a woe from the righteous and incorruptible and unseen and of-life-give God and our Savior Jesus Christ Who says: "Woe to them who laugh because they will cry and weep" (Lk. 6: 25)[583].

p. 124 a. -n 132 a. Abba Isaiah said: The human praise is the root of the ugly lust not when we hear it but when we accept it. One cannot cut off his lust but he can not to become his lust's slave. So, we cannot uproot our thoughts but we can fight against them. He who sweetens himself into his thoughts and he fulfills his will, he won't see the glory of God, neither will he overcome any of his passions, but he likens himself to the [580] The laughter takes no value seriously. The laughter looks leniently at all evils and at all disorder and fight among people. So, the laughter is a weapon of the devil.

[581] The laughter doesn't' recognize that what has been actually accomplished, but it contrives the lie.

[582] The laughter is a sign indicating the absence of the true life. The laughter doesn't deepen itself into the life's richness. The laughter doesn't feel the need for understanding or for knowing the life's richness.

[583] If even our mercy too is wakened up not by him who laughs but by him who is sad, all the more he who is sad and fearful will wake up the mercy of God. He who laughs he elicits the mercy of God, but not that mercy that could save him but a mercy united with the ascertainment that he who laughs will be lost.

girdled man walking for the whole day but not advancing through his efforts[584]. This is because the demons bring traps and offenses to such a man, from all quarters, and they wage war with increasing insanity to them who obey them. And the man's will is that that throws the man into pit and into trap and it moves the man's mind on the stages of his passions. That's why him who want to be saved he must cut his own will off on every moment. This is valid not only for some of the old men but it is valid also for the beginners: one must be like a statue that doesn't see nor hear neither speaks, but he pays attention only to himself and he speaks with God in quietude (hesychia) and in hidden meditation; and he constantly defames on himself, in an unturned cogitation and with an uncurious mind, in a simple feeling, as seen and asse examined and as touched by God, as one who always stays in front of God[585]. "I saw in advance the Lord always before me. He is at my right hand, so I won't wobble" (Ps. 15: 8[586]) and "The sky is My throne, and the earth is bedding to My feet" (Isa 66: 1). Everything the man does, day and night, it is seen by the sleepless eye of God. More than the sun, His eyes look at the people's deeds, as it was written: "He is the One Who knows all the things" (Ps. 32: 15[587]). And He sees even the deeds which we haven't done, as it was said: "My unworked things were seen by Your eyes and all of them will be written into Your book" (Ps. 138: 16[588]). Who is the man who,

[584] Your thoughts drive you to external activities and they do not allow you to persevere in prayer as unique thinking at God. You want to show your won will by external deeds, while in prayer you do not want to show your own will.

[585] He who has advanced into God by his quietude, he won't only strive himself to feel the presence of God, but he also feels himself as watched and penetrated by God. God has reached to him as a power that has taken him into mastery. And that makes him more easily feeling God. He lives both his work and God's work in encountering god. It is a both subjective and objective state.

[586] In KJB we have: Ps. 16: 8: "I have set the Lord always before me: because he is at my right hand, I shall not be moved."; in ROB we have" Ps. 15: 8: "I saw in advance the Lord always before me, for He is at my right hand so that I won't wobble." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[587] In KJB we have: Ps. 33: 15: "He fashioneth their hearts alike; he considereth all their works."; in ROB we have: Ps. 32: 15: "He who specially built their hearts, He Who understands all the things." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[588] In KJB we have: Ps. 139: 16: "Thine eyes did see my substance, yet being unperfect; and in thy book all my members were written, which in continuance were fashioned, when as yet there was none of them."; in ROB we have: Ps. 138: 16: "My unworked things have been known by Your eyes and into Your book all of them will be written; day by day they will be committed and none of them will remain unwritten." (E. l. t.'s n.)

by looking at the people staying before him, he dares to tell them that he sees them committing sins even more shameful than the dog? But we mock on ourselves because of not cogitating at the fact that God sees everything and He examines the hearts and he penetrates the entrails and that the man's thought is unhidden to God. And if we believed these things, and it we knew that only Him knows the hidden things of our hearts, we wouldn't follow and we wouldn't fulfill our harmful wills, but we would humiliate ourselves. This is because he who fulfills his wills he served the devil, even though sensitively and to the people's eyes he seems to be pleasant to God. Such a man is wolf during night and lamb during day, "having the countenance of the piousness, yet denying its power" (2 Tim. 3: 5).

The same one said: The rich and wise, they hide away their treasures. And by seeming poor, he is disregarded by the powerful. Likewise, is the humble and virtuous monk who hides away his virtues and who doesn't fulfill his wills, but he rebukes on himself on all moments and he strives through hidden cogitations to reach saying: "By heart has got hot within me and into my thought there will be ignited a fire" (Ps. 38: 4[589]). What fire? Listen to the Scripture that says: "Our God is consuming fire" (Hebr. 12: 29). This is for as the fire melts down the wax and it dries out the mud, likewise the hidden cogitation (the meditation) melts down the ugly thoughts and it removes the souly passions and it illuminates the mind and it make the cogitation bright and it rejoices the heart. This is for the hidden meditation hits the devils and it banishes away the ugly thoughts[590]. This is for, that what enlighten the inward man and it arms him up through the hidden reflection (meditation) it is being strengthened by God and it is empowered by angels and it is glorified by people. This is for the hidden reflection (meditation) and the hidden reading are the non-defamable house of the soul and the steadfast tower and the peaceful shore which keep the soul undisturbed and unshaken. This is for the demons are heavily disturbed when the monk arms himself through hidden reflection and through hidden reading. The hidden reflection is the mind's mirror and the conscience's torch. The hidden reflection (meditation) melts the debauchery down, it weakens the wrath (the impulses), it banishes the anger away, it removes the lit anger, and it casts the injustice out. The hidden reflection gives shininess to the mind's leading, it enlightens the conscience, and it banishes the laziness away. The hidden reflection gives birth to the pricking of the heart, it brings the fear of God, and it causes the tears. The hidden reflection produces to the monk the non-lost humble-cogitation and it produces the joyful taking of vigil at night and the undisturbed prayer. The hidden reflection banishes away the ugly thoughts and it whips up the demons and it cleans up the body. The hidden reflection teaches the man the long-patience, it brings the restraint to the man and it prepares the man for understanding the death. The hidden reflection is full of benefactions and it is adorned with all the virtues and it has got far from all the evil deeds.

[589] In KJB we have: Ps. 39: 3: "My heart was hot within me, while I was musing the fire burned:"; in ROB we have: Ps. 38: 4: "My heart has become hot within me and into my thought will be ignited a fire." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[590] The "hidden meditation" is the reflection at the godlike mysteries, which are limitless and which are above our thoughts referring to the bodily pleasures. Cogitating sat those mysteries gives the man the true meaning of his existence and it enlightens the man and it fills the man up with power from God.

The same one also said that everyone who do their wills, they do not differ from animal in any aspect. This is for the animal when hungry it eats and when thirsty it drinks and when sleepy it sleeps. And that monk who fulfills his will he won't be warred and troubled by only one demon, but he will be troubled by many passions and by countless demons[591]. And as in the toilet there doesn't enter a sole man in order him to throw the garbage and the urine form within himself, but the toilet is used by many people, likewise is that monk who follows his own will and who persists in his own order (idiorhythmic) and who becomes passionate and he becomes a house of the ugly and evil thoughts; and his heart will be in a big war and in disturbance and in agitation. "This is because the impious demons walk around him" (Ps. 11: 8[592]) and they set up to his [591] Here is being ascertained a connection between passions and demons. While God wants us free, for He wants us to love Him and there is not love without freedom, the demons enslave us by passions and giving us the impression that we are free while we actually aren't, because we do not get out form under their mastery as forms of the egotism which are contrary to God. Both the passions and the demons enchant us with the appearance of us doing our own will, in order they to separate us from God. By that, the demons want us to be like them.

[592] In KJB we have: Ps. 12: 8: "The wicked walk on every side, when the vilest men are exalted."; in ROB we have: Ps. 11: 8: "This is because, then when the worthless people raise, the lawless crawl everywhere." (E. l. t.'s n.)

feet a trap intertwines of ropes made of cunning lusts. And the evil ghosts prepare bows and arrows and they wound his heart. A demon shoots arrow at the eye enticing the eye towards lusts, another demon shoots arrows at the hearing enticing it to listen with pleasure to unnecessary things; another shoots arrows at the tongue in order the tongue to speak against others and towards sharping us the anger; another moves the belly towards greediness; another urges the feet to run towards sin; another arouses the body towards debauchery and adultery and laziness; another attracts the body towards strife and envy and spite; another pushes the monk towards hatred and towards sharpening the evil; another advises the monk towards the rich tables and towards the worldly worries; another urges him towards priesthood and to be abbot; and another urges him to visits his brothers, his relatives, and his friends. And to put it shortly: the demons do not cease weakening within the monk who want to live by himself (idiorhythmic) his love for himself in a disobedient manner, and they teach him on many ways the whole craftsmanship, the contrivance, and the plotting, using on this purpose the menaces, the memories, and the flattering. They work these things until the make this man full of worldly cogitation; or is he is by schism among monks, he will be within world with his cogitation; or, if he has the “countenance of the piousness” of the monastic schism, he won’t achieve the power and the work of the virtues in front of God. Such a monk is like a fruitless tree, but adorned with leaves, and not having the fruits of the virtues and of the righteousness. The prayer of such a man is full of laziness and of indifference. Out of his cogitation flows the laziness, his vigil sinks into sleep, his fasting is powerless and lacking of strength. And when he talks to personalities of the world and with rich people, he speaks attentively and with watchfulness, but when he passes to reading his eyes get heavy and he is conquered by sleep. When he kneels, his cogitation wanders outside. When his tongue prays, his heart gets closer to the ground. One like this is persuaded by demons that he has lives rightly and that his ascesis and restraint are pleasant to God, “for lo, you have been delivered from the disturbance and form the worry of the coenobitic community and form the much tiredness and scattering from within it. You no longer judge anybody, neither you speak evil of anyone, nor you get disturbed, nor you are troubled, nor you suffer, nor you are upset by somebody, nor you offend someone, nor you offend anyone, you eat what you like and you drink with pleasure, you sleep without worries, you wake up without speaking-against, you sing unforcedly, you honor everyone and you are honored by everybody". These things and the things similar to these are sown by the devils within the heart of the idiorhythmic monk in order not to allow him cohabit together with other monks.

Abba Isaiah said also: Nothing humiliates the demons and strengthens the soul and enlightens the mind and gives shininess to understanding and cleans the heart, as the confession of the thoughts and as the unveiling of the thought things to the spiritual Fathers. And nothing gladdens the devils more and nothing darkens the mind more and nothing petrifies the heart more and nothing makes the consciences muddier than the hiding of the thoughts does. This is because, when the monk wants to unveil the things which he has done and to unveil his ugly and evil thoughts, the demons get troubled and start sowing within monk's heart thoughts of shame which tell to the monk: "This Oldman is believed of being spiritual, and holy, and clean, and stainless in his life, and you want to bring your condemnation upon yourself and you to become despised by monks and to cause offence? Don't you think at the fact that you will make him to master you and he will laugh at you? This is for he won't keep your secret. And they have been honoring you until now, and they reckoned you as wise and intelligent and sharp in mind and able to discern among things, and you want them to look down at you and the monk and the people from the world to laugh at you[593]? You must postpone your confession. This is for what damage could your thought to do to you? And who is him who doesn't have thoughts? And how comes that somebody else doesn't fear God?". These things are told by demons to him who wants to unveil his thoughts. This is because the demons know that the soul cannot thrive otherwise but by unveiling his thoughts and the monk doesn't fall except by hiding his thoughts up. And that's why the demons plot and wage war to the monks in order the monks not to unveil their thoughts[594].

The same one also said: Many monks by leaving their parents and their sons and their brothers and their friends and their relatives for the love for Christ, they seemed as saints to the people, but to people-Knower God they appeared to be unclean and under damnation, and not because of debauchery and adultery, but because of not guarding their hearts against ugly thoughts and because of not guarding the senses of their soul against ugly and evil meanings. This is because, if you see an idiorhythmic monk, you will be able to confess is that one is whole or spiritual or virtuous or loving-of God, or he is bodily and loving-of-sins and loving-of-pleasures[595]. This is for the monk must restrain himself through all his senses, through his sight, through his hearing, through his smell, through his tongue, through his touch, and through his belly. This is for the monk owes to restrain himself, as it has been said, through all his senses, and he must be above any thought and above any ugly pleasure and above any damaging lust. This is for we owe not only to keep our body clean of and unstained by sin, but we must do so also to our heart and to our mind and to our cogitation and to our conscience. This is for the man is twofold and composed both of soul and body, and that's why the man must have his fight twofold. That's why the bodily ascesis is not enough for us to achieve the loving-of God virtues, but before all we need the humbleness of our soul and the crushing of our heart and the stretched prayer (litany): "This is because out of heart there come evil thoughts, and killings, and adulteries, and robberies, and liar testimonies, and blasphemies" (Mt. 15: 19). That's why, if we keep our body unstained by the touch of a woman but our heart unites with the evil thoughts, we won't benefit anything of that. Everywhere the godlike Scripture, Old and New, it confesses about the cogitation of the heart. First, Psalmist David shouts out: "Sons of men, until when you will be hard in heart?" (Ps. 4: 2[596]). And again: "Their heart is vain" (Ps.

[594] The man needs to unveil his evil and egotistic thoughts, in order him to be able to get rid of them. The man needs somebody else's help and power and judgment. Itself the communication is an act of humbleness and of getting out of the proud trust in oneself.

[595] The idiorhythmic monk cannot be entirely virtuous because even though he is like that with his body, he won't be like that with his soul, once he affirms his own will or once he shows the lack of humble-cogitation.

[596] In the KJB we have: Ps. 4: 2: "O ye sons of men, how long will ye turn my glory into

5: 9[597]). And about them who cogitate the vain-things, he says: "He said in his heart: I won't budge" (Ps. 9: 26[598]). And again: "Because he said in his heart; God has forgotten" (Ibid 31[599]). And again: "Cunning lips in the heart; and within heart he uttered evil things" (Ps. 11: 2[600]). And again: "May the Lord give you according to your heart" (Ps. 19: 5[601]). And again: "The evil things are within their heart. Give them, Lord, according to their deeds" (Ps. 27: 4-5[602]). And he also said: "His heart gathered lawlessness to him" (Ps. 40: 6[603]). And again: "Because in your heart you work lawlessness, on earth" (Ps. 57: 2[604]). And: "With their mouth they were blessing, while with their heart, Lord" (Ps. 107: 1[614]). And: "Let my heart be without blemish int Your commandments, so I not to get ashamed. My soul is melting down for your salvation" (Ps. 118: 80-81[615]). And: "I shouted out in front of You with the whole my heart" (Ps. 118: 145[616]). Everywhere, the mind's thoughts and the heart's reflection are those which crown and condemn the man[617]. So said too the God of the Jew's gathering (of the Synagogue): "Because you haven't taken Me into your cogitation, but you have thrown Me at your back, I too will reject you" (Hez. 22: 35). "The devil, he says, out within Judah's heart (the thought) to sell Jesus" (Jn. 13: 2). "This is because the man looks at the face, but God looks at the heart" (1 Kings[618] 16: 7). "You Who examine the hearts and the entrails, God" (Ps. 7: 9[619]).

The monk owes to understand the purpose of the Scripture: whom is it talking to, and who is the one talking, and what is he talking about and when he speaks and how he speaks. And the monk must impropriate sapiently the fight of the ascesis and he must take heed at the enemy's attacks and he must cross the waves like a helmsman, guide by grace, not deviating from the right-path, by paying attention only to himself and by speaking in quietude (in hesychia) to God, and [617] The heart is not empty. The heart shows its life in good or evil thoughts, by expressing its intentions and its connections with the realities it knows: with the world, and with God. And the heart's thoughts bring to the heart its coronation or its condemnation, even though the heart doesn't succeed to put those thoughts in deeds. Through the heart, or through the heart's cogitation and feeling, it is shown that the man is not alone. These thoughts, if they remained only to the connection with the world they would be from devils, but if the thoughts do not see the world as the ultimate reality, they will be from God, as it will be said in continuation. So, the man is through his heart in connection with the ultimate springs of the good and of the evil. But because the man is the one willingly accepts ones of others of thoughts, the man will be crowned fi he received the good thoughts from God, or the man will be taken to torments if he received the thought of the egotistic pleasure from the world or from the devil.

[618] In KJB we usually call this book as I Samuel. (E. l. t.'s n.)

upheld by a sole thought – that doesn't pass from one to something lese – and by a uncurious mind[620]. This is for the time requires us to be like some helmsmen facing the winds and the storms of the ghosts. This is because we are able to receive both the thoughts of the virtues and of the evilness. And it is said that the master of the passions is the pious and loving-of God thought. So, it is appropriate to us who appease ourselves (to the hesychasts) to discern and to sapiently and with watchfulness separate the virtues from sins, and to discern what virtue we must take care of, when there are present monks and brothers and fathers, and which virtues we must work when we are alone; and which is the first virtue, and which are the second and the third virtue; and which passions is souly and which is bodily; and which virtues the pride steals the mind from and which virtues occurs the vain-glory from, and which virtues springs the wrath (the anger) out of, and which virtues is born the belly's covetousness and the laziness from[621]. We owe to tear down the thoughts and the whole haughtiness that rises against the knowledge of God (2 Cor. 10: 5)[622]. So, we must be clean of the unclean thoughts, especially when we present ourselves to God in prayer. This is because there cannot be together the stench and the god fragrance, or the evil smell with the chrism. He who is mastered by his thoughts he is blinded by them[623]. This is because the images of [620] The monk must pay attention only to himself, namely not to the world's things. But when he is focused only on him and not on the world, he will willy-nilly find God. This is for the monk cannot be only by himself. And if the monk pays attention only to himself, in connection to God, the monk will enjoy quietude, he won't be attracted here by a lust and there by another lust, or worries about a trouble or another, or by a worldly fear or by another. The monk will have within himself only the fear of God and that will provide him with peace.

[621] Out of each virtue there is a danger for a passion to be born, immediately as the man weakens his thought at God and the man rather things at himself, with satisfaction for the virtues which he reckons that he has advanced into, or when a virtue has been brought too far, because of self-trust: for instance, out of too much fasting there can be born the belly's covetousness, or out of too much tiredness it can be born the laziness. The humble-cogitation and the measure in everything are two means which protect the virtues from becoming causes of some contrary passions.

[622] Any passion comes out of not knowing God Who is above ourselves and Who protects us from reckoning ourselves as able to achieve the salvation – or the eternal life - by ourselves, namely we must not reckon ourselves as making a sense of our existence by ourselves.

[623] The evil or cunning thoughts do not allow the man to see the existence as it is, namely as having God as its spring and its peak, and God wants us to be kind and to recognize the value of all the people and us to believe into the future life. Those thoughts which God is absent from, they narrow the existence and they lock up the existence in time, and they lock up the

the thoughts produce a consent to them. So, one must remove the first attack (of the thought from within heart) through the pious resistance of the prayer, lest we will be in dialogue with God with our lips but having our heart cogitating at all sorts of things[624]. This is because God doesn't value the disturbed and despising prayer. And those thoughts tending downwards and crawling on earth like some snakes, thoughts dwelling within our heart like in a nest, they kidnap the mind and they make the understanding fall into hallucinations and they disturb the conscience. Those thoughts easily engulf him who listen to them, and they make him fantasize about being him a chief, an army leader, so that he imagines himself having around him soldiers bearing spears, and big multitudes of people and weapons, and himself leading camps and regiments which defeat – at his command – barbarians, and himself sharing honors and gifts in money and distinction, and building cities and bestowing treasuries of money, and appointing chieftains and removing others.

And when he realizes that his mind is attracted in a liar manner to these vain-thoughts and his cogitation is carried away by his fantasies, he passes to the thought that he is inthronized as hierarch of the whole world (ecumenical), and who ordains metropolitans, and who deposes bishops, and who gathers priests, and who sends missionaries, and who bestows titles of archimandrites, and who appoints others, and who build up churches, and who found coenobitic monasteries, and who erects old people asylums, and who prepared host houses and hospitals, and who clothes up orphans, and who defends widows, and he sees himself the chief doctor of all of these and offering his medical services as a gift and healing everybody[625]. Such thoughts, and many similar ones, by attracting his mind and by nourishing his rationality with a vain-cogitation, they make nesting within his limbs the devils of the debauchery, of the lust for foods, and of the desire for priestly vestments and for the glory of hegumen. Those makes his heart callous and man in reasonings that he has only a short temporary life. They make the man blind to the infinite, eternal, and meaningful existence.

[624] We must not speak with our lips while praying and us having, in the same time, our heart thinking at all the things coming into it in a tempting manner.

[625] All these images show us that the present writing was composed during a period when the Church reached a developed organization, so, this writing should be dates at least in the Century V.

they fill up his heart with the illness of the love for money, with the daring of the vain-glory, and they shoot at his heart the arrow of the pride, and they blind up the eyes of his heart, and they agitate the movement of his body, and the entice the feelings of his soul and of his body towards having sex with women, by igniting his body and by throwing him through the leaking of his seed into the pit of the debauchery with his mind and to the caressing movement of his hands, reminding him about the discussions he had with women and with young men. Those thoughts depict to him beautiful faces in his heart, and touching of hands, and hugging of bodies, and union of limbs, and passionate words, and charming laughter, and the consent by eyes, and the color of the bodies, and mating of lips, and tempting discussions, and the imagining of the movements. The indulges himself to these thoughts. But one must know also this: that the heart speaks with the lips, because as the heart has eyes, likewise it has lips too. And witness to this is the Apostle who says: "We have enlightened the eyes of our heart" (Eph. 1: 18). And everywhere the godlike Scripture asks us to guard the senses of our soul. This is because, if the will of the monk obeys the law of God and if the monk's mind rules all the things submitted to it according to God's law, through all the souly movements and especially through wrath and lust, for these ones are submitted to the rationality, there will be worked the virtue and it will be fulfilled the righteousness. The lust is directed towards God and towards His wills, and the wrath is directed against the devil and against the sin. So, what it is searched for? The hidden reflection. This is what the Apostle says too: "I sing with my ghost, but I sing with my mind" (1 Cor. 14: 15). This is for, if I pray with my tongue, my ghost prays and my mind of fruitless… I will pray with my ghost, but I will pray with my mind too" (1 Cor. 14: 14-15)[626]. And: "I want better to utter five words with my mind than tens of thousands of words with my tongue" (1 Cor. 14: 19)[627].

Something else is the leading part, something else is the seeing (contemplative) part, else is the doing part, else is the wrath, else is the lusting part, else is [626] When I pray with my tongue I must pray with my ghost too. But then I pray with my mind too. But by praying, the mind doesn't produce its own thoughts; the mind remains fruitless of such thoughts. The mind too will bestow itself to God.

[627] The mind doesn't' tell many words when praying, for it is better not to scatter itself in many thoughts. That's why neither the tongue's words must be many.

the mastering part, else is the fearing part, else is the reminding part, else is the loving part, else is the science, else is the learning from science, else is the feeling, else is the understanding, else is the cogitation and the knowledge, else is the wisdom, and else is the passion[628]. The passion is the desire of the desiring power, with the feeling directed towards cogitating the good and the bad. And again, the passion of the soul is irrationally directed towards imagining the good and the bad. Imagining the good moves the lust, while imagining the evil moves the wrath[629]. The monk must know that his souls have twofold powers: some of them are knower powers, while some others are life powers. The knowing powers are: the opinion, the imagination, and the feeling[630]. This which the life is manifested by are the will and the choosing. Through feeling there occur within soul the passion that is amazed into imagining (fantasy), and out of imagining there is born the opinion. Then, the cogitation examines the opinion whether is true or liar, and it established the truth, and by that the cogitation becomes discernment. That's why the understanding too it comes from understanding and from discerning the truth. And that what is distinguished and established as a truth, it is called as mind. IN another way one knows that the first movement of the mind is called as cogitation, and cogitating at something it brings the understanding, and the understanding has the meaning as its content, and the meaning expresses the soul's connection with that what the soul understands, and that is his life. And this is called as reflection. And the widened reflection produces the thought, and the thought is the interior word which we define as the full movement of the soul as interior unuttered dialogue out of which we say that it comes the word uttered with the tongue.

And when God created the man, He created the man as a free being (self-master) and receiving the invitation form good and from evil. And by plating most of the feelings as in a small place, God enthroned over them, as a kind and just emperor, [628] All the sorts of the mind's works have in feeling some kind of organs of theirs.

[629] The lust towards good and towards evil is directed towards those both by cogitation and before or without cogitation. Towards the good the soul is moved especially by lust, while towards the evil the soul is moved by lust and anger.

[630] At their turn, the opinion and the imagination claim having a role in knowledge, even though they do not know the true reality. The feeling too is in a relationship with the reality that differs from its subject.

the leading mind. So, these ones are judged within us as virtue and evilness, and as restraint and unrestraint, and as belly's covetousness and ascesis, and as wrath and gentleness, and as vain-glory and humble-cogitation and, simply, as the virtue judging the evilness that resists it. So, if the monk's mind condemns the evilness (the sin), that mind will be righteous, and if the monk's mind has been rightly cherishing the virtue, he will have guarded the judgment and the righteousness[631].

So, if we know which are the passions of our soul and of our body and of our heart and of our mind, we3 will be able to easily defeat our thoughts. The pride is a soul's illness, the vain-glory is likewise, and the imagination is likewise too. And all the similar things. These ones belong to our heart. And those of the mind are: the opinion, the hallucination, the stupidity, and the boasting of ourselves. And the blowing into the mirky waves of the evilness come over the understanding and over the conscience, either in order to produce their crowns or shame. And the ugly thoughts make the mind easy to be enslaved and they attracts the mind into a prison and they make the man to imagine himself here as emperor, there as chieftain, here as hierarch over cities and countries, there as master over camps and wealth, here as builder of churches and of monasteries and of guest-houses and of hospitals for ole people, and those thoughts are them hallucinated and transformed by the mind's vanity into the loving-of-glory monks who desire to be pleasant to people and who cogitate at themselves and have within their heart the thought of being great personalities. Such thoughts nest within monks because of the monks' lack of fear and because of their indifference and of their laziness. This is because, when we disregard God's commandments, the sins forgiven to us before they will turn back withing us, and our heart will get cold by the withdrawals of the grace, and there will be immediately sent within our heart the flies of the sin or the cunning and unclean and lowering to the things from bellow thoughts, and those will make dirty our leading mind and they will disturb our heart and our conscience, as the Apostle says too: "You who have dressed yourself up into our Lord Jesus [631] The man doesn't have only knowing functions which he knows the rationality through, or it seems to him that he does it, but the man also has functions which he decides his life through, on the basis of the knowledge functions. We firstly know what is it good of evil, and then we chose between good of evil. The monk must know what is true and good and then to choose that.

Christ, do not take care of your body towards lust, by making the will of your body and of your understanding into the lusts of your hearts, which we were moving ourselves yore" (Eph. 2: 3).

So, he who wants to get rid of the corruptive sin and of the evil lust, let him achieve the fear of God. "The fear of the Lord remains clean forever and ever" (Ps. 18: 10[632]). This is for, he who always thinks at his death and at the eternal fire and at the non-sleeping worm and at the outer darkness and at the unappeased crying and at the gnashing of the teeth and at the shame he will feel in front of the fearsome chair of Christ's Judgment before angels and people, he will melt away the joy of the pleasure and he will turn all his lust towards God. This is for, the cutting off of the own will is like a blood-shedding, and it will be reckoned by God as a sacrifice to that man who doesn't fulfill his own will. And, actually, not fulfilling his own will it is a feat of the wise and virtuous and consummate man. We learn this from Prophet Isaiah, who says: "If you don't do your will on the holy day and if you do not utter angry word and if you trust the Lord, the Lord will feed you with the earth's goods" (Isa. 58: 13). So, one need much struggle and much watchfulness in order his mind to consent with his heart and with his lips at the time of the singing of psalms and at the time of praying, in order us not to anger our Lord instead of serving Him, because of us mixing the incense of our prayers with the calves-stench of our evil thoughts so that the sacrifice of our prayers to be defiled as that of Cain[633]. This is because of being awful and destructive the trust hidden into the unclean thoughts. This is because of out of thoughts there will gradually occur our estrangement from God. This is because when the man consents to them as their author, they are reckoned as his sins[634]. This is because that heart that plots the evil it won't be entered by wisdom, neither God will dwell within our burdened-by-sin body. This is for the twisted thoughts separate us from God, as it is said in the book of Sirach: "It has been placed fire and water in front of you, stretch your hand towards which one you want" (Sirach[635] 15: 16). In front of the man there is the life and there is the death and that what he wants he will be given. This is because him who commits sin within his soul, who will make him righteous if he doesn't fiery tears all the time?

[632] In KJB we have: Ps. 19: 9: "The fear of the Lord is clean, enduring for ever: the judgments of the Lord are true and righteous altogether."; in ROB we have" Ps. 18: 10: "The fear of the Lord is clean, and it lasts forever and ever. The Lord's judgments are true and all of them justified." (E. l. t.'s n.)

[633] Those prayers with we bestow ourselves entirely to God, by forgetting us about ourselves, they are a sacrifice of the burnt-offerings, for we do not mix within those the thoughts of our capacity which we proudly affirm ourselves into, in front of God; we also must not reckon such prayers as a feat of our will. The cutting off of our will is like a spiritual death of ours, it is like a shedding of our blood.

[634] Getting content by thoughts we content ourselves and of our capacity for producing our thoughts, so that we boast ourselves in front of God. Those thoughts are mixed like a stench within the good fragrance of our prayer which should be our total sacrifice brought to God.

F. 202 b. – 203 b. Abba Isaias said that the monk's mind is the throne of God, the monk's mouth is the table of Christ, the monk's heart is the church of the Holy Ghost, the monk's thoughts are God's weapons and spearmen, the monk's soul is God's soldier, the monk's body is God's slave, the monk's senses are the windows of God's church, the monk's understanding is the gate and his conscience is the gateman[636]. So, if the man allows his mind to wander outside him away at the time of the prayer, and if he allows his tongue to speak inappropriate things and if he allows his church to receive the God's enemies inside, and if he opens his church's windows so that crows and ravens enter it, and if the allows his spearmen to be indifferent to people who enter and who go out, and if the allows his soldier to take a nap, and if he allows his slave to sleep, and if he allows the devil and the God's enemies to unimpededly enter God's church and to go out, with disturbance and much noise and if he allows them to make of God's house for stinky garbage, how won't God punish such a monk in the present age and in the age to come? This is because of such a monk not being either a son, in order to inherit God's goods or a friend in order the monk to be listened to by God, neither is such a monk a slave in order him to be set free. So, the monk owes to enter his soul in order him to find out and to judge and to examine and to whip and to banish away from his mind the ugly and evil thoughts which are: playful, charming, hunting, communicative, and killer. This is because within the soul too there are noises caused by evil thoughts, and there are too cities of the evils and of the enemy powers.

[636] By all the said things the man has been given an untold honor, but he has also been given and untold responsibility. This is because the man must keep all his things clean in order him to be able to have God within them.

If we do not humanly clean up the ways and the disturbances and the confusions caused by our evil thoughts, we will strive vainly. So, when we kneel and ask for something and for praying to God, let's take heed lest the evil one has stolen our good vessels which we serve God with. And the soul's vessels which we serve God with are our thoughts. If these thoughts of ours are kidnapped by our enemies, which we will serve God with? God doesn't' need your body and your tongue to pray while your thoughts wander outside. It is the will of God that our thoughts and our mind and our cogitation and all our strength to be directed to God in an undivided manner and, in this case, God won't be separated from us. This is for God is with us in an unseen manner, and He looks at our mind and at our understanding and at our thoughts, and He sees us as we are searching for Him and as we fight our ugly and evil thoughts and as we wage war to the cunning meanings; if we sing with the whole our soul, we will pray with the whole our soul. This is for, if we especially and assertively and sapiently and with watchfulness stand to prayer, God will immediately banish our enemies away from us, and He will crown us. This is for God sees us directed in all ways through our thoughts towards searching for Him, and He will show Himself to us and He will strengthen us and He enlightens our soul and he dresses up our soul with an untold and desired beauty. And thus, He bestows us His help and the whole victory and He gets us rid of our unseen enemies. But if God sees us being lazy and hesitant and indifferent and praying while having a drowsy mind, he will take away His help from us and we will become like a shiv at sea without a helmsman and ceaselessly pounded by the temptations' waves and we will shake like a reed blows by any wind.

And he said also: If you want to get rid of your unclean dreams and of your hallucinations and of the ugly influences coming from the devils, you won't give yourself to the sleep forbidden by the canon of the taking-of-vigil. This is for, in this way, your mind will be enlightened and it will shine to you the light cogitated within your heart and the demons – the angels of the darkness – they will run away from you weeping a crying out, and the holy angel remaining next to you will extoll you and he will empower you against the sinful passions[637].

On the Holy Easter - 1991

[637] The whole thinking of the spiritual Fathers of the Christendom is personalistic. The Person-like God, the angels as persons, the demons as persons, all of them stay around us a work upon us on diverse ways. From persons there come to us the eternal joys and the eternal torments. And we, only as conscious persons, we live those consciously. Otherwise, there won't exist either real joys or real pains, and the whole existence would lose any meaning being the whole of it blind and lacking of rationality.
